God does not always deliver us from pain and suffering, but He does deliver us in the things which trouble; and this, after all, is a higher deliverance, and always calls forth the triumphant song which broke Paul's heart. God has larger ways of answering our prayers and fulfilling our hopes than we can ourselves suggest to Him. He can transform the thorn-pain into the triumph-song, and make an unremoved infirmity a channel of unimagined inspiration. Weakness gives God His opportunity.—J. Stuart Holden.

"IN HOC SIGNO VINCES"

The Revelation of the Bible is Complete :: Its Doctrines are Immutable :: Its Truth is Invincible :: And its Authority is Absolute :: :: ::

WHO THE LORD REALLY IS

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in timpast unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last daye spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholds ing all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."—Heb. 1.

"For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—2 Peter 1:17.

"For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in Him, which is the head of all principality and power."—Col. 2:9, 10.

"And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross," "that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man."

"Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow."—Phil. 2; Heb. 2.

O precious God, what matchless grace,
What love for us He bore,
When thou didst send thine only Son,
That we might live, for evermore.

The Voice of the Spirit.

How is it possible for God to convey a thought to a human mind? It is a mystery, a profound mystery; just as mysterious as listening to a friend. There is no greater logical difficulty in communication from God than there is between humans. Only a dullness of imagination makes it appear difficult. The invisible alchemy by which a thought in one human mind transforms itself into physical terms, and travels to another human mind, there by some hidden alchemy to be retransformed into thought again, is a formula that human wisdom has not yet read. There is nothing more mysterious in that God's Spirit should stimulate my thought in His own chosen way, than that my friend should do the same thing in His own chosen way. In either case, I react in the same manner. What I really hear of my friend's thought is partly what he says, partly how my mind colors his words with my own ideas; yet at heart it is his thought I am perceiving. So with the Spirit, I really hear the ideas of the Spirit; but I perceive them in terms of my own mental furniture. We will begin to probe the mystery of divine leading, when we begin to solve the every-day mystery of human conversation.—The Rev. Garrett Stearly.

The Streets of Nazareth.

When I am tempted to repine
That such a lowly lot is mine,
There comes a voice to me which saith,
"Mine were the streets of Nazareth".

So mean, so common, and confined,
And He the Monarch of mankind!
Yet patiently He traveleth
The narrow ways of Nazareth.

It may be I shall never rise
To place of fame beneath the skies—
But walk in straitened ways till death,
Narrow as streets of Nazareth.

But if through Honor's arch I tread
And there forget to bend my head,
Ah! Let me hear the voice which saith,
"Mine were the streets of Nazareth".
—Nettie Rooker.

Tertullian told in the early centuries of "the human soul which is naturally Christian"; by which he meant that between the constitution and destiny of the human soul and the religion that we have in Christ there is a natural affinity and a mutual adaptation.—Wm. Newton Clarke.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Heaven is full of redeemed failures.—The Methodist Protestant.

A good housekeeper must be unselfish.

No Christian can do without private prayer and devout reading of the Scriptures.

There is no way of learning faith except by trial.—Record of Christian Work.

Every home may be a vestibule of heaven, because the Lord dwells there. —A. C. Dixon.

"There is no worse fate for a man in this life than to be compelled to live with a self that he does not respect."

He gave wise counsel who urged watchfulness over temper before ten o'clock in the morning.

The pure memories given
To help our joy on earth, when earth is past,
Shall help our joy in heaven.

We would leave, O God, to Thee,
Every anxious care and fear;
Thou the troubled thought can see,
Thou canst dry the bitter tear.

On this faith we fain would rest;
Strengthen Thou its blessed power!
Steadfast keep it in our breast,
Through each dark and trying hour.
—Gaskell.

Swiftly flowing water does not freeze. If God's grace has really touched our inner life and opened up new wells of desire, new hopes and aims and ambitions, these must be kept in action if they are not to be weakened, or lost altogether.

God can afford to wait; why cannot we, since we have Him to fall back upon? Let patience have her perfect work, and bring forth her celestial fruits. Trust God to weave your little thread into the great web, though the pattern shows it not yet.—George Macdonald.

Knowest thou Him who forgave much
The crown of thorns round His temples?
Earnestly prayed for His foes, for His murderers?
Say, dost thou know Him?
Ah, thou confessest His name, so follow likewise His Example,
Think of thy brother no ill.
—H. W. Longfellow.

Browning's poem suggests that one of the robbers crucified by the side of Jesus was among those who heard the Lord utter the great invitation of Matthew 11:28. "The face was weary; yet He spoke of giving rest—He needed rest I think—yet patiently He stood and spoke to those who gathered around him, and He turned and looked on me." The point of the story is that he who suffered by the side of Jesus proved the truth of His saying, and found Him able to make good His word.

SUPERIORITY

"Know Thyself." In the two words are endless volumes of wise advice which most of us are too lazy or cowardly to heed. One of the glorious blessings of life for which we forget to be grateful is the struggle and suffering required to do right and be sensible. The similarity of needs for health and strength for our physical systems and our spiritual and mental systems is obvious. The three act and react on each other, all parts of the same intricate and wonderful machinery. Self-denial, self-restraint on food and drink, exertion, training, are necessary to keep our bodies fit and healthy. If we desire to be uncommonly strong or swift or skilled in use of limbs or members, we must endure pain, subdue appetites, overcome indolence and be clean, inside and out. If everybody could be assured of long life, health and strength while gratifying every craving and desire, all of us would be gluttons and idlers, advancement would halt and civilization would vanish because souls and minds and wills would die for lack of use. If we could get wisdom by small effort and beauty, purity and excellence of life with slight striving, wisdom and virtue would no more be esteemed or sought. We honor a good or brave man because we know he has conquered powerful natural instincts.

When we undertake earnestly to know ourselves we find ourselves in a fight. Analyzing and examining, weighing and measuring, our own motives, histories, limitations, successes and failure, good deeds and evil, is painfu and distressing work. Women who paint and dye and undergo torments to better their looks are more courageous than the average man who undertakes self examination. Foolish and futile as their attempts at concealment and cure may be, they face their own defects and blemishes frankly and endeavor to hide them from the observation of others. The average man too often puts on the paint and dye to hide himself from himself and deceive himself; and too frequently succeeds perfectly. Probably Iscariot convinced himself before his crime that he was doing a laudable and public-spirited act and when he tendered back the thirty pieces of silver felt that he had cleared himself of blame. To this day we confront the incisive indictments of conscience with brazen plea of "not guilty", flout the teaching of wisdom, defy experience and proceed to soothe and congratulate instead of hanging ourselves.

Yet most of us are delivered from the worst results of that sense of superiority—"superiority complex" as it is called in scientific jargon—which comes from superficial self-examination guided by self-glorification and admiration, indolence and cowardice. It is a natural malady of youth. It causes boys to run away from home, self-persuaded of their superiority to the surroundings. It afflicts the young when intellect is beginning to bud and is especially cirulent when there have been primary successes and honors at school or college. Unhappily, it fastens frequently on minds naturally active and receptive and capable of usefulness. The great majority of victims are saved by merciful hard knocks and encounters with kindly cruel facts. In every generation and nearly every community, however, are some who never recover. Men and women equipped by nature to be valuable, in one sphere or another, are made useless fools, occasionally lunatics; for delusions of superiority develop consistently to the delusions of grandeur which land patients in asylums. Those who avoid that fate become, usually, pitiful and nuisances. Writers producing barely mediocre prose or verse sneer at Shakespeare as crude and overrated. Men unable to operate successfully a peanut stand at a county fair deride Mr. Rockefeller and Judge Gary as mere accidents of fortune. Lawyers failing to obtain the respect of judges or confidence of clients demonstrate the errors of Littleton, Coke, John Marshall and the supreme courts. Persons of both sexes who never have made two blades of grass grow where one grew criticize scornfully the plan of creation the conduct of the universe and the ordinances of the Almighty and tell any who will listen how much better they could have done it all. Men and women, sure of ther superiority to parental authority and knowledge and the restraints and traditions of business and society, go forth boastfully to "live their own lives" and end obscure and secretly insubordinate subordinates, abnormally sensitive, believing firmly the world and fate to be in treacherous conspiracy to suppress their merits; or sink to more shamefully disaster.

Youth of rebuff and disappointment, early disappearance or age of sourness and bitterness, because mankind refuses to accept them at their own valuation, are inevitable consequences of chronic sense of superiority. Those who have done the really great things for the good of the world have been of humble spirit. Those who intend to make their lives worth while must be likewise. "Know thyself" is the hard way to freedom from the superiority complex and to real success with soul, mind and body; but it is the only way.

Alfred B. Williams.

THEY SHALL NOT PASS

History has hinged on some strategic battles. Charles Martel at Tours turned back the Asiatic hordes and saved Europe from the reign of the Koran. In the late World War, the cause of the Allies hung by a thread. When pressed to the breaking point, General Joffre summoned his troops to screw their courage to the sticking point, and resolutely dug in to resist the German Army with the words: "They shall not pass."

To apply such words to the Anglo-Catholic propaganda seems perhaps uncharitable and like an exaggeration of the existing conditions. We have no desire to be controversial; we write in no spirit of rancor or bitterness. We can say to those in the Catholic camp: "We could not love thee half so well loved we not honor more." The question is not one of ritual merely, of a preferred taste for ornate as against a simplified service. It is rather a well-directed propaganda to strike a blow at the Reformation settlement, that would de-protestantize the Episcopal Church.

It has been said that the present time is more revolutionary and important in its far-reaching consequence than the Reformation. There is little doubt but that we are passing through some similar crisis. A comparison of the two is of value. Both were born of the reaction against the intolerable subjugation of man's heart and conscience to false authority. Then feudalism had pressed its crown of thorns upon the head of the people for centuries. Priestcraft held them in a yoke of bondage to the hierarchy, shutting out the light of God's Word, while the world slumbered in darkness. The Reformation brought the truth to people by appealing directly to the Word of God. The freedom sought was that from false doctrine and from exactions of a despotic hierarchy. Today we are seeking freedom; a struggle of arms for freedom from a rule of frightfulness such as staggered the world. There are, however, subtleties and sophistries connected with the appeal for religious freedom that require a vigilant eye. At the Reformation truth was put forth in carefully worded propositions designed to protect it from error. Now the reverse is the case and the main effort is to break down all confining measures. One reason for this is that many so-called truth seekers have set up some abode of a new discovery only to find later their position untenable and themselves forced to retreat to another line of defense. Hence the shifting theories of the modern apostles of freedom require that fences be down and that they be allowed to become "roaming Catholics". Further the effort to establish truth is not by appeal to the authority of Scripture. Instead the authority often is in the man, and so dialectics are called in to remove the trouble—some authority. Therefore, to be in line with present-day thought there must be no anchorage, no stand taken, but a carefree drifting, blown about by every wind of vain doctrine, and if it blows steadily in one direction we must, like Paul in his ill-fated ship, "let her drive". The precious repositories of truth enshrined in terms that have stood the test have been, as was said of the empty tomb, taken away and we know not where they have laid them. The times are fluid—we must hold nothing firmly and definitely. Go with the procession and believe in the upward ascent of all men regardless of what the Bible says. It is this illusoriness and nebular condition of things that is a call to the people of God to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints". Yielding to the movement of the times in this respect ,there has been a marked tendency in the Episcopal Church which has now assumed proportions that no honest man can view without great searchings of heart. If we asked the question, what does the Episcopal Church teach, that is as it is being taught, what impression does it make upon an outsider? The answer would be like the description of the elephant given by four blind men, each of whom caught hold of a different part of his body. There are in the Church men who teach that there are seven sacraments, though the Prayer Book and those loyal to it teach that there are but two. There are men who will not allow any save confirmed persons to come to the Lord's Supper. There are others who invite Christians of other names to come. There are those who teach apostolic succession and affirm that the episcopate is necessary to the esse of the Church. There are others who deny both of these assertions. There are those who practically jettison the Thirty-nine Articles regarding them as the forty stripes save one and who eliminate the word protestant from the title page of the Prayer Book and speak of the denominations as "protestant friends". Whereas others hold firmly the articles and continue to look upon many of them as the bulwark against the errors of Rome in the sixteenth century as well as now. Were all loyal to the Prayer Book there could be no doubt as to where we stand. But there seems to be "no king in Israel, every man does that which is right in his own eyes". As a consequence confusion reigns and there is teaching based on unwarrantable assumptions and so diverse from that which is drawn purely from the Word of God that it is impossible for both to claim the same ground of authority. It is well asked, is the Episcopal Church Protestant or Catholic? Is it evangelical or sacerdotal? What does it really stand for?

These are days of covenants—the balancing of power by diplomacy. Thus jockeying for position, powers have watched for the moment to strike for their own advantage and wars have resulted. An international conscience is endeavoring to do away with this in an alliance based on covenant obligations. It is the reduction of the loose ends of diplomatic jugglery to fixed and definite standards. The time has come in the Church when variegated theological interests maneuvering for position, must be subjected to the touchstone of a fixed, definite statement of belief. If the cry of too much rigidity is heard, let it be remembered that it is thus that all institutions stand. Rigidity is the law of the army. Without it the Church forgets its militant character. While men slept tares were sown. The Church of God has a sleeping sickness that is oblivious to the tares of error sown and growing and destined if unchecked to change the character of the Church. The present article is a call to arms. "The lion hath roared, who will not fear? The Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophecy?" The Oxford Movement sowed seeds which have grown to alarming proportions. Ceremonialism was at one time feared by many and vigorously opposed. Then came a spirit of tolerance born of indifference and grounded on the supposition that such things did not impair any doctrinal statement and were of small consequence. Little by little the opposition gave way. Strong aversion changed to submission and finally acquiescence. While busy here and there, the leaven of sacerdotalism has been working. While there has been a state of passive inaction on the part of former evangelical champions there has sprung into existence a party. It has worked quietly, by religious press, and tracts, the propaganda has been at work and a sleepy Church rubs its eyes to find that despising the day of small things, a little extra form here, altar lights there, eucharistic vestments in another, we awake to find the faith once delivered in danger of being supplanted entirely. It does not require an astute mind to see that a crisis is approaching in the Church.

Judge Marsilliot has rendered the Church a great service in his splendid appeal to the laymen of the Church under the none too strong caption: "Shall the Protestant Episcopal Church Be Destroyed?" We do hope that this booklet* will have a wide reading.

This Romeward drift is no fanciful dream Bishop Harris, of Marquette, says: "For thirty years I have watched this Romanizing process working within the Protestant Episcopal Church." And he further adds of Judge Marsilliot's book that it is a convincing and courageous piece of work.

There is no time to be lost. To those who would preserve the faith of our fathers, we say strongly read this pamphlet. The situation calls for earnest prayer and active work to defeat the efforts to take the Thirty-nine Articles from the Prayer Book. Shall we sit still and see the principles of the Reformation undermined? Shall we repudiate the heritage bought by the blood of our fathers?

The situation calls for resolute determination to say to those who would change the faith of this Church: "They shall not pass!" This is no more than Paul said to the legalizers in Galatians 2:4-5: "And that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage:

"To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might continue with you."

Our liberty of faith is as much jeopardized as were the free institutions of the world in the World War. For we quote Judge Marsilliot:

"As aptly stated in a recent letter by an able Professor of an Eastern University, 'Unless vigorous measures are adopted, the Episcopal Church, as we have known it, is doomed'.

"May Almighty God, who inspired and sustained the immortal leaders of the Reformation, grant to every loyal member of the Church the courage to stand firm in the faith of our forefathers and a steadfast determination that, through prayer and organized effort, there may be preserved to us and to the generations to come the glorious liberty, won at the Reformation by untold sacrifice of blood and treasure, wherewith Christ hath made us free from darkness, superstition and sacerdotal oppression."

PRAYER BOOK REVISION

By the Reverend Edward McCrady, D. D.

IT is not the purpose of this article to enter at length into the subject of Prayer Book revision. The writer has already reviewed the principal problems involved, in a pamphlet issued by the Evangelical Society some years ago. It is here desired only to call attention to one or two phases of the subject which however persistently ignored hitherto, must inevitably be faced by the Church when the proposed Revision is finally adopted, and the New Prayer Book forced upon an unwilling minority. It is acknowledged by both parties to the controversy that the existing Prayer Book, which has come down practically unchanged from the days of Elizabeth, is filled with Reformation ideas and Protestant doctrines. It is acknowledged to be the work of the Anglican Reformers of the Sixteenth Century who were openly "protestant" toward all those teachings of Romanism and Mediaevalism which could not justify themselves in the light of Scripture and the practice of the early undivided Church, and which, therefore, in their opinion, were "un-catholic" in the true sense of that word. It is acknowledged that among these "uncatholic" teachings the Anglican Reformers particularly objected to the doctrine of the Mass, and carefully and laboriously eliminated from their Communion Office all those phrases and expressions which tended to emphasize this interpretation. It is acknowledged that they not only repudiated Transubstantiation, and all the beliefs and practices logically associated therewith, but they prohibited all invocation of the Virgin and other Saints, and erased from the calendar the long list of Holy Days specially set apart for that purpose. It is acknowledged that they did away with the practice of Auricular Confession, Masses for the Dead, Prayers for the Repose of Souls in Purgatory, and numbers of other things which were characteristic of Romanism. It is acknowledged that the first attempts of the Reformers to eradicate these errors were incomplete, and brought to an abrupt termination by the accession of Mary, and the re-establishment of Romanism and the Papal Authority in England. It is acknowledged, however, that with the coming of Elizabeth, Romanism was once more banished, and the Anglican Reformers finally succeeded in embodying their protestant views and teachings in the Prayer Book of 1559. It is acknowledged that this protestant Prayer Book of Elizabeth continued to be the official formulary of the Church of England until the Restoration in 1662, and the Archbishop Laud himself defended its teachings as representing "the true Protestant Religion established in the Church of England". It is further acknowledged that this "true Protestant Religion" was changed in no particular at the time of the Restoration, the Revisers of 1662 expressly stating, in the Preface to their new Prayer Book, that they had not dealt with doctrinal matters, and had no intention of departing in any particular from the doctrinal position of the former book which they continued to recognize as authoritative. It is again acknowledged that (in the words of our own Bishop Seymour) this "Revision of 1662 may be justly called the last, because no changes of any moment have been made since by the orders-in-council; which have necessarily been issued, on the accession of successive foreigners —and by the Amendment to the Act of Uniformity passed in the reign of Queen Victoria. The Church of 1662, therefore, has been from that date and is today the ecclesia docens of England" (Stevens, Genesis of the American Prayer Book, Pp. 67, 68). It must again be acknowledged that as late as 1828 her loyalty to this "Protestant Religion" was formally re-asserted in the act of union with Ireland, the united Church being there designated "the Protestant Episcopal Church of England and Ireland", and that still again, in 1833, the attempts of the Tractarians to de-protestantize the Church were officially repudiated—the Church refusing to recognize their propaganda—and the entire movement being "condemned by Authority".

Finally, it must again be acknowledged that when the American branch of the Church of England was independently organized in 1789, she officially proclaimed that she was "far from intending to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline, or worship," and that it was the basis of this explicit profession of loyalty to this "Protestant Religion established in the Church of England", backed by the further voluntary adoption of the name "The Protestant Episcopal Church" as her official title, that the Church of England agreed to confer the Episcopate, and has ever since recognized our communion as a daughter Church.

With these well known historic facts staring us in the face—with the very words "Protestant Episcopal Church" blazing on the title page of her Prayer Book, and certifying every official act of this communion, it is simply preposterous for any man to deny that this Church is now, and has always been a Protestant Church—standing for protestant beliefs and practices, and it is not only a difficult, but an absurdly impossible task for any individual, or Convention of individuals, to think that they can reconstruct her entire historic formulary along the lines of that very Roman model which she so emphatically rejected at the time of the Reformation—re-introducing verbatim et literatim into her Communion Office many of the very phrases and expressions of that Roman Mass which she had so carefully and laboriously eradicated therefrom—and still continue logically and consistently to write "Protestant" on her title-pages, and vehemently contend that in this wholesale reconstruction of her Liturgy and other Offices to conform to Roman usage and beliefs, she has not departed one iota from the doctrine, discipline and worship she has always hitherto professed, but is still loyal to that "true Protestant Religion established in the Church of England" by the Anglican Reformers. To undo all the work which the Anglican Reformers accomplished—to put back again into the Liturgy the questionable words and phrases of the Roman Formula, which they intentionally removed—to re-introduce the long calendar of Saints Days which they purposely excluded—to provide a special Collect, Epistle, and Gospel which can hardly be used except in connection with the Roman rite of Masses for the Dead, which they so vehemently denounced; to scatter everywhere as seeds of future heresy many veiled allusions to the Doctrine of Purgatory, suggestive passages relating to the repose of the Souls of the dead, etc.—all of which they so emphatically condemned; to so change the wording of various Offices expressly designed to safeguard Protestant principles, as to permit—even where they do not actually advocate—Roman practices of various kinds—to do all these things and simultaneously declare that we are in no way antagonizing the views of our Protestant forefathers and Reformers—in no way departing from our well-known historic traditions and beliefs—and that, in accordance with the original "Resolution of 1913", we have not, in this proposed Revision, dealt with any "proposition involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church"—even when we are considering the further possibility of doing away with the Thirty-Nine Artcles—all this is too preposterous to merit serious consideration. Is there any one so foolish as to suppose that if the Anglican Reformers were alive today they would countenance these proposed alterations, and endorse this Revised Prayed Book as a valid expression of their Protestant Faith and opinions—the changes introduced being matters of secondary importance for expediency only—merely a new dress placed upon the same old Protestant Principles to render our Prayer Book more effective under the changed conditions of modern life? We may tell that to the marines. Is it not the very boast of those who are most interested in the Revision that it strikes at the root of this despised Protestantism; and that it is their express purpose to continue the fight until they have finally righted "the mistakes of the Reformation"—repealed the Articles of Belief, and changed the Name of the Church.

But this is not all. The writer not only opposes the present Revision on the ground that it is anti-Protestant in spirit, and so a plain repudiation of the historic, doctrinal position of this Church—a clear renunciation of that "true Protestant Religion established by the Church of England", which this Church solemnly swore to defend, and uphold when she received the Episcopate from the hands of the Mother Church, and proclaimed to the world her official title—"The Protestant Episcopal Church; but he likewise opposes it because of the equally dangerous bearing of many of the proposed alterations upon many historic Doctrines of the Universal Church. There is, indeed, no formal repudiation of any portion of the Historic Faith, but the careful elimination of various passages more or less inculcating certain of these historic doctrines—nay, more! The wholesale alteration of certain Offices so as to suppress altogether the formal teaching or expression of some of these truths—so rendering the Church's real position on many of these matters uncertain and obscure—and at the same time, enabling those who will, to teach pretty much anything they please on these subjects—all this is dangerous in the extreme. Unfortunately, the possibilities which here emerge in consequence of this uncalled for weakening of the Church's attitude toward a definite Theology are too many and too far reaching to be discussed here. We can only say that it involves a humiliating and altogether unnecessary surrender to the spirit of an unspiritual, materialistic age which, with all its boasted pretentions to higher learning and education, has, in reality, passed its zenith of healthy philosophical generalization and a balanced view of life and its problems, and now in its senescence, through over-specialization and dissociation, is hastening to intellectual dissolution and death. If there is anything divine in the Church, she is here to direct and mould the times—not cowardly to yield to them. The sooner we realize that the age in which we are living is not a progressive, but a decadent one, the better. No era of Infidelity and Materialism has ever been a sane and progressive one, and whenever men lose their interest in Theology and Philosophy, and abandoning all faith in the transcendental and miraculous elements in their Religion, attempt to confine its application to the practical affairs of this life only—valuing it only for the improvement it may effect in the material condition of this life—they are doomed. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." We repeat—we are by no means insinuating that there has been any formal denial of these fundamental principles in any of the proposed revisions (indeed, the whole spirit of the alterations is negative, rather than positive—the spirit of omission rather than of affirmation in matters of this kind), but the hand of Modernism is everywhere apparent. In saying this we have no desire whatever to commit the Church to the ignorance and slavish traditionalism of what is mis-called "Fundamentalism", but God save us from its antithesis—the shallow, unphilosophical "Modernism" that thinks it must deny the Faith in order to attain to learning and scholarship. The truth is that after sleeping through all the controversy between Science and Religion which has been going on for the past six decades, as well as all the speculations of the so-called Higher Criticism, Rationalism and Freethought which has been going on for a still longer period, some of our clergy and laity are just waking up to the significance of these things in their bearing upon Theology and the Historic Faith, and actually think they have made a discovery—aye, a discovery of such far-reaching importance that unless a wholesale and radical reconstruction of all our theological formulas is immediately undertaken, and the Faith brought into line with the dictates of modern thought, all is lost—Christianity is gone forever. It is all too pitiful for further comment. We can only repeat what we have already said. If there is anything divine in Christianity at all, its principles are "the same yesterday, today, and forever", under all the changing conditions of time and environment, and the Church's business is to direct and mould the thought of the age, not to drift helplessly with it, trimming its sails to every changing wind of new thought and opinion. If the fundamental Faith of the Church cannot stand this test, there is no use to try and remodel our formularies. On the contrary, there is nothing divine in them, and the sooner we abandon the Church altogether, the better. But there is no need of such scepticism; we know that our principles are eternal, and under such conditions it is only a humiliating confession of faithlessness that would prune and emasculate these formularies until they express little more than solemn nothingness.

Of course we have been speaking here more particularly of the spirit of the Revision rather than of its actual accomplishments. Many of the proposals, both along the line of what might be termed "Modernism", as well as in the direction of Romanism have as yet failed to receive authoritative recognition. It is impossible to tell, therefore, just what the ultimate result will be, and how far the final changes will affect those fundamental convictions of duty to God and one's own conscience which must necessarily take precedence of all other considerations. Humiliating as the concessions to "Modernism" may yet prove, it is unlikely that they will reach such a crisis, but the extent to which the Romanizing movement in the Church may be carried, gives cause for serious apprehension. If it has already reached that point of absurdity where it appears to be regarded as a crime for a man to call himself a Protestant in a Protestant Church (remember our title—"The Protestant Episcopal Church")—no one can safely predict what may or may not happen. For our own part, at the time of our Ordination we swore obedience to the Protestant Episcopal Church, and it is to this "Protestant Episcopal Church" that we owe allegiance today, and to no other. It was her protestant interpretation of Catholic Truth—as set forth in her Prayer Book, Articles, and other formularies—that we then formally promised to defend; it was to "minister" . . the Doctrines and Sacraments, and the Discipline of Christ, as the Lord hath commanded, and as this (Protestant Episcopal) Church hath received the same" that we then agreed. For thirty-five years we have continued faithfully to perform these vows and pledges. If the Church should now repudiate her Protestant Name and heritage—should no longer administer her Sacraments according to that protestant interpretation she has ever placed upon them—should now abandon that Protestant Doctrine and Discipline that has ever distinguished her in the past—in short, repudiate her entire historic teaching—that, indeed, would be a sad day for us; but we would not hesitate a moment as to what our duty would be in such a crisis—we should continue to stand loyal to our Ordination Vows. It is not we who will then be leaving the Church, but the Church which will then be leaving us. All we ask is the privilege of being allowed to remain loyal to our Ordination vows, and to worship as we have always worshipped in the past.

Now can I cease to pray for thee—
Somewhere in God's great universe thou art today.
Can He not reach thee with His tender care?
Can He not hear me when for thee I pray?
What matters it to Him who holds
Within the hollow of his hand all worlds, all space,
That thou art done with earthly care or sin?
Somewhere within His ken thou hast a place;
Somewhere thou livest and hast need of Him;
Somewhere thy soul sees higher heights to climb;
And somewhere there may be valleys dim
That thou must pass to reach the hills sublime.
Then all the more that thou canst not hear
Poor human words of blessing, will I pray
O true, brave heart, God bless thee whersoe'er
In His great universe thou art today.

FOR GOD AND HUMANITY

A WORLD CONFERENCE

By Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

WHAT seems to me the most significant event in the history of the Christian Church since the Reformation, if indeed not in the whole life of the Church since the earliest days, was the World Conference on Faith and Order (Christian Unity), at Lausanne, Switzerland, August 3 to 21. Lausanne is an ideal and beautifully fitting setting for such a conference. Set like a great jewel on the crescent of that great inland mirror of nature, Lake Geneva, Lausanne furnishes picturesque, colorful and romantic environment which seemed indeed spiritual and mystical of themselves. Such beauty! Such atmosphere! Such mountain glory and inspiration!

The Lausanne Cathedral, set like a light upon a hill, and the famous Aula University hard by, furnished meeting places for the several sessions. On Wednesday morning, August 3, the historic conference opened in the Cathedral, with invocation and Bible reading by the local pastor, Dr. Pasteur G. Secretan. The hymns, "Hail Jesse's Root and Jacob's Rod" and "Holy God, Thy Name We Praise", the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' Creed were sung or said by the vast congregation, which filled the church, each in his own language—the hymns being printed in French, German and English, the official languages of the conference. It was a thrilling and soul-stirring experience, putting in motion currents of spiritual force and social and international esprit which must encircle the globe and bring hope to a race almost hopelessly enmeshed in prejudice and torn by dissidence and disagreement. It matters not that the conference could not, in the nature of the case, commit its attendants to any official posiion on maters of congregational or denominational belief or polity. The great conclave took hold of the imagination, the wills and the hearts of the five or six hundred picked leaders in attendance and was, per se, of world-wide effect and universal intent and significance.

To hear men from every nation and every quarter of the globe discuss Christian fellowship and faith and other matters vital to the life of the Church and humanity, in three languages—and to listen to the interpretation of all that was said in at least two other tongues than the original—was dramatic indeed. It also presented the difficulties attendant upon the want of a universal language, which difficulties, though real and far-reaching, were at least temporarily surmounted by the alert and proficient interpreters, four of whom were kept constantly at work. The expert and ready skill in translation and immediate interpretation to the understanding of the French, English and German visitors, as well as to hundreds who were of other tongues, but who had understanding of these languages, was one of the marvels of the conference. (It is significant that on the week before this conference. (It is world-wide meeting was held at Geneva, just across the lake, in the interest of a universal tongue, Esperanto, with men and women in attendance from all parts of the world, interested in furthering one language for all peoples everywhere.)

.Bishop Brent's sermon at the opening service was a masterpiece in simplicity and in diction. It gripped all hearers and made an impression that could be felt throughout the Cathedral. It was delivered in English, but was available in French in printed form to those not conversant with the original tongue used in its delivery. The discourse was based on John 17:20 to 25. "If unity has slipped from us," said the speaker, "it is the fault of the whole world. Every section has shared in disunity—all must share in unity. It can be done. It must be done; not by controversy, but by conference, in mutual appeal to fellowship and love. There are patches of unity now, but we need a manifestation of that unity that is in every heart."

After the service of worship the business sessions opened in the University Hall, an artistic and colorful setting with its lovely painted walls and ceilings, all of which were covered with impressive and arresting mural paintings of a high order. There were addresses by Dr. Werner Elert and Dr. Eugene Choisy and by the Most Rev. Metropolitan Germanos and the Most Rev. the Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of Ireland. The last named said in part: "Unity of the body (Church) must be indestructible. The body is the whole group of all those who believe and are baptized. Imagine a man coming from Mars to visit the earth. He would not think that Christ's influence and power were limited to the Orthodox Eastern Church, or to the Church of Rome, the Anglican Church, or to the Presbyterians! Unity of the body depends upon unity of the spirit which must precede unity of the body. Machinery and organization cannot solve our problem. Schemes and formulae and creeds cannot bring us together, if at least we are not at unity. We are not here to devise a scheme, which, like some picture puzzle, shall arrange itself into a perfect picture—but to advise in prayer and in fellowship and communion on the common love of God and His will and purpose for us all."

At the first business session, Bishop Brent, of the Episcopal Diocese of Western New York, who has for years been the world's foremost leader in the matter of unity and of international adjustment through religion, was chosen chairman of the conference amid great enthusiasm. Mr. Ralph Brown was elected general secretary, and Mr. George Zabriskie, of New York, treasurer. Both Bishop Brent, as chairman of the continuation committee, and Mr. Brown as secretary of this committee, have worked untiringly and hopefully for a united Church in a united world. The election of officers gave the World Conference its actual existence, as previous to this it was only an idea. So that for the first time in its history Christendom, whose hands have been tied against the momenteus solution of world problems of peace and war and all the vast and mighty matters that have bearing on the life of the human family as a whole, now has a world-extensive organization looking to the ultimate unity of its numerous divisions. It seems incredible to one who likes to consider himself a citizen of the world and a member of the Church Universal, that Christendom has had to wait so long for an autonomy whose chief concern is the uniting of the innumerable parts that compose the disunited whole! But we look for a new and better order, now that there is at least a frame work of universal proportions—a body that can at least devote itself to a discussion of the insanity and the futility and the grotesque folly of indefinite persistency in Christian prejudice, misunderstanding and ill-will.

Other American representatives than those mentioned who had part in the primary world conference of the Church were: Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ; the Rev. Floyd Tompkins, Jr., Secretary of the Episcopal Commission on Faith and Order, and Associate Secretary of the Conference; Bishop Manning, of New York City; Dr. Charles C. Selecman, President of the Methodist University of the South. Dallas Texas; the Rev. Peter Ainsley, the Rev. William P. Merrill, Bishop Francis McDonnell McConnell, Dr. W Cosby Bell, of the Virginia Episcopal Seminary, and Bishop William A. Brown. It is an admitted fact that the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States has for ten years or more been the principal Church which, as an organization, and also through individual leaders, has led the whole of Christendom in the matter of organic unity. Now that the first world-wide conference has been launched successfully and come to a close (as it will have done by the time this appears in print), it is likely that every branch of the Church of Jesus Christ will bring the question of unity more and more to the front, as the delegates to the world-wide meeting go back to their several denominations charged with the high purpose of a visible union in Christ and a harmonious ultimate solution of all the vexed and baneful matters that have grown out of separation of the several members of the same body.

Such questions as the following were discussed with splendid clarity and with an earnestness that challenged the hearts and wills of everybody in the conference: The Call to Unity; The Church's Message to the World—The Gospel; The Nature of the Church; The Church's Common Confession of Faith; The Necessity of Christian Unity—for Fellowship, and Cooperation, for the Furtherance of Missionary Activity and for the Preservation of Christian Truth; The Chruch's Ministry; The Sacraments, etc.

The press galleries were filled with reporters who spread the news of the conference to the four points of the compass in many different languages. There were perhaps a hundred reporters, representing the principal press bureaus of the world, local and daily press in a number of different lands; writers for Church periodicals and religious journals everywhere the Church is known.

Currents of thought and strong spiritual forces have been let loose and have been given the wings of the morning—to proclaim to the world that at least a few men are henceforth to be evangels of unity and harmony and Christian report, and that from now forward concerted efforts will be made to bring together the bleeding fragments of Christian peoples to the healing and annealing of the hurts of the world and to the better understanding of various groups that have not understood each other nor cooperated to the end that peace and justice, religion and morals may have free course in the affairs of the whole human family. Henceforth the watchword of the churches must be, not for self and for self-exaltation and pride of mind—but "For God and Humanity".

Lausanne, August 4, 1927.

DAILY NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE PORTIONS

By the Reverend W. Graham Scroggie, D. D.

THE SCRIPTURE UNION.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 28—ST. MARK 9:1-13.

Subject Title: The Crown is Reached by Way of the Cross.

THE MESSAGE.

THE Transfiguration of our Lord, coming when and where it did, is full of meaning. The ministry of Jesus was drawing towards a close, and He had begun to prepare His apostles for the final scene (8:31). Having spoken to them of the cross, He now points them to the crown (8:34; 9:1). The place was Hermon (10,000 feet high). The time was a week after Peter's great confession (2). The immediate circumstance—Christ was praying (Luke 9:28, 29). The company consisted of the Divine Father, the incarnate Son, two Old Testament saints, and three New Testament saints. The object was to foreshow the ultimate triumph of the Kingdom of God (1). Let three things be marked: (a) The significance of the men who there met. Moses and Elias, representing the Old Covenant, and that in its two great parts: Moses, law; and Elias, prophecy. Peter, James, and John representing the New Covenant. These five came together by different ways. Moses had died and was mysteriously raised (Jude 9); Elijah had been caught up without dying; and the other three were led (2) into the scene by Jesus. (b) The revelation of the O. T. was interpreted and consummated. That revelation was divided into three parts, the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms (Luke 24:44), from each of which the Father now quotes in His attestation of the Son (Matt. 17:5, cf. Psalm 2:7; Isa. 42:1; Deut. 18:15). And this leads to (c) The centrality of Christ in revelation, history, and glory. There were two high mountains in Christ's earthly experience: one at the beginning, when the devil tempted Him to take the kingdoms of the world without facing the Cross; and the other, at the end, when the Father proclaimed His universal Lordship by way of the Cross. What at the beginning Jesus refused, at the end He received: He lost that He might gain; He suffered that He might reign. We should understand this transfiguration revelation better than the disciples did (9-11).

MONDAY, AUGUST 29—ST. MARK 9:14-32.

Subject Title: The Claim of the Valley on the Mountain.

THE MESSAGE.

Down from the glory into the gloom! That is the way that Jesus and the three disciples had to take; and it will often be our way too. It would not be good for us ever to be on the sunlit heights: the valleys below are calling us. Nor will it do for us to be forever in the valleys, we need for our work there the inspiration which can come only on the mountain-top. Life is made up of mountain and valley experiences; and by the former we are equipped for the latter. The disciples who had not been on the mount were put to sorry straits. A distracted father had appealed to them to cast a demon out of his only son, who was the victim of epileptic lunacy. Now they had been commissioned by their Master to do this very thing (6:7, 13), yet here they were utterly impotent. But at the critical moment Jesus arrives. He does not, however, deliver the boy at once. He had some lessons to teach, and the father, the disciples, and the crowd had some things to learn. Follow carefully the details in verses 14-24, and mark especially verses 22, 23. Jesus said, and says still, "It is not a question of whether I am able to perform, but of whether you are able to believe; not of My ability, but of yours. All things are possible to him that believeth". Do you believe that if you have faith, omnipotence will work on your behalf? This sorely stricken father had only a little faith, but with it he laid hold of Christ, and not in vain. But why could not the disciples cast out that demon? There had been too little prayer and self-discipline (29). C class forces will not do for A class foes. For his own work the devil is always at his best; and this we should always be for ours. Now, for the second time, Jesus tells His disciples of His coming Passion (30-32). Not understanding Him, why were they afraid to ask?

Today's Thought: "All Things are Possible to Him That Believeth."

TUESDAY, AUGUST 30—ST. MARK 9:33-50.

Subject Title: Warnings to Disciples.

THE MESSAGE.

Jesus is back in Capernaum, and being alone with His disciples, He warns them against three evils, in danger of which we also stand. 1. Beware of False Ambition (33-37). The disciples' hopes of the coming Kingdom had revived, and as they journeyed they had argued with one another as to which of them was to be pre-eminent. This shows at any rate that Peter was not recognized as such. But think of apostles quarrelling about that! Well, Jesus sets before these ambitious men a little child, the embodiment of simplicity, humility, purity, trustfulness, and lovableness; and He said, "Whoever is like that will be pre-eminent". The highest place in the Kingdom of God is not for scramblers, but for the humble and the true. 2. Beware of Fleshly Intolerance (38-41). Whoever would have imagined that the man who could speak as John does, in verse 38, would be capable of writing the Fourth Gospel! What contradictions we are! Compare verse 38, with Matt. 12:30. These are "two tests" to be applied in quite different circumstances; by the one we are to test our own devotion to Christ, by the other we are to test the judgments we are apt to pass on our neighbors. The one is for ourselves, the other for others. In the one rule Jesus says, He and Me; in the other He says, He and Us. John did not say, "he followed not Thee", but "us". But what does that matter? Let us not flatter ourselves that "we are the people", or, maybe, "wisdom will die with us". Let God's work be done, whoever does it. Paul said, "If Christ be preached, I rejoice", even though He be preached of contention. 3. Beware of Fatal Example (42-50). Our Lord speaks very plainly here. Watch your organs of action (hand), of motion (foot), and of vision (eye), for they may easily lead you astray. Better be rid of them than be hindered by them. Three terrible figures are used in this most solemn warning: a millstone, a fire, a worm. Are your "little ones" (42) handicapped by your character and conduct? Beware!

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 31—ST. MARK 10:13-27.

Subject Title: Riches and Religion.

THE MESSAGE.

1. There is quite a lot in these Gospel Records about children (13-16). The Christian who is working among children is doing the greatest work of all, because he has in his hands this human material when it is most plastic. Be your best, and give your best to the children. Jesus loved and loves them. These mothers only expected that He would "touch them" (13), but "He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them, and blessed them" (16). The apostles were sadly at fault in their attitude on this occasion (13). I wonder what they would have done at a C. S. S. M. meeting, or at a Crusaders' Class! 2. There is something very sad about this story (17-22). This young man, who it has been thought was Lazarus, was a fine loveable soul. He was true to the Old Covenant standard (19, 20), and yet he yearned for a nobler, fuller life (17). He thought that he could get this by trying. Trusting had never occurred to him. Well, Jesus gave him something to do (21), and he would not do it. The teaching here is not that he (and we) could not have both salvation and "great possessions", but that if he really wanted "eternal life", he must be prepared to sacrifice anything for it. This young man was not willing. He wanted God, but not at the cost of his gold: he wanted life, but not at the expense of luxury. On what terms are you willing to accept Christ? But wait! this is not the real question, but, on what terms is Christ willing to have you? He went away. How often have you done that? Beware, or you will do it once too often. 3. This incident led Jesus to speak to His disciples on the snare of riches (23-27). Verse 24 goes to the root of the matter, though it has not the sanction of some of the most important MSS. The wrong is not in having anything that is necessary and good, but in trusting in such things. Are you too "astonished out of measure"? (26).

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1—ST. MARK 10:28-40.

Subject Title: The Cross and the Crown.

THE MESSAGE.

1. Sacrifice and Recompense (28-31). What Peter said was true (28), and the reason for his saying it is given by Matthew (19:27), yet, it is not of the spirit of true sacrifice to ask what the reward is to be. The highest sacrifice is the payment of a debt, not the purchase of a boon. Mark Jesus' answer (29-31). When we leave all to follow Christ, we receive far more than we forsake. (Wife in verse 29, should be omitted, cf. verses 1-10.) Now in this time, does not mean that the recompenses here and now are of a kind with the sacrifices made. We know they are not. But there are recompenses in this life of a higher order, and one of them is "persecutions" (30). And although it says that eternal life awaits us in the world to come, it is also true that we have eternal life now (John 10:28). But . . . (31). Great surprises await us. 2. Sacrifice Faced (32-34). "There are few pictures in the Gospels more striking than this of Jesus going forth to His death, and walking along the path into the deep valley, while behind Him, in awful reverence and mingled anticipations of dread and hope, the disciples walked . . and dared not disturb His meditations." This is the third prediction of His Passion (cf. 8:31; 9:30-32). 3. Recompense Sought (35-40). Zebedee's wife and sons sought as a gift what they could only have as a reward. The prize is given to the one who wins the race, and not to those who ask for it. No one who dodges the cross will wear the crown. James and John wished a coronet; Jesus offered them a cup (38). They both drank the cup and won the crown. James was the first of the apostles to win the martyr's crown (Acts 12:2). The thoughts of the first paragraph (28-31) are taken up separately in paragraphs two and three, sacrifice being emphasized in the one, and recompense in the other. Where do you place the emphasis?

Today's Thought: "He That Humbleth Himself Shall Be Exalted."

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 2—ST. MARK 10:41-52.

Subject Title: The Sovereignty of the Servant.

THE MESSAGE.

1. The Lordship of Service (41-45). These verses are a continuation of the paragraph beginning at verse 35. The indignation (41) of the ten was as wrong as the indulgence of the two (35-37), because it was prompted by the same feelings. They were all beginning to be jealous of one another, and that, in the very shadow of the Cross! Jesus knowing this, taught them, and teaches us, a great lesson. "Ye know that supreme rulers among the Gentiles exercise severe despotic rule without considering their subjects, and that their nobles tyrannize over their inferiors. But it is not so among you, he that will be the noble must be the attendant, and the monarch must act as the slave." Has the Christian Church learned that lesson yet? This at any rate is certain, that if Jesus Christ were on earth today, He would be neither Pope, Cardinal, nor Prelate, but God's Minister to the people. The highest office of a minister is to serve: it is the people he serves, but he is God's servant. Think long over verse 45. The Son of Man: The Wonder of His Birth: "He came." That means more than that He was born: only once did He speak of His birth. The secret of His Life; negatively and positively: "to serve." The Meaning of His Death: "to give His life a ransom," that is, to redeem us from slavery. Kneel down and thank Him just now. 2. Persistent Faith Rewarded (46-52). Consider this man's case; his consciousness of need; his insistent cry to Jesus; his simple claim; and his immediate cure. Mark also, that those who should have helped him to Jesus, chose to hinder. Are you by lip or life hindering some soul from coming to Jesus? Wherever there is blessing two factors are always present, God's power, and our faith. Without His power our faith is in vain; and without our faith His power is ineffective. His power is ever present; is your faith?

Today's Thought: "What Wilt Thou That I Should Do Unto Thee?" (51).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3—ST. MARK 11:1-18.

Subject Title: Honoring and Yet Rejecting Christ.

THE MESSAGE.

With today's lesson we enter upon the events of the Passion Week. Let us follow carefully, and prayerfully, and obediently, the happenings and instructions of each day. Palm Sunday. The Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem (1-11). Our Lord, Who had always avoided publicity, now, in the most spectacular way, and on one of the most conspicuous of occasions, enters the holy city: and He, Who had so recently told His disciples of His coming death, now clearly accepts the homage of a king. By so doing He gave His nation the opportunity of doing what He knew only too well they would not do. He was fulfilling an age-long purpose (Zech. 9:9). Is it possible that you keep Palm Sunday every year, and yet refuse its King? It is not shouting, Hosanna, that saves. The word is prayer, "Save now. I beseech Thee" (Psalm 118:25; Heb.), and He will answer it, if you let Him. With whom did Jesus stay that Sunday night? (11). Monday. The Fruitless Fig-tree Cursed (12-14). Why was Jesus hungry in the morning? (12). There is nothing theatrical about what He did (13). Genuinely hungry, He sincerely went to that tree for food. The fruit always appeared before the leaves, so that if it was not fig-time, neither was it leaf-time. But the miracle is a parable. The tree represents the Jewish Nation in four respects: (a) Its Conspicuous Position: "seen afar off"; its ancient history. (b) Its Striking Appearance: "having leaves"; the token of spiritual fruitfulness. (c) Its Utter Barrenness: "nothing but leaves"; "ceremony and tradition, without internal reality. (d) Its Speedy Doom: prophesied in the O. T.; symbolized in this incident; and realized in 70 A. D. when Jerusalem was destroyed. Is your life all foliage and no fruit? Does your temple need cleansing? (15-19).

Extra From a Private Letter From the Late Bishop Richard Wilmer, of Alabama, to a Friend:

"We are nearing the end. Let me give you a thought which has been my stay through life, and gives a cheering ray at its sunset. Only one thing 'our Father' says that He forgets—our sins. We can appreciate this, for when our children come to us and say 'father, I have done wrong, I am sorry for the wrong', we do not love to treasure up the remembrance thereof. We love to blot it out from our memory. But one thing He says He never does forget—our infirmities. This we cannot fully appreciate, for we fail oftentimes to remember that our little ones are dust of our dust. What a precious 'Father' is ours. Of our sins He says, 'I will remember them no more forever'—when repented of. Of our infirmities He declares 'He knoweth our infirmities. He remembereth that we are but dust'.

"And as we draw nearer home, let us more and more strive to gain the approval and the 'well done good and faithful servant' of our Lord; for His words of welcome will be, 'I was hungry and ye gave me meat, thirsty and ye gave me drink . . . . inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me'. Let us leave behind us some memorial, which shall tell of our love to Him, who gave His life for us."

TRIBUTE TO BISHOP BROWN

WRITING from Paris on July 27 to the Living Church, Frederic C. Morehouse, Editor of that paper, pays the following tribute to the Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown, late Bishop of Virginia, who died suddenly in London, July 25:

"It was very much of a shock to learn of the death of Bishop Brown in London, because less than a month earlier we had crossed the ocean together. Our steamer chairs had been placed side by side, and I had enjoyed many a chat with him during our week together. He had spoken of being very tired and had said that his trip, first in Scotland, then in England, was to be entirely one of rest with as few engagements as possible. But he had not spoken of being ill, nor had he seemed to be. He was more solicitous of the health and comfort of his wife, who accompanied him, than of his own, and there was nothing to suggest the proximity of the end—as we foolishly term it.

"I observed every morning that he read extensively from the New Testament in Portuguese, his own translation, made while he was giving such distinguished service to the Church in Brazil. He would look up from time to time and make some comment on a particular passage where an idiom had enabled him to bring out the meaning in an especial manner. He talked freely of men and movements in the Church, and I was struck anew—for I had similarly been struck in other days—with the breadth of his sympathies and the keenness of his judgment. Some will be interested to learn that he was deeply disappointd at the failure of the House of Bishops to ratify the more adequate commemoration of the departed in the Prayer for Christ's Church at the last General Convention. He had spoken in its favor—I have been told that it was one of the most affecting and beautiful speeches delivered in that House in our day—and it had only failed because of the large number of absentees from the House when the vote was taken. I had known of his speech, but I had not known that his disappointment was so keen. Returning to his beloved Virginia, he had carefully explained his attitude and feeling on the subject in sermons and in explanations, and it was with evident and justifiable pride that he told me that Virginia stood by him, where, perhaps, he had not been sure that it would.

"As he taught Virginia to pray for the departed—who are not dead—so now, I am confident, the prayers of Virginia Churchmen, joined with those of their brethren everywhere, will ascend to Almighty God for his rest and peace and continued blessing as the diocese has never prayed before for one departed; and so Bishop Brown's call to the higher life has continued in his death that drawing of the diocese into closer sympathy with the rest of the Church that has been so marked a characteristic of his episcopate. He was the complete antithesis of the partisan; and he performed a service for Virginia and for the Church that the whole Church has abundantly recognized. 'Now he belongs to the ages'; but he belongs to all of us together, and not only to the diocese that he loved so well and adorned so conspicuously. May God grant him abundant rest!

"That perhaps I was the last of those who had been associated with him in the work of the American Church to enjoy his companionship and receive his confidences is and ever will be a matter of peculiar joy to me, for I had learned long before these last days to have a special regard for and confidence in his judgment, and now I can feel that mine is the benediction of listening to perhaps his last words concerning so many matters in which we had a common interest. I feel the most intense sympathy for his bereaved wife, from whom he was parted so suddenly at the height of his solicitousness for her, and in a distant land, though, I know, among those who would be only friends as soon as they knew of their opportunity.

"Virginia and the American Church are richer for the consecrated life and the deep sympathy that William Cabell Brown has givenl to both."

REPORT OF TH ECOMMITTEE ON THE INCREASE OF THE MINISTRY.

The Committee on Increase of the Ministry offers the following:

The question of the increase of the ministry in the Diocese of Virginia is one which has given our Bishops serious concern. As far back as 1901, in his last address to the Council, Bishop Whittle, in quite a long paragraph, expressed his anxiety over what he called "a sad and alarming state of things". In 1903 the Committee on the Increase of the Ministry has this to say: "There seems to be a sad and serious falling off in the number of young men seeking the work of the sacred ministry . . . We believe every part of the Church ought to do its utmost to rectify this sad condition." In 1909 the committee reports as follows: "If the Church is not to die out in a few places for lack of ministerial oversight, something must be done to increase the number of the clergy in our Church." And again in 1914 the situation was criticized as, "This distressing state of affairs". And so practically the same discouraging condition is emphasized all the way up t othe present. And Bishop Brown, in his last year's Council address, does not see any improvement, declaring that "we are losing clergy faster than we are gaining them . . . a matter that ought to occasion us grave concern".

Bishop Brown, in his address to the Council, 1927, reports a healthy condition in the Church in Virginia in the matter of ministerial supply, emphasizing adequate Episcopal supervision and fewer clerical vacancies than for many years. We take courage from this, but it would be too optimistic to say that this changes a condition of such long standing. Besides, the vacancies filled in Virginia are by letters dismissory received, which means letters dsmissory given in some other Docese.

The many committees appointed by the Council in years past to consider this question have as a rule traced the causes to the same source, and have almost invariably suggested the same remedy. Much emphasis has been laid upon the necessity of larger salaries. It was contended that reason and justice and Scripture all demanded this, and that if the Church would only see the thing in its proper light, and do what was right and just and logical, this difficulty would be settled once and for all. While no one will say that the salaries of the clergy are as a rule what they ought to be, all must confess that there has been a great and steady improvement in this matter. And if the lack of clergymen in the Church is due to the small salaries paid them, it ought to follow that larger salaries would produce a greater number of clergymen. And the question here is, Has it followed?

The committees of the Council have also laid stress upon religion in the home as one remedy for this falling off in the ministerial supply. This committee does the same. It is hard to visualize an adequate and efficient ministry in a church whose members are strangers to religion in the home. The ministry is a religious calling or it is nothing, and there has been no effective substitute offered for the home as the one chief place for building the religious character. And this is borne out by experience, for it is an accepted fact that with certain exceptions the clergy today, and always are, men brought up in homes where religion was uppermost. And we do earnestly recommend family prayer and daily practice and attendance upon public worship the rule of life as the chief means by which the soul is prepared to hear and receive the divine call to the ministry. If, then, we are going to have an increase of the ministry, we must have an increase of religion in the home.

One other truth is herewith presented for your serious thought. Humanity naturally responds to a great worthwhile appeal. The call to a service which demands self-sacrifice, demands the giving up of what the world considers the summum bonum of life, and enduring what St. Paul calls "hardness", has in it all the elements of romance and is well-nigh irresistible, provided the man called is convinced that that to which he is giving himself is of the most consummate and overwhelming importance.

Witness the history of the early days of Christianity. Practically every believer seems to have been in the ministry. Laymen elected to serve tables took to preaching. "They which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen traveled . . . preaching the word". Martyrdom helped rather than hindered the cause. These were the days of absolute faith. These men believed without mental reservation the fundamental truths that we have recorded on the pages of Holy Scripture. They turned the world upside down and changed the icourse of human events. We will never see this repeated, even in a small degree, as far as the ministry is concerned, unless the Church rises to the same measure of faith: That Jesus Christ is God manifest in the flesh, 1 Tim.

3:16. That He died upon the cross to make an atonement to God for us, Rom. 5:11. That He gave His life a ransom for us, Matt. 22:28. That we are justified by His blood and shall be saved from wrath through Him, Rom. 5:9. That the wages of sin is death, Rom. 6:23. That there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, Acts 4:120. That unless men are saved by faith in the blood of Christ they are going to be cast out into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, Matt. 8:12. These are the words of Jesus Christ and His inspired apostles. If they mean anything at all, they mean exactly what they say. Without them and many other words of the same import, the gospel's power is lost. To hold up Jesus Christ as the ideal man, as the most beautiful character, as our great exemplar, is as it should be, and is the truth. But it is only a part, and a comparatively small part, of the truth.

If the Church of todaycan become possessed of the spirit of the early days of Christianity, can believe and live and preach the gospel in its fulness as Christ and His apoestles delivered it, then not only will the question of the increase of the ministry forever cease to trouble us but "the kingdoms of the world will speedily become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ".

FIFTY YEARS WITH THE GIRLS' FRIENDLY SOCIETY

By Mary M. McGuire

EARLY in November, 1877, Elizabeth Mason Edson, in her father's parish, St. Anne's, Lowell, Massachusetts, took the first step in the venture of faith which resulted in the creation of the Girls' Friendly Society in America.

In November, 1927, the Society, now fifty years old, will meet in Boston to keep its fiftieth anniversary, to commemorate its foundress, to give thanks for the first half century of its work, and to plan for the future which, like the future of all that relates to youth, is full of problems and of promise.

The vision of a Society working under the Anglican Church and composed of all girls who would accept and promise to uphold a high standard of character had come first in England in 1873, to Mrs. Townsend, a young woman whose interest in the girls on her husband's estate had given her a realization of their needs and of the possibility of meeting them through an organization in which they would find friends and companions, adult leadership, and a strong religious influence.

Mrs. Townsend was far in advance of a time when organized social work was almost unknown, but her enthusiasm, her clear vision and her zeal quickly won friends for the movement and in 1874, five people met at Lambeth Palace and the Girls' Friendly Society came into being. Enrollment began in England on the first of January, 1875.

A little more than two years later, Miss Edson read of the work, saw its possibilities and at once took steps to begin it in her own country by calling together the first branch of St. Anne's. Her correspondence shows that from the first she visualized and planned for a national organization, a fact which explains to a great extent the rapid and uniform development of the American work.

In 1888, the existing units of the Society met in New York and the Girls' Friendly Society in America came officially into being, although the work had virtually existed for several years.

Miss Edson and her fellow workers laid firm foundations. Mrs. Thomas Roberts, the next president, began to build wisely upon them and in 1895, the Society was incorporated nationally and a Central Office in the Church Missions House was opened. A little later, extension work was begun by Miss Emily Paddock, the first extension secretary, and at the General Convention of the Church in San Francisco, 1901, the first exhibit of the Society was shown.

When Mrs. Roberts resigned, the work was taken up and ably carried on for a year by Mary Benson, of Brooklyn, and then by Mary A. L. Neilson, of Philadelphia.

During all these years, membership was increasing and activities were multiplying. Lodges and Holiday Houses were opened by the various diocesan organizations and the enrollment reached fifty thousand women and girls.

In 1914, Frances W. Sibley became president. New and difficult problems resulting from the war at once confronted the Girls' Friendly Society, which reached their climax when America entered the war.

To the question put by the War Commission of the Church, "What can the G. F. S. A. do to meet existing needs"? the answer given in the autumn of 1917 was: "The government tells us that the winning of the war depends on steadfastness, faithfulness to duty, purity and thrift. For forty years the Girls' Friendly Society has existed to develop these qualities. In this national crisis, it can do no other work, but it will continue to do what it has done and will try to do it more intensively than ever before." Workers were sent to camp areas, lodges for girls were started where the need seemed greatest, rest-rooms, information and recreation centers were opened and relief work was begun on a large scale.

The end of the war found the Society a little smaller than it had been, but the loss was quickly regained and new interests and activities were developed as an outcome of the experience through which the country had passed. Lodges increased in number to fourteen with a total accommodation of six hundred and eighty-six beds for self-supporting girls living away from home.

Holiday houses now number twenty-six, scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, by sea and lake, in the mountains and the woods, while numberless small camps provide for girls too far away from the larger houses.

The total in enrollment at the end of 1926 was 53,619 in 1,200 parochial branches, each of which meets as a club for classes, recreation, for services and for friendly intercourse. There are fifty-five diocesan organizations with branches in nearly every diocese and missionary district in the United States. In the mission field, the G. F. S. A. has work in Japan, Alaska, Panama, Porto Rico and Mexico.

The organization of the Society is simple and representative. Each parochial unit or branch has a group of leaders who are communicants of the Church, one of them is annually elected as president, with the consent of the rector, or is appointed by him. Each branch sends representatives to the Diocesan Council, which in turn sends representatives to the National Council meeting triennially. In the intervening years, provincial conferences are held under the leadership of the national vice-presidents, each of whom, save the vice-president-at-large, has definite responsibilities for the work of a province.

The aim of the Girls' Friendly Society is: "To unite for the Glory of God, in one fellowship of prayer and service, the women and girls of the Nation to uphold the Christian standard of honor and morality." The ends are achieved in many ways. Each branch is virtually a club and meets as such. There are classes of many kinds; recreation of every wholesome sort, indoors and out, is encouraged; there is civic and social service work of many kinds and always a strong religious influence. Comradeship, personal influence, prayer and a consciousness of common aim and purpose are the chief means to the ends of the Society.

The educational value of giving is a part of the G. F. S. program. Each year the Society works for certain missionary undertakings as well as for parochial and diocesan support. The total amount of these gifts to the Church in 1926 was $95,977.06, with $24,767.33 more given to social service and other purposes outside the Church.

The ideal set before those who belong to the Girls' Friendly Society is that the Christian standard of living is essential to civilization. Membership is open to all who pledge themselves to uphold this standard by the witness of their lives, and the energies of the Society are all directed towards the single aim of character development.

At the meeting in Boston, it is expected that the G. F. S. A. will be more largely represented than at any previous Council. On the first day of the meeting, the Girls' Friendly Society will unite with the Woman's Auxiliary of Massachusetts, which is also keeping its fiftieth anniversary at that time.

In addition to the usual legislative sessions of the National Council of the G. F. S. A., there will be a missionary luncheon, a dinner with international understanding as the topic, a pilgrimage to Lowell, a great pageant, a Corporate Communion and a festival service at which the Presiding Bishop will be the preacher.

Thanksgiving for the past fifty years will have its place but it is the problems of the future and the best way of meeting them that will be given the chief place in conference and meetings, and in group discussions which will be conducted by trained leaders.

"Master, show us the way," is the thought that lies under all the preparations, in the earnest hope that the Society may learn better than ever before how to see that Way and to guide young feet to walk in it. For only as the Girls' Friendly Society can help to show that it is the high and not the low path that brings happiness can it be worthy of the task it has set itself.

"To every man there openeth
A Way and Ways and a Way;
And the High Soul climbs the High Way,
And the Low Soul gropes the Low;
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A High Way and a Low,
And every man decideth
The Way his soul shall go."

—John Oxenham.

SAFETY, CERTAINTY AND ENJOYMENT

If a Believer, Why Not Sure of Salvation? If Saved, Why Not Happy?—

By George Cutting

"WHAT CLASS ARE YOU TRAVELING?"

WHAT an oft-repeated question! Let me put it to you, my reader; for traveling you most certainly are—traveling from time into Eternity, and who knows how very, very near you may be this very moment to the Great Terminus?

Let me ask you then in all kindness, "What class are you traveling"? There are but three. Let me describe them, that you may put yourself to the test as in the presence of "Him with whom you have to do".

First Class—Those who are saved, and who know it.

Second Class—Those who are not sure of Salvation, but anxious to be so.

Third Class—Those who are not only unsaved, but totally indifferent about it.

Again I repeat my question, "What class are you traveling"? Oh, the madness of indifference, when eternal issues are at stake! A short time since a man came rushing into the railroad station at Leicester, and while scarcely able to gasp for breath, he took his seat in one of the cars just on the point of starting.

"You've run it fine," said a fellow-passenger. "Yes," replied he, breathing heavily after every two or three words, "but I've saved four hours, and that's well worth running for."

Saved four hours! I couldn't help repeating to myself, Four hours well worth that earnest struggle! What of Eternity? Yet are there not thousands of shrewd, far-seeing men today, who look sharply enough after their own interests in this life, but who seem stone-blind to the Eternity before them? In spite of the infinite love of God to helpless rebels told at Calvary, in spite of his pronounced hatefulness of sin, in spite of the known brevity of man's history here, in spite of after death, and of the solemn probability of waking up at last with the unbearable remorse of being on hell's side of a "fixed" gulf, man hurries on to the bitter, bitter end, as careless as if there were no God, no death, no judgment, no heaven, no hell! If the reader of these pages be such an one, may God this very moment have mercy upon you, and while you read these lines open your eyes to your most perilous position standing as you may be on the slippery brink of an endless woe!

Oh, friend, believe it or not, your case is truly desperate! Put off the thought of Eternity no longer. Remember that procrastination is like him who deceives you by it, not only a "thief", but a "murderer". There is much truth in the Spanish proverb which says, "The road of 'By-and-by' leads to the town of 'Never' ". I beseech you, unknown reader, travel that road no longer; "Now is the day of Salvation".

"But," says one, "I am not indifferent as to the welfare of my soul. My deep trouble lies wrapped up in another word—Uncertainty; i. e., I am among the second class passengers you speak of."

Well, reader, both indifference and uncertainty are the offspring of one parent—unbelief. The first results from unbelief as to the sin and ruin of man, the other from unbelief as to God's sovereign remedy for man. It is especially for souls desiring before God to be fully and unmistakably sure of their salvation that these pages are written. I can in a great measure understand and am assured that the more you are in earnest about this all-important matter, the greater will be your thirst, until you know for certain that you are really and eternally saved. "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

Your Deep Soul-Trouble,

The only son of a devoted father is at sea. News comes that his ship has been wrecked on some foreign shore. Who can tell the anguish of suspense in that father's heart until, upon the most reliable authority, he is assured that his boy is safe and sound? Or, again, you are far from home. The night is dark and wintry, and your way is totally unknown. Standing at a point where two roads diverge, you ask a passer-by the way to the town you desire to reach, and he tells you he thinks that such and such a way is the right one, and hopes you will be all right if you take it. Would "thinks", and "hopes", and "may bes" satisfy you? Surely not. You must have certainty about it, or every step you take will increase your anxiety. What wonder, then, that men have sometimes neither been able to eat nor sleep when the eternal safety of the soul has been trembling in the balance!

To lose your wealth is much
To lose your health is more,
To lose your soul is such a loss
As no man can restore.

Now, dear reader, there are three things I desire, by the Holy Spirit's help, to make clear to you, and, to put them into Scripture languages. They are these:

1. The way of Salvation (Acts 16:17).
2. The knowledge of Salvation (Luke 1:77).
3. The joy of Salvation (Psalm 51:12).

We shall, I think, see that, though intimately connected, they each stand upon a separate basis; so that it is quite possible for a soul to know the way of Salvation without having the certain knowledge that he himself is saved; or again to know that he is saved, without possessing at all times the joy that ought to accompany that knowledge.

I am awake, dear Jesus,
Oh, hear my little prayer:
I want to kneel and thank Thee
For all Thy tender care.

I thank Thee for the daylight,
The sunny skies above,
The kindly friends around me,
And most of all Thy love.

I want to tell Thee, Jesus,
My little heart is Thine;
Oh, make it glad and willing
To do Thy will, not mine.

That when the day is over
I then may truly say
I have been serving Jesus
And no myself today.

Church Intelligence

Church Unity Plan Meets Objections.

Lausanne, Switzerland, August 18.—The delegates of the Eastern Orthodox Church today announced to the World Conference on Faith and Order that they could accept only one of the six reports being prepared by the conference, the others being inconsistent with the principles of their Church.

The Easterners rejected all but one of the six conference reports, the exception being the report on the teaching of the Holy Scriptures, which they said was in accord with the orthodox conception.

The Easterners' action came with dramatic suddenness at the opening of today's session of the conference. A hush passed over the assembly as the most Rev. Ermanos Troianos, Metropolitan of Sardis, rose and asked permission to make a statement. Speaking slowly and impressively in English, he said:

"We have concluded with regret that the basis assumed for the foundation of the reports which are to be submitted to the vote of the conference are inconsistent with the principles of the Orthodox Church, which we represent."

The unity so much desired, he continued, was being effected, "on a basis of compromise between conflicting ideas and meanings in order to arrive at an external agreement in letter alone".

He saw no hope that an agreement reached upon such quivocal statements could remain lasting. He and his associates could accept reunion of the Churches only upon "the basis of common faith and confession of the ancient undivided Church of the seven eucumenical councils and of the first eight centuries".

When he finished, applause came from half the assembly. The Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, of Buffalo, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Western New York, then arose.

He thanked the Metropolitan for his clear expression of the position of the Orthodox Church, but said he hoped the Eastern delegates would remain to the end of the conference.

First Young People's Provincial Summer Conference, Province of the Southwest.

The first Young People's Summer Conference of the Province of the Southwest was held at the Helen Dunlap School, Winslow, Arkansas, from July 14 to 25.

The Chaplain of the Conference was the Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Texas, who not only served as Chaplain and Advisor, but wh oalso taught a course on "Personal Tvangelism".

Other members of the faculty were the Rt. Rev. E. Cecil Seaman, Bishop of North Texas, who taught a course on the Life of Christ; the Rev. Karl M. Block, Chairman of the National Commission of Young People, of St. Louis, who conducted a course on Program Building for Young People's Organizations; Mrs. C. S. Quin, Counsellor of the Y. P. S. L., of the Diocese of Texas, conducted a course on "A Church Awake"; and Miss Dorothy M. Fischer, Organizing Secretary of the Province of the Southwest, taught a course on "Method of Work".

There was a total registration of fifty-six, representing the Missionary Districts of Salina, Oklahoma, North Texas, New Mexico, and the Dioceses of Missouri, Arkansas, Dallas and Texas.

An unusually splendid spirit was shown among the young people and a genuine desire for study was manifested in the fact that all four class periods were attended by the entire conference group, many taking courses for credit in the N. A. T. A.

Special addresses were made at the sunset services by the Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, the Rt. Rev. E. Cecil Seaman, the Rev. Karl M. Block, the Rev. W. S. Atmore, Dean of the Helen Dunlap School, and the Very Rev. W. J. Day.

The Province is greatly indebted to the Diocese of Arkansas for the privilege of holding their first Young People's Conference at the Helen Dunlap School and especial thanks are due the Rev. and Mrs. W. S. Atmore for their hospitality and untiring efforts to make the conference group feel comfortable and at home.

A WARNING.

Editor Southern Churchman:

Please insert following notice:

Caution is suggested in dealing with Elbert Kay, although he is a layman. He is dsiguised as a clergyman, and claims to be "under a vow of poverty to have been sent by his Father Superior to the DuBose School, Monteagle, Tenn., and told to beg from the clergy in order to get there".

All these claims are false. He was for a short time a lay postulant of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, but is now in no way connected with us. It is emphatically not our policy to send forth Fathers or Brothers penniless to be supported by the clergy or the laity of the Church. For further information, address the Rev. Spence Burton, Superior S. S. J. E., 33 Bowdoin Street, Boston, Mass.

SPENCE BURTON.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. R. H. Baker Coming to Waynesboro.

The Rev. Richard H. Baker, Jr., has announced his acceptance of a call to the rectorship of St. John's Church at Waynesboro, Virginia, effective October 15, 1927.

Mr. Baker is a native of Norfolk, Virginia, and a graduate of the University of Virginia, and the Virginia Seminary; the latter institution conferring upon him the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. He was ordained Deacon in 1923 and Priest in 1924, and served during his diaconate as minister-in-charge of Pruden Parish at Chatham, in the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

For two years, from the fall of 1924 to the spring of 1926, he was Chaplain and a member of the faculty of Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg, in this diocese—Southwestern Virginia.

For the past year he has been assistant at St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, and student pastor at Louisiana State University.

Now he is coming home and he will find a very warm welcome awaiting him in Southwestern Virginia. In addition to St. John's, he will also have charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, at Folly Mills.

A Week of Diocesan Days.

Under the direction of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education and the immediate leadership of the Rev. Devall L. Gwalhmey, of Wythevilte, Chairman of that department, a series of conferences, known as "Diocesan Days", was held at four points in the diocese. At each place notice had been given the people well in advance and the program consisted of addresses by a party of speakers on the various phases of the Church's Work.

The sessions were conducted at Emmanuel Church, Bristol, the Rev. F. Ernest Warren, rector, on Tuesday, August 16; at Christ Church, Big Stone Gay, the Rev. Claudius F. Smith, rector, on Wednesday; at St. Mark's Church, Dante, on Wednesday evening, and Thursday; and at Christ Church, Marion, the Rev. Arthur W. Taylor, rector, on Friday.

At each church the work and objectives of the Department of Christian Social Service were discussed by the Rev. Roland J. Moncure, of St. Paul's Church, Salem, and the Field Department, and Church Finances by Mr. Thos. A. Scott, Treasurer of the Diocese. Addresses on Religious Education were made at Bristol and Marion by the Rev. S. Janney Hutton, temporarily in charge of St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, and at Big Stone Gap and Dante by the Rev. Mr. Gwathmey. The work of the Woman's Auxiliary was discussed at Bristol and Marion by Mrs. John A. Muse, of Dante, and at Big Stone Gap and Dante by Miss Jane Byrd Pendleton, of Wytheville.

At Bristol, Big Stone Gap and Marion the session lasted from 11 A. M. to about 2:30 P. M., with "time out" for lunch and in each of these places a bountiful repast for the entire congregation was served by the ladies of the church.

At Bristol there were present a number of the members of St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon. Representatives from Norton, Wise and Appalachia attended at Big Stone Gap and several from Abingdon and Wytheville came to Marion.

At Dante the program was entirely different from that followed at the other three places. Dante is a sort of "capital" of the Associate Mission Field, which is under the supervision of Dean H. H. Young, of Bluefield. At an evening service on Wednesday the conference was opened in St. Mark's Church with a brief service, which was followed by the addresses on Social Service and the Field Department, or the Church's Missions.

On Thursday morning at ten, the Rev. Messrs. Gwathmey and Moncure celebrated the Holy Communion and at 11 the conference was continued with the discussion of Religious Education, the Woman's Auxiliary and the "Four Projects" of the Church Schools—the Lenten Offering, the Birthday Thank Offering, the Christmas Box and the Little Helpers' Department.

At the conferences at Dante were workers, both regular and volunteer, from all over the Associate Missions Field. These included Deaconess Williams and Misses Chase and Lay of Dante, Deaconess Binns of Nora, Miss Mansfield and Miss Nevin of Grace House-on-the-Mountain, Messrs. John A. Winslow and D. P. Moore, Seminary students serving in the field during vacation, and many others.

At all of these conferences the speak-themselves derived certainly as great benefit and enjoyment as the members of the congregations, and as the visitors proceeded from place to place they were received with the most generous hospitality and courtesy. Not the least of the many pleasure of the week for the "traveling troupe" was the opportunity for some of them to take their first trip—by train, automobile and "bus"—through a section of Southwestern Virginia, full of most interesting features of various kinds; the natural tunnel through which the Southern Railway passes near Big Stone Gap, the coal mining communities at Appalachia, Dante and other points and the beautiful mountain scenery of Washington, Wise, Russell, Dickenson, Wythe and Smyth Counties.

A similar series of conferences are to be held at four other points in the eastern end of the diocese during the following week.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomsen, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rev. W. Leigh Ribble, son of the Rev. G. Wallace Ribble, formerly of Halifax, will be advanced to the priesthood in St. John's Church, Halifax, on Friday, August 26, by Bishop B. D. Tucker, of the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

The Rev. F. G. Ribble, Dean of Bishop Payne Divinity School, will preach the sermon and present his nephew for ordination. The Rev. Frederick Sapp, of Kenbridge, and the Rev. Myron B. Marshall, rector of St. John's Church, Halifax, will take part in the service. Mr. Ribble will sail shortly for Brazil, where he will be a missionary of the Church.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

. .Bishop H. St. George Tucker preached and confirmed five persons at Grace Church, Goochland, Tuesday evening, July 26. The Rev. J. Letcher Showell, of Trinity Parish, Charles County, Maryland, and former rector of Grace Church, came for the occasion and presented the class to the Bishop.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, Bishop of the Diocese of Tennessee, confirmed a class of twelve men and nine women at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Chattanooga, Sunday, August 7. The church was crowded, every pew being filled and chairs being placed in the aisle in spite of the fact that it was intensely warm and that a great many parishioners were out of the city.

Bishop Gailor took his text from the Second Book of Kings, eighteenth chapter, nineteenth verse, and preached a powerful sermon. He stated that he had occupied the office of Bishop for thirty-three years, but that this was the finest summer time class that had ever been presented to him. It was the first time during the rectorship of Dr. Oliver J. Hart that the Bishop has ever held confirmation at St. Paul's.

The size of the class and the unusual time of its presentation showed evidence of the loyalty and enthusiasm of the Men's Service League of St. Paul's and the fine spirit of appeal that Dr. Hart is making to his congregation and to the city of Chattanooga generally.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

People away from Washington are showing a marked interest in the progress of Washington Cathedral, and it is interesting to Washington people in other cities to pick up daily papers and find reports of what is happening to further the building of the massive and beautiful Gothic structure on Mt. St. Alban. Recent reports of Associated Press tell how the stones for the Washington Cathedral are cut by modern machinery in a stone-cutting plant at Bethesda, Md., only a few miles from the Cathedral close, then transplanted to the Cathedral site, where master masons fit the mtogether like pieces in a great puzzle. Much drafting and mechanical preparation are necessary for the production of each stone according to the architect's plan and each is given a number, before leaving the plant.

Stones for other great temples, says this article, were prepared for the masons away from the temple site, but lack of machinery and more production methods made it a much longer process and it is said that the one hundred men employed in the Bethesda plant cut more stone every three weeks than the same number of skilled men could cut by hand in a year. The work of the master masons, however, is little different from that of Solomon's time. The plant at Bethesda produces daily forty-five tons of stone from huge blocks of Indiana limestone. The detail of the plant is full of interest and perhaps little known to the majority who have grown accustomed to see the Cathedral as it grows on Mt. St. Alban slowly and surely. The more optimistic in authority at the Cathedral look forward to its completion in five years, but even a few years added to this will yet make it a speedy operation compared to similar Cathedral buildings of other ages.

Washington Churchmen are interested and hopeful for a sufficient completion to accommodate the General Convention of the Church, which will meet in Washington in October, 1928.

Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes are spending the summer at their summer residence, Brook Farm, Lenox, Mass.

Canon E. S. Dunlap, of the Washington Cathedral, and his daughter, Miss Edith Dunlap, have returned to this country, after spending some time in Europe.

The Rev. Edward Charles Russell, of New York City, is in charge of services at St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street, in the absence of the rector, the Rev. Robert Johnston.

The Rev. Edward M. Parkman was the preacher at the eleven o'clock service, Sunday, August 14, at St. Margaret's Church. Mr. Parkman is rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Montgomery, Alabama.

An announcement made public recently from the War Department, states that the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, has been reappointed a Major in the Corps of Chaplains, Officers Reserve Corps, U. S. A.

M. M. W.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rev. Ralph J. Kendall has been called to St. John's Church, Albany, and to St. Timothy's, Athens, in succession to the Rev. Thomas G. Mundy, who has accepted a call to Troy, of the same state. Mr. Kendall will be in residence after September 1.

After two years of service as assistant to the rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, the Rev. E. R. Neff has accepted a call to St. Wilfred's, Marion, coming to this field the first of September. Mr. Neff will also serve as Chaplain of the Marion Institute. Bishop McDowell, of this Diocese, has recently been elected a trustee of this well-known preparatory school for boys.

The Rev. Charles F. Penniman, of St. Paul's, Meridian, Miss., after studying, with his parochial Church Extension Department, Mr. Goodwin's book, Beyond City Limits, found Alabama his natural rural field. By arrangement with Bishop McDowell, the three Episcopal groups at Livingstone, Gainesville and York, have been organized into a rural unit, and placed under Mr. Penniman and his lay workers.

A certain farmer, of Dallas County, recently sent the sum of fifty dollars to the Rev. E. W. Gamble, of Selma, for social service work in that community. This gift was an expression of gratitude to God for an abundant rain which came in time to save his crop. Were this form of thanksgiving more common among our farming class, they would find less occasion for complaining of crop shortage.

Historic Church to Honor "O. Henry".

Wide interest is being shown in the coming festival to honor William Sydney Porter ("O. Henry") at Calvary Episcopal Church, Fletcher, near Asheville, on Sunday afternoon next, August 28, at four o'clock. At this time a bronze tablet on granite boulder will be unveiled to "O. Henry". It is the gift of Julian A. Woodcock, Sr., of Asheville. Doctor Archibald Henderson, of the University of North Carolina, lecturer and author, will the speaker. His topic will be "The International Fame of 'O. Henry' ". Governor Angus McLean, Governor Alfred E. Smith, Mayor James Walker, Mayor E. B. Jeffress of Greensboro, N. C. (birthplace of "O. Henry"), Greensboro Chamber of Commerce, Doctor W. P. Beall of Greensboro, N. C. (boyhood friend of "O. Henry"), the mayors of Asheville and Hendersonville, N. C., are all on the program at the Fletcher Church next Sunday. Other speakers include Judge Thomas A. Jones, Judge James Dixon Murphy, Mrs. William Sydney Porter, Collect for Eleventh Sunday After Trinity.

O God, Who declarest Thy Almighty power chiefly in showing mercy and pity; Mercifully grant unto us such a measure of Thy grace, that we, running the way of Thy Commandments, may obtain Thy gracious promises, and be made partakers of Thy Heavenly treasure; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

I Will Not be Afraid.

Man, with his burning soul,
Has but an hour of breath
To build the ship of truth
In which his soul may sail,
Sail on the sea of death.
For death takes toll
Of beauty, courage, youth.
Of all—but Truth.

Life's city ways are dark,
Men mutter by; the wells
Of the great waters moan.
O death, O sea, O tide,
The waters moan like bells.
No light, no mark,
The soul goes out alone
On seas unknown.

Stripped of all purple robes,
Stripped of all golden lies,
I will not be afraid.
Truth will preserve through death;
Perhaps the stars will arise,
The stars like globes;
The ship my striving made
May see night fade.

That great apostle of freedom, Thomas Jefferson, said, "the earth is inhabited by a thousand million of people, and these profess probably a thousand different systems of thought". He used these words in support of his bill for establishing religious freedom, the first law ever passed by a popular Assembly giving perfect freedom of conscience. It may have been to some extent a rhetorical statement, but all would agree that religion, morals, and social progress are injured by the multiplicity of denominations. Yet there is a certain despairing attitude taken up by many excellent people with reference to the possibility of attaining greater unity in the religious world. It may encourage all such, and stimulate in our own hearts an increased hopefulness as to the realization of the Divine Purpose in the unity of the followers of our Lord, if we look backwards over a hundred years and see what God hath wrought. Such a review will enable us to say triumphantly, in Galileo's words, "The world moves".

Even a hundred years ago the grandfather of my friend and colleague, Hugh Price Hughes, who was an Arminian Wesleyan Methodist preacher, was riding out to his appointment, and was followed along the same road in Wales by a Calvinistic Methodist preacher. The Calvinist would not allow his horse to drink water at the same pool, at which the Arminian's horse had just watered.

And as we reply to the skeptics who doubt whether any great good can come from this gathering at Lausanne for the discussion of Faith and Order, we need not go back even a century to mark the real progress that has been made. It was only in 1884 that the Conference of the Episcopal Church at Chicago set out the Lambeth Quadrilateral and made their first appeal for the reunion of the divided members of the Christian Church. It was in 1888, that Lambeth adopted those proposals, and it was in 1892 that I was privileged to summon the first gathering since the Act of Uniformity in 1662 and the Savoy Conference which preceded that act, of representatives of the Church of England and the Non-conformist Churches to meet and consider how they might draw nearer to each other in the expression of their faith and order of their religious life.

When I first visited America thirty-one years ago, the idea of a Federal Council of the Churches of Christ to work for common ends had not yet appeared above the horizon. It was an entirely new conception when I had the privilege of speaking to assemblies of the clergy, and told them how that in England men were drawing together for social effort. Today, it is not necessary for me in addressing an American audience to stress the importance of such combined work. You are doing magnificent service to religion and the state by your Federal Council, and now it is the turn of the English churches to learn from you in this matter, though it would not be fair to omit a reference to the splendid coordination of the Christian forces which has been achieved in Christian Council of Politics, Economics, and Civics, whose initials have formed the new word, COPEC. Nor is it possible for this review of what has been achieved in the last two generations to fail to notice the culmination, from an international standpoint, of all these endeavors to unity in social reform achieved in the great Universal Conference of Life and Work at Stockholm, eighteen months ago.

Meanwhile, in another continent, great events are happening. The Episcopal Church of India is seeking powers of self-government to break away from its state connection, and these will no doubt shortly be granted. The Episcopal Church in India has for some years entered into close negotiations with the non-Episcopal churches. In South India the movement towards unity has reached a point where definite proposals have been accepted by all parties, which involve the full recognition of the present ministries of the different churches on terms of equality, with the proviso that in fifty years' time, Episcopal ordination shall be universal within the church. This decision has been reached after much heart-searching, and was practically forced upon those who were unwilling to advance so far by the fact that the Indian Christians said in effect, "We cannot be troubled with these European differences. If you will not agree to unity, we must leave you and unite by ourselves".

Many will ask, and rightly ask, "What can the gathering at Lausanne do"? All epigrams must be used with caution. At the same time when we ask what we hope from this Conference, we shall do well to remember the epigram, "We are right in what we affirm; we are wrong in what we deny". The Conference will succeed in so far as it emphasizes the truths of which each Communion is the special guardian. In the religious life, isolation means impoverishment and not enrichment. Just as in the political world nations have their own special attitude and function, the lace makers and silk makers and silk weavers in France, the engineers of mountain railways in Switzerland, the cotton weavers of Lancashire with its moist atmosphere, and the cotton growers of the Southern States with their wonderful sunshine, and each nation is best fulfilling its destiny when it realizes that we are members one of another, and that in the prosperity of each is the well-being of all; so it is in the Christian world. The Quaker with his sense of the inner life, the Methodist with consciousness of the personal assurance of the forgiveness of sins, the Baptist with his strong sense of individual liberty, and the Anglican with his keen historical sense; each has something to teach the other. —Sir Henry Lunn.

*From an address before a luncheon meeting of the Church Club of New York, February 26, 1927.

What Christ Wishes.

There can be no doubt as to what Christ wishes of our Church and of this new Church year. He wishes us to stand fast in the unity of truth and love and to go forward in our clear and common witness to the Gospel of the New Testament, in our loyalty in life and service to the mind of Christ, and in our unceasing effort to win men and women one by one to Him and to make Him known to the whole world.

He calls us individually to pure and faithful and unselfish Christian lives. Paul's relationship and experience were what ours ought to be: "To me to live is Christ", "Christ is my life." These were not mere religious phrases to Paul. They were the most real of all realities. They ought to be realities to us. Why should we not give Christ His central and absolute place in our lives—not some day or in some other world, but now and here?

He calls us to open or to reopen or to consecrate afresh the shrine of family prayer and worship in our homes, to care for the training and Christian teaching of our children with a new conscience and solicitude, to put and keep Christ and His joy and love and confidence at the head and in the heart of all our family life. We ought to solve the problem of divorce in our Church by having none but such teaching and truth of human relationships as shall make all such wretchedness and discord abhorrent and impossible. Love is the will to be unselfish and to serve. Christ is such love. Why call ourselves His Church if we are not willing to make Him and His love supreme in our home life and in every relationship of husband and wife, and parent and child, and friend and friend?

Let us claim this year more of the riches of our Christian faith and life, beauty and reverence, peace and joy, unity and truth within, the enlargement of power and capacity for all that is good and true, the use of the unlimited resources available for all of God's children. "For our sufficiency is of God."

It is a time for clear and assured, convincing and persuasive testimony to the reasonableness of our Christian conviction. We shall get nowhere by abuse or denunciation. But we have a faith to proclaim and we have a reason for it. The views of the world which make God an impossibility and which deny the validity of any witness to miracle are unreasonable views. We hold our belief about Jesus Christ and His life and death, His atoning and redeeming work, and His resurrection and enduring power on reasonable grounds which we can state to men. It is our business to state them and we ought to make this year a time of joyous and contagious witness to our great and living faith.

From all parts of the Church the cry is going up for a great evangelistic advance. Let the cry grow, but let all of us who join in it begin where we are and today. It is not God who is reluctant. We are straitened in ourselves by the timidity of our faith, the slackness of our obedience, the coldness of our zeal, the poverty of our love. May God's fires fall upon us and kindle the ancient altars to a new glow. With a fresh loyalty let us rise up and move

Like a mighty army,
Brethren, we are traveling
Where the saints have trod.

In their footsteps, and seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us and let us run, looking unto Jesus Christ and Him only.—Dr. Robert E. Speer, in The Presbyterian Magazine.

Seven Modern Deadly Sins.

Those who know a little of the Church of the Middle Ages are familiar with the "seven deadly sins" which monks in the monasteries were warned against. In those days some of the fine spirits, such as Francis of Assisi, Bernard of Clairvaux, Savonarola and others, were concerned about the inner life of the individual, and had little to say about the life of the Church as a whole, or of the state of society in general, though Savonarola found that he could not leave the latter untouched. These sins were enumerated as follows: Pride, envy, anger, covetousness, gluttony, lust and sloth—a very formidable array of sins common among the monks and nuns of that day. They are quite conspicuous in the lives of professed followers of Christ today and do much to rob the Church of influence and power.

But we must thank Canon Donaldson, of Westminster Abbey, for a modern list of seven deadly sins which are striking hard at the social fabric of our more complicated civilization of today, and making deep gashes everywhere. They are, as quoted from the Christian Advocate:

1. Policies without principles.
2. Wealth without work.
3. Pleasure without conscience.
4. Knowledge without character.
5. Commerce and industry without morality.
6. Science without humanity.
7. Worship without sacrifice.

No. 1 is a fatal weakness in many popular movements within the State, in society, in business, and even in the Church. Opportunities and time-savers are ever playing with policies, and are adepts at propaganda, but always forgetful of principles.

No. 2 is the besetting sin of millions who gamble with the fruits of other people's sweat and toil, and whose one great aim in life is to escape useful work and life's weightier duties and responsibilities.

No. 3 is the sin which today is doing much to empty our churches, undermine religion and character, and rob the home of happiness and peace.

No. 4 is the deadly sin in our modern system of education. It exalts knowledge at the expense of wisdom, and divorces it from religion and the lofty virtues and ideals that are inseparably bound up with it.

No. 5 goes to the root of what is ethically wrong and rotten in the commercial and industrial world. The question, Is it right in the sight of God and man? is no longer asked in men's corporate business dealings and relationships.

No. 6 states what has gone wrong in the scientific world, where marvelous strides in knowledge and invention have been made, with a consequent loss of the higher values of life as affecting the welfare of man.

No. 7 tells what is wrong with our worship, which in large measure becomes a lip service, and is not followed up with deeds of sacrificial service.—Selected.

The Secret Place.

There is a place where thou canst touch the eyes
Of blinded men to instant perfect sight,
There is a place where thou canst say, "Arise"
To dying captives bound in chains of might.

There is a place where thou canst reach the store
Of hoarded gold and free it for the Lord;
There is a place upon some distant shore
Where thou canst reach the worker or the Word.

There is a place where God's relentless power
Responsive moves to thine insistent plea.
There is a place, a simple trusting place,
Where God Himself descends and fights for thee.

Where is that blessed place? Dost thou ask where?
Oh, soul, it is the secret place of prayer.
—Selected.

Moulding the Souls Around Him.

Is not religion for the poor and illiterate? Is not the way easy to find? Thank God it is so! So little can man do to enlighten it. But he can do something, and he ought to do more. In this more than in anything else he is his brother's keeper. Not for himself does man live. Every action of every man has an ancestry and a posterity—an ancestry and a posterity in other lives. "Each reads his fate in the other's eyes," says Emerson. "I am a part of all that I have met," says Tennyson. And how do you explain that most wonderful phenomenon, which is as surprising a contemplation to some minds as the thought of eternity itself—the silence of God? God keeps silence? And man doubting and sinning and repenting all alone, and groping blindfold after truth, and losing his way and working out his salvation with painful trembling and fear! It is an unfathomable mystery; but may it not be, in small part, just for this that, on the one hand, God offers man the glory and honor of sharing His work; and on the other, that He wishes human souls to be graven with the marks of other human souls in all their free and infinite variety? God is a God of variety. No two leaves are the same, no two sand grains, no two souls. And as the universe would be but a poor affair if every leaf were the counterpart of the oak leaf or the birch, so would the spiritual world present but a sorry spectacle if we were all duplicates of John Calvin. Therefore has God made room for individual action in the building up of His Kingdom upon earth; and therefore it is not a presumption but a duty for every man to be moulding and making the souls around him, to be perfecting and guiding his own faculties for this great work.—An extract from "Spiritual Diagnosis", an essay by Henry Drummond, read before the Theological Society, New College, Edinburgh, November, 1873.

"I've Had My Day."

The young man out of the Northwest who captivated the world by his flight to Paris and by his modest behavior ever since, is keeping up his good record and adding to it on new occasions. He went down the bay of New York along with others to welcome home Byrd and Chamberlin and other flyers who followed him in successful flights across the Atlantic, but he slipped out of the limelight of the public reception, saying: "No, I'm not going along. I've had my day." Fine, was it not? He had had his glory and did not propose to let his presence detract from the glory of his companions in the same achievement. How often may this grace be exercised? Those who blaze with distinction may easily do injustice to others who may be receiving their share of attention by intruding on the occasion and thereby attracting attention to themselves and detracting from others. Former pastors need to be careful of this point in relation to their successors. When a successor is being installed it is proper and desirable when possible that the former pastor should be present and take part in the service, but at the close of the service when the new pastor is receiving the congratulations of his people, should the former pastor start a little reception of his own that may seem to be a rival attraction? Should he also return to his former charge and conduct funerals and marriage ceremonies except with the consent and invitation of his successor? These are sometimes delicate points, and it is well in all of them for the former pastor to remember, "I've had my day".—Presbyterian Banner.

"It is likely our hearts are pure and our intentions spotless when we are not solicitous of the opinion and censures of men, but only that we do our duty and be accepted of God. For our eyes will certainly be fixed there from wence we expect our reward: and if we desire that God should approve us, it is a sign we do His work and expect Him will certainly be fixed there from whence our paymaster.—Jeremy Taylor.

For the Young Folks

Hymn.

Jesus, sun and shield art Thou;
Sun and shield forever!
Never canst Thou cease to shine,
Cease to guard us never.
Cheer our steps as on we go,
Come between us and the foe.

Jesus, love of life art Thou,
Life and love forever!
Ne'er to quicken shalt Thou cease,
Or to love, no never.
All of life and love we need
Is in Thee, in Thee indeed.

Jesus, peace and joy art Thou,
Joy and peace forever!
Joy that fades not, changes not,
Peace that leaves us never.
Joy and peace we have in Thee,
Now and through eternity.

Jesus, song and strength art Thou,
Strength and song forever!
Strength that never can decay,
Song that ceaseth never.
Still to us this strength and song,
Through eternal days prolong.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus as a Host.

M. L. G.

Our Lord knew how hunger feels. He went for forty days without food, "and was afterward an hungered". So when He saw the multitude hungry and faint upon the plain, He was full of pity, and having little, He made that little much, and they were all filled.

It seems to have given Jesus joy to provide for the hunger of His friends, He liked even to think of God's care of the birds—"your heavenly Father feedeth them". He called Himself in wonderful symbolism the Bread from Heaven. He said He would give the living water to all who ask of Him. Though He had no home, He invited one and another to be of His company—Follow Me"! If it was to be wayside fortune, corn rubbed together to eat, a rocking boat to sleep in, His friends were made welcome to what He had.

And at the Last Supper, when no one among the disciples would perform the office of a host, He took the towel and girded Himself and washed their dusty feet. Even with Judas He must share the sop.

It is of the essence of hospitality that a guest be made to feel welcome. And in this Jesus is the Supreme Example of a gracious Host. "Whosoever will" He invites to take of the water of Life freely. Oh, how churlish if His friends refuse!

An Exciting Bit of Sewing.

"I've mended my father's gloves, and he says they are beautifully done," said Marjorie proudly.

"I'm so glad you sew well," said grandmother.

"Did you sew when you were as young as I, grandmother?"

"Oh, yes!" and she began to smile.

"Is it a story?" begged Marjorie.

When I was your age I did quite a remarkable piece of sewing. Perhaps there is time to tell you about it."

"Oh, yes!" cried Marjorie.

"When I was your age," began grandmother. "I was expected to do my daily 'stent' of sewing by piecing quilt blocks. I had a nine patch, I remember, in lovely green sprigged calico and pink gingham. I knew I had to do two patches each day, but one lovely spring afternoon I said to my mother: 'Please may I go to play with the little Crabs. They have three cousins coming today.' Of course you remember, Marjorie, that the little Crabs were children, whose name was Crab.

"But my mother said: 'Emily, show me your patches.'

"They were not done, and I knew there was no play until they were. So I got out my workbag at once. I took a dozen slow stitches with my eyes on the calling birds outside the window, the tiny white clouds sailing before the fresh breeze, the budding trees down by the fence. Then I had a bright thought. If I were out in the midst of it all I could sew much faster.

" 'Mother,' I said, 'please may I go and sit on a log in the woodlot and sew?'

" 'Yes, but don't go out of sight or sound of the house.'

"I ran across the woodlot and chose a log beside the path. By peeping through the pawpaw bushes I could see our side door, and I could hear brother Mark whistling as he worked in the woodshed. It was easier to work out there. When I sat very still two birds went on with their nest building in a bush a dozen feet away. I suppose I looked about a great deal. But at length remembering that if I were to see the little Crabs I must finish that second patch, I bent over and sewed industriously on the little squares.

"The sunlight was suddenly shut off from my work. Looking up I saw before me an Indian in blanket, buckskin and moccasins. I suppose I should have screamed if I had had breath to do it. I opened my mouth, and no sound came. I had several times seen some of the few Indians that remained in our neighborhood, but always when my parents were with me—and from a safe distance. I had been told repeatedly that they would not hurt any one. But people were still living in our neighborhood who had gone through times of Indian warfare, and I had heard tales of daring and danger. The Indian stared at me, and I stared at him. Neither moved nor spoke for a moment. Then my eyes, traveling over the handsome blanket that he wore draped from his shoulders, spied a big three-cornered rent.

"I pointed to it, and said: 'I will mend your shawl.'

"The Indian looked where I pointed. He took off his blanket, and laid it across my knees, with the rent uppermost. I threaded my needle with dark thread and, taking neat little stitches, I sewed up the hole. The Indian stood with folded arms, and watched. My terrified thoughts raced on. What would he do when I was through? Would he carry me away and make me become a little Indian girl? I had heard of such things happening. What he did do surprised me very much. When the last stitch was taken he bent over and inspected the work.

" 'Good!' he said in a loud emphatic voice. 'Thanks!' Then, draping his blanket around him, he went on down the wood path.

"I waited until he was quite out of sight and then raced home. But I didn't tell any one what had happened. I was sure Mark would laugh at me and say he wouldn't be afraid of the Indians.

"A few days later when I came downstairs in the morning I heard my mother talking to some one at the door.

" 'Emily, come here, and see if you know what he means,' she said, turning to me.

"I ran to the door. There was the tall Indian whose blanket I had mended. Oh, dear! Oh, dear! Had he come back for me after all? I clung tightly to my mother.

" 'Heap good little squaw!' said the Indian; and he held out to me a wonderful beaded bag. (You've seen it in my treasure box.) I took it and shyly murmured, 'thank you'—at last realizing that this tall, savage looking man was my friend.

" 'But why do you give it to her?' asked my mother.

"In answer the Indian spread out his blanket, and as I looked at the neatly mended place I was sure that even my mother must call that pretty good sewing.

" 'She make hole no more!' said my Indian friend.

"Then he wrapped the blanket around him and went stepping softly down the path while my excited family demanded that I tell them the story."

"Did he ever come again?" cried Marjorie.

"Oh, yes, he came many times again. And perhaps some time I will tell you some of the stories he told me. He was a lonely old man of the family of a once great chief. The rest of the tribe was gone, but he lingered in his old haunts. He had a wonderful dignity, and if we did him a favor, he felt that he must do something for us. I sewed for him more than once, but that first time was the only occasion when it seemed like an adventure."—Zelia M. Walters, in The Continent.

How Bruce Earned His Watch.

There was no other way to do it. Bruce simply would have to go and take the money to Grandfather Morris. Bruce's father was very ill, and of course his mother could not be spared. The money had to be taken to Chester that very day, and Bruce was the only one who could go. Over and over his mother explained that sometimes robbers took things from people and that he must be very, very careful.

"If Bruce was not such a talker, it would be all right," said the doctor to whom they told their troubles. The doctor did not know that Bruce was in the next room. "I can put him in care of the conductor, and it is only twenty-five miles to Chester, so no harm could befall him, but he may tell the secret to some one.

But Bruce was sure he would not. He was only in the second grade, and he did talk a great deal for one small boy; but if he said he would keep a secret they could count on him.

"I won't say a word, not a single word till I get to Chester and see grandfather. I'll just let them think I'm a little dumb boy like Johnny Harp."

In spite of their troubles they all had to laugh, even sick Mr. Morris. Mrs. Morris stopped laughing to say that if she thought Bruce would do that she would give him the watch he had been working so hard to earn.

"The watch is as good as mine, mother," said Bruce. "Please give it to me right away, so I can tell when to get off the train at Chester. Miss Lucy taught us to tell time on the school clock."

But, of course, no one could go and get a watch when time was so pressing, and then nobody thought Bruce would keep still. The money was made into a flat packet and pinned to his clothes with a big safety pin. He was told over and over not to touch the place where he could feel the packet, but to look out of the window and keep still until the conductor came to put him off.

But nobody could have guessed that that morning the passenger train would run into a freight train and the conductor get badly hurt. After the injured man was taken to the hospital a new man came on, and, of course, he knew nothing of Bruce. Poor Bruce! He was determined to win that watch, but how would he know when he reached Chester? All this time they were going around a strange way to avoid the wreck, and Bruce didn't know a single place. Of course the man would call the name, but he did it so quickly that Bruce could not understand what he said.

"Ticket! Ticket!" said the conductor at Bruce's elbow. "Little boy, where is your mother?"

Not a word from Bruce. Finally a lady across the aisle said: "I think that must be a little deaf and dumb boy, Conductor. He hasn't said a word even when the accident threw him from his seat."

By this time Bruce drew out a little card on which he had printed in tipsy letters C-H-E-S-T-E-R. "Good!" said the conductor. "He may be dumb, but he's not deaf." Then he and the lady laughed, but Bruce looked out of the window.

So presently they rolled into grandfather's town, and the conductor helped him to go down the steps. He and the lady watched, and presently an elderly man grabbed Bruce up and hugged him. The train was just pulling out when they heard a shrill little voice say: "Grandfather, I've got a lot of money pinned to my clothes inside. Mother said if I didn't say a word on the way down here she'd give me a watch, and I've earned it."

And the laughing conductor waved from the platform and said to grandfather: "He's right, mister. We couldn't get a word out of him all the way."

So Bruce won his watch, but grandfather bought it; and when he made the return trip alone he not only wore the watch, but he told all the passengers for three seats around exactly how he had earned it.—Selected.

The Two Treasure-Melons.

Once upon a time in the Empire called the Melon, in a place named Great Melon Village, there lived a poor but honest woman.

One day while she was washing clothes in a pool, a bird wounded by an archer fell into the water. She gently took up the bird. She carried it home, dressed its wound, and fed it till its wing was healed. Then the bird flew away and left her.

But it was a grateful little thing, and did not forget her. A few days later it returned, laid an oval seed before her, then flew away again. The good woman planted the seed in her garden. When it came up she saw that it bore a melon-leaf. The vine grew and grew and grew, so she made a trellis for it to climb. By and by a fruit formed on the vine, and grew and grew and grew, till it was a melon of a huge size.

When the New Year came around the poor, good woman had no money with which to pay her debts. All her neighbors paid theirs at the New Year time. Her poverty weighed so heavily upon her that she became quite ill. While sitting one day, feverish and tired, at her door, she saw that the melon looked ripe and luscious. Her mouth watered to taste it.

She took a knife and cut the fruit from its stem. As she lifted it, the melon clinked in her hands. She hastened to cut it in two, and lo! it was filled with gold and silver pieces. Overjoyed, she paid all her debts and bought herself food and comforts.

Well! near by that good woman's garden, there lived a busybody who craftily found out how her neighbor had suddenly become rich. The busybody was eager to become rich likewise, so each day she washed clothes in the pool, stopping now and then to throw stones at the birds that fluttered over the water. One day she managed to hit a bird on its wing, and to injure the poor little creature. She took it home, and treated it carefully till its wing was healed. Then it flew away.

But the little thing did not forget her. Soon it came back carrying a seed in its beak. It laid the seed down before her and flew away. The greedy old busybody quickly planted the seed. She watched it come up and spread its leaves. She made a trellis for it. A fruit formed on the vine, and it grew and grew and grew into a very huge melon. The busybody kept thinking of all the gold and silver she should have. She ate rich food and bought fine garments, going deeper and deeper into debt.

Well! That melon grew bigger and bigger and bigger and bigger, till the busybody was delighted to see it was ripe. As she shook it, the fruit rattled inside. She hurried to cut it open, when out crawled two lame, hungry beggars, who told her that they were come to stay with her and eat at her table as long as they lived.

And they did!—Wonder Tales from China Seas.

Why the Weather Vane Turned.

Myrtle had come for a visit to her grandmother who lived on a large farm. Her home was in a great city, and everything on the farm seemed wonderful to Myrtle. She could not run fast enough to see all she wanted to see and do all she wanted to do. Each turn she took brought some new wonder. At last she stopped for breath and dropped down on the steps to rest.

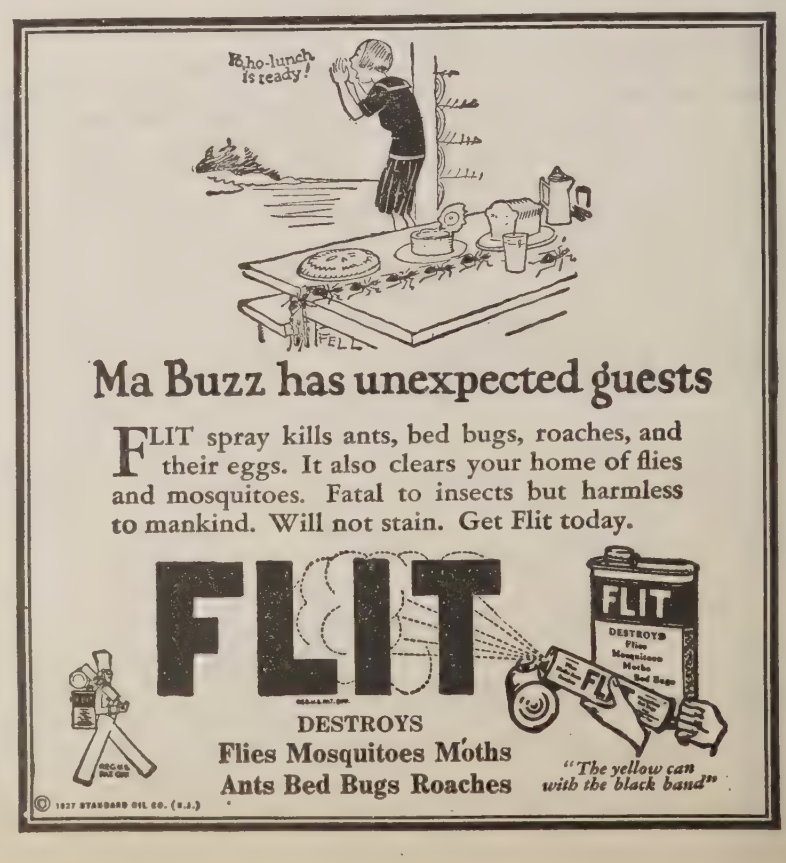
"Look, Mamma!" she called. "See that chicken on the pole on the barn."

Just then a breeze made the weather vane turn around.

"Quick, Mamma, see!" she cried. "It heard me and turned to look at me."

"Oh, no, Myrtle," her mother smiled as she explained. "The chicken tells us which way the wind blows. Whenever the wind changes, it turns around so we know it too."

"Oh, dear," said Myrtle, "does it have to mind, too."



"Yes," said her mother, "it has to mind the wind, and turn around whenever the wind tells it to."

"Does everything and everybody have to mind, Mamma?"

"Yes, darling," answered her mother, "everything must do the right thing at the right time or there would be a great deal of trouble and many people hurt."

"Do the flowers have to mind, too?"

tell the flower what to do. But the flower knows just what to do, and it isn't so hard for it to mind as it is for us when we want to do just as we please."

"Do you have to mind, Mamma?" asked Myrtle with surprise.

"Yes, dear," said her mother. "I must mind God, for He knows just what I must do. He plans everything, and all of us are happier when we do just as the weather vane did—obey."—L. K. Merritt, in Child's Gem.

Old Ships.

Anne Pierce.

Old ships that idly drift and swing,
Their duty over their life work done.
Where no sail lifts and no bell rings
And quiet reigns from sun to sun.

Into that peace what bright dreams come
Of flying scud and towering wave.
Of billowing sail, of face like foam
Of peaceful lull and winds that rave.

Of men long gone that nobly sailed
That trod these decks with footsteps bold,
Who lived and sailed and never quailed
From any hand that fate might hold.

So rest in peace and so grow old
The evening shades draw on apace
The hearts that loved you have grown cold
And waits for you in their resting place.

Deaths

REV. GEORGE W. McDANIEL, D. D.

There has just passed from the religious life of Richmond a leader of the old evangelical faith. Death has released GEORGE McDANIEL, in the prime of life, from a faithful service of Christ, to be with his Lord in paradise.

Coming, as he did, from the South over twenty years ago, he took up his work in the oldest and strongest Baptist church in Virginia. His faith and courage were soon felt and many souls came to God through his preaching and ministrations. An old church became youthful and its missionary zeal reached a high point in its history. Four or five years after he came to Richmond the Chapman-Alexander revival, a city-wide movement, united eighty of the white churches in a common cause. The Baptist churches, under the leadership of Dr. McDaniel, made large additions to their communion. The preaching of Christ crucified proved again to be the power of God to save, as it will always be.

The youthful pastor accepted the New Testament as the final revelation of God through Christ. He believed the testimony of the fourth gospel that Jesus proclaimed Himself to be the Son of God, who could give eternal life, "For as the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself". He believed that St. Paul knew what he said when he preached, "not the wisdom of men, but Christ, the power of God", "declared to be the Son of God . . by the resurrection from the dead".

Evangelical preachers are needed in the Church today. Leaders of men who can believe and proclaim the riches of the gospel of Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit are gifts of God to His Church. S.

WILLIAM CONWAY WHITTLE, JR.

"He asked life of Thee, and Thou gavest him a long life, even forever and ever." WILLIAM CONWAY WHITTLE, JR., entered the Larger Life Beyond on Tuesday night, August 2d, at his native city, Norfolk, Virginia. He was born June 27, 1881, in the fine old house which has been the home of his family for generations. He was the son of the late Captain and Mrs. Wm. Whittle; his mother, Elizabeth Calvert L. Page. Thus he was descended Richard L. Page. Thus he was descended from the leading families of both Upper and Lower Virginia. He was educated at the University of Virginia, and returning home from there had been in business in Norfolk ever since. He married Miss Georgiana Randolph Charrington, of Warrenton, Virginia, and they had three children: William Conway Whittle, Georgiana Charrington Whittle and Beverley Randolph Whittle, who, with their mother, are all living in Norfolk. He is also survived by his four sisters, Mrs. J. Cabell Dabney and Misses Alexina, Elizabeth and Mona Whittle.

His death is a loss irreparable not only to family and friends, but to his church and community; for to a home life of the perfect type, he added a completeness that makes for love and influence to all who knew him, a Galahad among men; who could but love and delight in his warm and genial manner full of simple, unconscious charm; his loyal, untiring friendships; his quick, helpful sympathy; his utter integrity of word and deed; his quiet, unswerving Christian life. He was devoted to his church, St. Luke's, in which he was born, and where he grew to manhood under the teachings of the Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, where he served as vestryman through many years (though his whole life has been but a short one), and where every Sunday one saw his dignified, noble face and tall, stately form, sitting in the old fashioned way together with his wife and children and one knew that his prayer was ever for the best of the Spirit's gifts for the Church he so steadfastly loved.

The love and high respect shown by the whole community in its grief at his loss is challenging proof of the worth of quietly living a fine Christian life, faithful as son, husband, father, brother, friend, citizen, Christian. He was the very flowering of his fine forbears himself a priceless legacy and inspiration to his children.

"He scarce had need to doff his pride or slough the dross of earth—
E'en as he trod that day to God so walked he from his birth,
In simpleness and gentleness and honor and clean mirth."

ALASKA.

Rt. Rev R. T. Rowe, D. D., Bishop.

Laying of the Cornerstone, St. Elizabeth's Mission, St. John's Parish.

A great day, beautified by glorious sunshine, was celebrated Sunday, July 24, 1927 in Ketchikan, Alaska. On this day at three o'clock in the afternoon, the cornerstone of St. Elizabeth's Mission was laid.

It was a great day, because it marked two significant steps in the progress of the native people of Southeastern Alaska. It marked the beginning of a condition of self-reliance, in that this mission has its own native minister, Mr. Paul J. Mather, and its own native vestry. Every timber and board in the building has been placed there by native hands. Not a white man has been called to lift his hand in the erection of the church or parish hall.

It also marked the beginning of a new relationship with the white population. The city turned out as a whole to greet this step of concrete progress. The State of Washington Grand Lodge of Masons deputized the local lodge to assist in the laying of the cornerstone. The Ketchikan City Band volunteered its services.

Holy Communion was celebrated at St. John's in the morning. In the afternoon a procession was formed in the churchyard at St. John's. The Ketchikan Band, the vestries of St. Elizabeth's and St. John's, Crucifer, Flag Bearer and clergy followed by the officers and members of Ketchigan Masonic Lodged, marched a mile to St. Elizabeth's Mission, where the cornerstone, brought from the home of the Tsimpshean people, Metlakatla, was laid.

St. John's choir furnished the music, the Rev. Paul J. Mather read the prayers, Brother Casper Mather addressed the natives in Tsimpshean and Archdeacon H. R. Sanborn blessed the stone. Then Mr. Alex Guthrie, native, superintendent of construction and senior warden of St. Elizabeth's, turned to the Grand Master of the Lodge and gave to him his level, square, plumb and trowel, requesting the lodge to lay the stone.

Upon the completion of the work of the lodge, Mr. J. R. Heckman, a pioneer cannery man and president of the largest bank, delivered the address of the day. It was replete with memories of the work of our beloved Bishop Rowe, and challenged the natives to build upon the sure foundation of Christ as exemplified in the foundations Bishop Rowe had laid for the Kingdom in Alaska.

Mrs. J. R. Heckman has taken great interest in the work of the mission and has devoted her time and money to its advancement. She provided many flowers (which are very precious in Alaska) for the decoration of mission for the occasion.

Two hundred feet of motion picture film were taken of this event and we hope to be able to show it to the Church in the United States together with films covering our whole missionary activity.

Crystalized Memories

"Man is of few days. He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not."

SUCH quotations constantly remind us of the short duration of life. But the memories of our loved ones who have passed on will continue to live in our hearts.

The monuments we select to maintain these memories, should be cut from a stone which will properly carry to many generations to come the messages entrusted to them. This means stone of durability, beauty, contrast and strength. Granite is the only stone which meets such requirements and many granites fail.

Winnsboro Blue Granite

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful, and inscriptions on it the most legible.

Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes that resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Write for Free descriptive literature, also for facsimile reproduction of a polished sample of Winnsboro Blue Granite that you may see its beauty. When you have purchased a monument specifying Winnsboro Blue Granite write us giving name of your Memorial Merchant, and we will send you a polished Winnsboro Blue Granite paper weight.

On one occasion I met a mountaineer on a by path and asked him what he was then doing. "Wuking for the same ole Coperation, the old 'oman and the chilluns". So am I, as you see.

When compelled to give up Missionary work in the mountains by bad health of myself and wife I sought out this near Colonial Church—it sent a delegate to Council in 1779—set off here in the country by itself and continued the Missionary work.

The Church and Rectory, after thirty years without a Rector, have been renovated and restored at a cost of $2,500, all paid—but it has about exhausted our resources.

The pressing need for Rural Work are Parish Houses or halls for conferences, lectures, recreation, etc.

Please help us to get one for St. Luke's. Send checks to me.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Duty may be declined, it cannot be ignored."

If God shows you a need He will show you a way to meet it.

Charity is the scope of all God's command.—Chrysostom.

Selfishness is the making a man's self his own centre, the beginning and end of all he does.—John Owen.

"Begin the Christian race from the Cross, and whenever you faint or grow weary, look back to it."

Self-expression and the expression of selfishness are in the gravest danger of being confused by young and old alike.

Other things may be seized by might or purchased with money, but knowledge can be gained only by study.—Johnson.

"If to be a Christian means to live like Christ, then I hope that you will all become Christians."—A Hindu Judge to fellow Hindus.

St. Paul as a young Christian thought he was the least of the apostles; later, the least of the Saints; and still further on the chief of sinners.—Selected.

Sure I am, it is better to be sick, providing Christ come to the bedside and draw the curtains and say, "Courage, I am thy salvation", than to enjoy health, and never to be visited of God. —Samuel Rutherford.

"Who would be cleansed from every sin,
Must to God's altar bring
The whole of life—its joys, its tears,
Its hopes, its loves, its powers, its years,
The will and every cherished thing."

Blessed is the man that beholdeth the face of a friend in a far country;
The darkness of his heart is melted in the dawning of day within him.
It is like the sound of sweet music heard long ago and half forgotten.
It is like the coming back of birds to a wood when winter is ended.
I knew not the sweetness of the fountain till I found it flowing in the desert.
Nor the value of a friend till we met in a land that was crowded and lonely.

CONTACTS

Even those of us who live secluded lives are surprised as we look back along the years to realize the number of persons with whom we have been in contact. Those whose spheres have been in busy places, with varied work, may number our contacts by thousands.

There is pathos and wonder in our contacts as they have happened and ended. From childhood on we find, develop and lose intimacies. Those who for longer or shorter times have been important parts of our lives, almost parts of ourselves, in our thought continually, our daily routines revolving about them, die, or go away or are estranged and presently we remember them only at intervals, becoming wider with passing time. As they with us, so we with them, if they be living. We become dim in their memories. Yet each of them has left some impress on us, as we have on each of them.

How all these people remember us, what we have given them, of good or evil, by which to remember us, is worth some thought. Consideration of it may give us guidance for our future contacts. Some persons carry pollution by their every contact, their very presence—speech profane, bestial, obscene, conduct boastfully foul and base. Others radiate and confer purity and beauty, modesty and honor, all the atmosphere about them made fragrant and restful as a gentle wind blowing over a bank of violets. How has it been with each of us, as we look back? How shall we make our future contacts?

At every human contact, surely in every intimacy, we sow seeds in living hearts. Tares, or sound and wholesome grain, to bear some twenty, some a hundred fold in a future far beyond our imagination to penetrate? Many tiny mustard seeds of word spoken or deed done or even expression or gesture, has yielded fruit more splendid than has come from the largest benevolences. There is no need to be preaching or proclaiming piety continually. A moment of silence sometimes may be more eloquent and effective than an hour of rhetoric. Most of us have the good fortune to know those whose mere intonation and manners of speaking and listening are inspirations, who leave all with whom they are in contact, for long while or short, at least, a little better and happier for the meeting. All of us enjoy and honor that lovely quality when we find it. All of us, by faithful watchfulness and striving and the help of the Almighty Power, can acquire it.

Alfred B. Williams.

"STYLE"

"Why, d' you reckon Jim's folks sent him t' ——— university?"

The question was asked, wonderingly, referring to a jovial, blustering fellow, duplication in real life of Jack Falstaff, never known to look into a book nor to talk of anything but current local happenings, his last poker game, or his more or less disreputable adventures. All the infinitely varied realms of literature and thought and of study and observation of the beauties and interests of nature and the glories and charms of the arts and sciences were closed to him.

"For style" was the answer, as exactly true as sententious and cynical.

Jim had been sent to the university that he might say he had been there, add the prestige of the institution to his scanty equipment and provide his family with the style of having a representative there. The result was to give him some new unprofitable associations. He squeezed through, or was squeezed through, somehow, with none of his faults or weaknesses or dangerous inclinations corrected, without definite purpose, his standards of living lowered rather than raised, his lines of thought crude and childish as before. So he lived and died, tolerated, with never a real friend nor a definite enemy. Strength of will and mind and distinct opinions and aims are required to enjoy the equal luxuries of attracting affection and confidence and incurring hostilities. Jim did no good in the world, meant no harm, but did some, within his narrow sphere, by looseness of living and talking, dwelling precariously just within the outer rim of respectability.

Yet he had attractions of appearance and personality and quickness of mind which by right training and direction would have made him useful. If he had been entrusted to earnest, honest and wise instructors, intent on making the best of what he had, able to think of a student beyond recitations and attendance on lectures, interested in teaching himself betterment rather than regard for style, he might have left some heritage of good.

This time of year those charged with responsibility for the future of young men and women should be considering the records and output of scholastic institutions. How many anarchists, atheists, profligates, ostentatious vulgarians, are among their alumni? We read many reports of student suicides. When professors impress on plastic minds that God is a nebulous and dubious theory and the Saviour a questionable historical personage, that man has no duties but to himself and no future nor hope beyond the cemetery, crazes, heresies, horrible perversions, despondent convictions of the futility of living and struggling, are natural consequences. No task given us is more solemnly serious than that of selecting training places for our youth. Those who allow themselves to be governed in that choice by considerations of style or name or size of enrollment or athletic standing, or by anything but quality of the instructors, prevalent tone and known results, take fearful risks of wasting human material and inviting disappointments and bitter griefs. Some faculties teach fads and whims and style and thereby betray the most sacred of all trusts. Some seek faithfully to build character and usefulness on foundations of sound knowledge carefully inculcated to absorption and digestion and high standards diligently culivated.

This is the time for many to choose between them.

Alfred B. Williams.

WHAT EVANGELICAL RELIGION IS

By Bishop J. C. Ryle

TO the question "what Evangelical Religion is?" the simplest answer I can give is to point out what appear to be its leading features. These I consider to be five in number.

(a) The first leading feature in Evangelical Religion is the absolute supremacy it assigns to Holy Scripture, as the only rule of faith and practice, the only test of truth, the only judge of controversy.

Its theory is that man is required to believe nothing as necessary to salvation, which is not read in God's Word written, or can be proved thereby. It totally denies that there is any other guide for man's soul, co-equal or co-ordinate with the Bible. It refuses to listen to such arguments as "the Church says so"—"the Fathers say so"—"primitive antiquity says so"—"Catholic tradition says so"—"the Councils say so"—"the ancient liturgies say so"—"the Prayer Book says so"—"the universal conscience of mankind says so"—"the verifying light within us says so"—unless it can be shown that what is said is in harmony with Scripture.

The supreme authority of the Bible, in one word, is one of the cornerstones of our system. Show us anything plainly written in that Book, and, however trying to flesh and blood, we will receive it, believe it, and submit to it. Show us anything, as religion, which is contrary to that Book, and, however specious, plausible, beautiful, and apparently desirable, we will not have it at any price. It may come before us endorsed by Fathers, schoolmen, and Catholic writers—it may be commended by reason, philosophy, science, the inner light, the verifying faculty, the universal conscience of mankind. It signifies nothing. Give us rather a few plain texts. If the thing is not in the Bible, deducible from the Bible, or in manifest harmony with the Bible, we will have none of it. Like the forbidden fruit, we dare not touch it, lest we die. Our faith can find no resting-place except in the Bible, or in Bible arguments. Here is rock: all else is sand.

(b) The second leading feature in Evangelical Religion is the depth and prominence it assigns to the doctrine of human sinfulness and corruption.

Its theory is that in consequence of Adam's fall, all men are as far as possible gone from original righteousness, and are of their own natures inclined to evil. They are not only in a miserable, pitiable, and bankrupt condition, but in a state of guilt, imminent danger, and condemnation before God. They are not only at enmity with their Maker and have no title to heaven, but they have no will to serve their Maker, no love to their Maker, and no meetness for heaven.

We hold that a mighty spiritual disease like this requires a mighty medicine for its cure. We dread giving the slightest countenance to any religious system of dealing with man's soul, which even seems to encourage the notion that his deadly wound can be easily healed. We dread fostering man's favorite notion that a little church-going and sacrament-receiving—a little patching, and mending, and whitewashing, and gilding, and polishing, and varnishing, and painting the outside—is all that his case requires. Hence we protest with all our heart against formalism, sacramentalism, and every species of mere external or vicarious Christianity. We maintain that all such religion is founded on an inadequate view of man's spiritual need. It requires far more than this to save, or satisfy, or sanctify, a soul. It requires nothing less than the Blood of God the Son applied to the conscience, and the grace of God the Holy Ghost entirely renewing the heart. Man is radically diseased, and man needs a radical cure. I believe that ignorance of the extent of the fall, and of the whole doctrine of original sin, is one grand reason why many can neither understand, appreciate, nor receive Evangelical Religion. Next to the Bible, as its foundation, it is based on a clear view of original sin.

(c) The third leading feature of Evangelical Religion is the paramount importance it attaches to the work and office of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the nature of the salvation which He has wrought out for man.

Its theory is that the eternal Son of God, Jesus Christ, has by His life, death, and resurrection, as our Representative and Substitute, obtained a complete salvation for sinners, and a redemption from the guilt, power, and consequences of sin, and that all who believe on Him are, even while they live, completely forgiven and justified from all things—are reckoned completely righteous before God—are interested in Christ and all His benefits.

We hold that nothing whatever is needed between the soul of man the sinner and Christ the Saviour, but simple childlike faith, and that all means, helps, ministers, and ordinances are useful just so far as they help this faith, but no further—but that rested in and relied on as ends and not as means, they become downright poison to the soul.

We hold that an experimental knowledge of Christ, crucified and interceding, is the very essence of Christianity, and that in teaching men the Christian religion we can never dwell too much on Christ Himself, and can never speak too strongly of the fulness, freeness, presentness, and simplicity of the salvation there is in Him for every one that believes.

Not least, we hold most firmly that the true doctrine about Christ is precisely that which the natural heart most dislikes. The religion which man craves after is one of sight and sense, and not of faith. An external religion, of which the essence is "doing something",—not an inward and spiritual one, of which the essence is "believing", this is the religion that man naturally loves. Hence we maintain that people ought to be continually warned not to make a Christ of the Church, or of the ministry, or of the forms of worship, or of baptism, or of the Lord's Supper. We say that life eternal is to know Christ, believe in Christ, abide in Christ, have daily heart communion with Christ, by simple personal faith—and that everything in religion is useful so far as it helps forward that life and faith, but no further.

HARMONY OF SCIENCE AND RELIGION

By Professor Francis H. Smith, D. C. L.

OUR age is many sided. It is characterized by different names from different standpoints, and each name may hold a partial truth. The man in a hurry calls it a mechanical age, with much ground for his epithet. The financier says it is a money-getting age, and surely there are richer men, and many more of them, than the world ever knew before. The statesman calls it the age of advancing political freedom, for dynasties are crumbling or quickly changing, and democracy is pervading the earth. The preacher calls it the age of missions, and the very ends of the world do seem to have become our neighbors.

Many students would be apt to pass by all these aspects, and call it the age of criticism.

Many leaders of thought in our times show a marked tendency to question fundamental statements. Propositions, which for centuries have been accepted as established truth by thinking men, are abruptly summoned before the tribunal of criticism and subjected to merciless examination. No creed is so venerable or so dear, that some art student of our day does not challenge its validity, and end, it may be by denying its accuracy. Nay, some critics are so rash, that they seem to regard age as synonymous with error, so that if a statement be old it must to them, of necessity, be wrong. The ultra-radical is as unreasonable as the ultra-conservative. To be old is not necessarily to be either good or bad; but that a proposition has been accepted by generations of thoughtful men and used by them with advantage, is surely no reason for rejecting it, but seems to entitle it to respectful treatment.

The criticism of which we speak has almost always been destructive. This appears to give it a fascination for a great body of restless men who are not leaders themselves, but who are ready to follow those who have the courage and the ability to assail accepted beliefs. These ardent recruits occupy our platforms and our presses with statements often far more positive than would be made by their masters, and so it comes to pass that timid conservatives are everywhere filled with apprehensions that have little or no real foundation. When the smoke of the battle has cleared away, and "the tumult and the shouting dies", it may be found that all that is best in the old remains unshaken and is set into clearer light by the happy removal of what was really unessential rubbish.

No department of human thought has been exempt from this search among its foundations. Even the oldest and simplest of the sciences has had its postulates questioned, and some of its most venerable conclusions denied. We were always safe, we supposed, in taking a straight line to be the shortest distance between two points, but we are taught by no less a man than Helmholtz that there are easily conceivable environments even in Euclidean space, in which the proposition would not be axiomatic but false. That a closed surface could not be turned inside out without rupture, is a proposition so elementary and self-evident that it appears to need no demonstration: but that is, a modern geometer will tell us, because we limit ourselves to space of only three dimensions, and that it would be quite possible in space of four dimensions. Again, when we were boys we were taught in chemistry that there were certain bodies called "elements", because they had up to that time defied all the efforts of men to decompose them, and moreover that it was highly improbable that, on this planet, they would ever be reduced to other and simpler bodies. Alchemy was regarded by the mass of scientists as the dream of a dark age and its pursuit as a foolish waste of time. When a great man, Dumas, and later a greater one, Faraday, confessed that they had experimented on the transmutation of inferior metals into gold, their readers were surprised, and received the acknowledgment as an apology, which it was doubtless meant to be. So firmly established and widely accepted was the belief that the elementary bodies were really undecomposable, that no less an authority than Clerk-Maxwell (who was not a chemist, however) declared in an important paper only thirty years ago that they were outside of the sphere of evolution, and were as old in the universe as matter itself. Sir John Herschel had before this in his classical Discourse on the Study of Natural Philosophy, maintained that the elementary bodies bore the marks of "manufactured articles" in an identity and permanency of properties for each that only things made to be so by superior outside direction ever showed. It is true that in the same decade with Maxwell, Sir William Crookes who, in two instances at least had the distinction of anticipating discovery by announcements received with incredulity by his contemporaries, amazed us by suggesting a genetic relation between the elements as pointed to by the Periodic Law. Yet it remained for the Twentieth Century really to effect a downward transmutation of a body regarded as an element into one known to be such; namely of uranium into radium with actinium as a branch element and of radium into possible polonium with helium on the way, and more recently of copper when in presence of radium into lithium and sodium, as Professor Ramsay is inclined to believe. Fancy, as often happens, is far out-running fact, and enthusiasts leaping out of sight in front of real pioneers are rashly turning in imagination our silver into lead and our gold into copper by a kind of anti-alchemy.

Similar striking instances could be adduced of the upturning of fundamental propositions in Physics, which is not more safe than Chemistry from the skepticism of our times. The same is doubtless true of the more advanced and higher sciences. The biologists, the teachers of ethics, economies, and of social science, nay, even those who deal with letters and art could give in their own special lines many instances of that spirit in our age which holds nothing, however widely accepted, as being free from challenge.

This intellectual activity is not in itself to be deprecated. It is a necessary concomitant of freedom of thought. Our age is in some important respects a youthful and, therefore, a growing age. Its hunger for new truth, like the unappeasable and often inconvenient appetite of a hearty boy, is at once a sign and condition of health. We cannot stop it if we would, and ought not if we could. Truth only is sacred, not age or assent, for truth is the coveted goal of all honest effort in any world. It is the food of the Soul and the Voice of God. We pardon rashness or roughness, if the critic finally leads us to truth. We only venture to desire in him three qualities: a reverence that recognizes the debt we owe to the generations of great and wise men who have lived before us, and that will not flippantly assail conclusions which they have reached and tested, especially as regards matters in which the phenomena were as open to them as to ourselves; a humility which recognizes the critic's own limitations and the possible errancy of the most honest mind; which also realizes that in our condition, the highest truths may not be matters of demonstration but of intuition; and, finally, a love of truth which disdains mere applause and despises the seeking for it; which will keep him from confounding attack upon error with attack upon the errorist, and finally will announce his success, should it come, with neither conceit nor arrogance.

THE CALL TO UNITY

By the Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, D. D., at Lausanne Conference

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.—John 17:20-23.

THE call to unity is from God to man. It is for our good that the appeal is made. Through unity alone can the Kingdom of God be set up among men. Through unity alone can the world believe and know that the Father has sent Jesus Christ to reveal Himself to the whole human race. It stands as the unalterable condition on which He can fulfil His mission to mankind. This no one doubts who accepts Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour.

Like all God's calls it is an invitation to cooperate with Him. His will is part of His nature and is set once for all time. He lays no compulsion on us. He awaits our cooperative response which will lay hold of His will and make it our own. If unity has slipped away from our grasp it is the common fault of the Christian world. If it is to be regained it must be by the concerted action of all Christians. Every section has shared in shattering unity. Every section must share in the effort to restore it.

The call to unity is like the flow of a river. It never ceases. It has been sounding with varying accent through the successive generations since the beginning. To us it has of late come with new force through the voice of God's Spirit speaking to the many divided communions of our day, as the call of a shepherd to his scattered flock. We have responded to His call. We are gathered here at His bidding. He presides over us. In proportion to our obedience to His guidance we shall be able to promote His will and embrace it as our own. He appeals to us to hush our prejudices, to sit lightly to our opinions, to look on the things of others, as though they were our very own—all this without slighting the convictions of our hearts or our loyalty to God. It can be done. It must be done.

It is for conference, not controversy, that we are called. As God appeals to us sinners to reason together with Him, so we Christians mutually appeal to one another for a like fellowship. Conference is a measure of peace; controversy, a weapon of war. Conference is self abasing; controversy exalts self. Conference in all lowliness strives to understand the viewpoint of others; controversy, to impose its views on all comers. Conference looks for unities; controversy exaggerates differences. Conference is a cooperative method for conflict; controversy, a divisive method. I do not say there may not be occasions where controversy may be necessary. This is not one of them. This is a conference on Faith and Order. We are pledged to it by our presence. Let us play true to our tryst.

It is the call of Christ which arrests us. What He said then with human voice He repeats now through His indwelling Spirit. The general need of unity it set down by Him in a proverbial saying: "Every Kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." This is as true today as when it was first uttered. It has been accepted by the world of men as applying to every department of life in its separate groupings, political, intellectual, scientific, social. In increasingly wide circles men are striving for unity. Lying at the centre of all and providing the only enduring cement is religious unity.

The Gospel provides for intimate relationship with Christ. Our Lord speaks as He thinks. He thinks in terms of reality. All life is a symbol. He declares that of which it is symbolic. So He says not "I am like the vine, we are like the branches" but "Abide in me and I in you. . . I am the vine, ye are the branches". Nature in its simplest manifestations preaches its eternal sermon, points to Him for whom it exists.

Again, have you not noted how to the very end of His ministry Jesus Christ presents Himself and those whom He commissions in pastoral terms? It is not "I am like the good shepherd". He is the reality of which the men who watched their flocks were the shadow. It is "I am the good shepherd". "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one flock, one shepherd". The Shepherd can fold His flock only if He lays down His life in bringing them together. "Therefore," He says, "doth the Father love me." He lays His life on His aim.

All this was counted as axiomatic even before the Gospels were written. St. Paul writing when the Gospel was oral, strikes sectarianism of all ages between the eyes by calling divisions "carnal"—"for whereas there is among you envying and strife and divisions, are ye not carnal and walk as men? For while one saith, I am of Paul; and other I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal? . . . . For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Division in the eyes of this intense man is fatal to the life of the Church.

What I am about to quote is as familiar to you as anything in Scripture, but I repeat it as signifying at the earliest beginning of Christianity the mind of Christ on the indispensability of unity as read by His great apostle. Now it is the human body that is the symbol of which Christ and His Church represent the reality. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member but many . . . Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular." Again, the Church is spoken of as a household "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus Himself being the chief corner stone", or as a temple, or as the holy city, the heavenly Jerusalem. In every instance the symbol has unity as essential to its existence as light and heat are to the sun. So inherent is unity that it can admit of no racial, sex, or social distinctions but all are "one man in Christ Jesus".

But there are still greater heights towards which we must rise. Either in the words of our Lord Himself, or of the Spirit of our Lord speaking through a disciple in the early second century—it is all one—the kind of unity which the Church must exhibit is that which unites the Father to the Son. Earthly imagery is inadequate and heaven is called to bear its witness. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me." If our Lord counts unity a necessity, how absolute must that necessity be! Upon it depends our ability to know Jesus Christ in His full splendor, to do His works, to evangelize the nations. The missionary quality of this prayer is passionate —"that the world may believe that thou hast sent me . . . that the world may know that thou hast sent me." What a challenge to Christendom to set its own house in order before it further infect the Eastern world with sectarianism that robs the Gospel of its corporate power and gives people a stone instead of bread! The hundred missionary societies in China today are as suicidal for Christianity as the civil divisions are to her national peace and prosperity.

Jesus Christ revealed by His life on earth exactly what the unity was between Himself and His Father. It is not so mystical as to be unintelligible to the simple-hearted. We are not left as workmen without a pattern for their task. The kind of oneness exhibited by Christ with His Father on earth is clear beyond dispute—a paternal and filial relationship, and a liberty reached through absolute dependence consummated by supreme sacrifice. If individuals and groups were to practice these two principles, disunion would fade away like snow before a summer sun. When all Christians recognize God as Father and look on the things of others as of brothers, the family of God will be complete, a glorious Church without spot or wrinkle.

God calls man to unity—His ideal. Man calls to God for unity—his need. There are patches of unity already, it is true, in an underlying loyalty to Christ. But not enough to make Christianity effective as a peace maker, a liberator, a universal power, or to satisfy the mind of God.

Some countries have a minimum of division at home, especially when there is a State Church. But such countries add to the rival denominations which split Christ in the mission field, and Christianity contradicts itself as a world religion. In other countries, as in America, churches of every sort and every name obtain. The evil effect is most evident in rural districts where the churchgoing population is divided into impoverished rival groups without moral and spiritual potency. The Christian religion is often degraded into a weak philosophy, incompetent and futile. Some churches claim exclusive possession of the truth as found in Christ and damn those who find other interpretations of His life and teaching. The result is that not fifty per cent of the population even profess to be followers of Jesus Christ, many of them because they are sadly perplexed and mystified by jangling claims and voices. Churches which have no real reason for holding apart still adhere to their shibboleths. Federative effort continues where organic unity is the only logical step. There is no one voice coming with force from every pulpit in every country, as there should be, on such great fundamental questions as peace and war, what constitutes Christian marriage, the social claims of Christ, the supra-national character of the Church. The Christ in one Church often categorically denies the Christ in a neighboring Church. It would be ludicrous were it not tragic. The situation is suicidal and we are here as a solemn protest against it. We try to get together in matter of practical import but as often as not we find ourselves thrown back on our conception of Christ, the nature of the Church, God's mode of governing His Church, the substance of the Gospel message. Christiology may not be slighted. The value of theology must be admitted. The history of Christianity must be studied, if we are to get anywhere.

Were there no call to man from God to unity, our need would none the less make its high protest to God in heaven for unity. But we would be hopeless and helpless in the organized confusion to which we are party. It is God who takes the lead. His will that they may all be one must eventually be man's will if to do God's will becomes the passion of the human heart. When Christians accept Christ as supreme, they cannot but walk as companions and friends. His life as portrayed in the Gospels is His reliable teaching. His words as interpreted by His life are final and our duty to obey becomes our privilege, our joy. It is to encourage such faith in God made manifest in the flesh that we are in conference. That is the meaning of faith rather than a form of sound words, however important they may be. To quote the words of Zinzendorf—"I have but one passion. It is He! only He"! Men like Sadhu Sindar Singh, Mahatma Gandhi, and Stanley Jones are helping us to realize this more and more. In proportion as we rally around the living Christ during these days shall we banish our prejudices, enlighten our understanding, and correct our mistakes.

Again, as to the means of establishing intimate relationship with Jesus Christ—for that is our chief quest and goal, is it not?—we dare not be exclusive in sacramental, in mystical, or in intellectual modes of approach. Christ's agile feet journey to the human heart along many and diverse paths. That He comes by these and innumerable other routes who will deny?

After all it is not these central principles that should give us great difficulty. Rather is it that which lies at the circumference—the government of the Church, or order. Personally I should be well content were we to let this last vexed subject lie for the present. We cannot pretend that it is unimportant. By means of it the Church is held together in the fulness of organic life, world-wide and all embracing. But we cannot in our brief conference cover the whole vast field. Moreover, in that conciliar action did not break unity, conciliar action cannot mend it. May it not be that, all other things being settled, we will grow into it as did the early Church?

But I must close. We are living in a world that lost its way. Religion as summed up in Jesus Christ can alone hope to rescue it. It must be, as God's voice has warned us from the beginning, and our own experience has tragically confirmed, unified religion. God has used, beyond anything we had a right to expect, our divided Christendom. But now that we know the sin and disaster of sectarianism we cannot hope that He will use it much longer. All time lies before us. Let us keep the purpose of unity firm in our hearts.

God's Spirit is presiding over us to make us will and do His good pleasure. It is He that will change for us, in His own way and in His own time, the impossible into the possible, and bring about that consummation of Christian hope in a Church that will be one flock under one Shepherd.

CHURCH UNITY---GREAT WORLD ISSUE

By the Reverend Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

EVERY question bearing on the need for a united Church—what constitutes the Church, the Church's message to the world, the Church's creed and ministry—was discussed by leading spokesmen of nearly every branch of the Christian religion, assembled at the great World Conference on Unity, in the beautiful Swiss city of Lausanne, August 3 to 21. The conference drew together the very cream of Christian leadership not only from America and England, but from Alexandria, Jerusalem and Antioch; not only from Germany, France and Holland, but from Australia, Bulgaria, India, China and Japan, Greece and Armenia—and also from Scotland, Ireland, Sweden, and, in fact, every part of the world.

Bishop Manning, of the Episcopal Church, deplored the absence of the Roman representation, and called on the conference to invite Roman people and Churchmen all over Christendom to offer up their prayers to God for the ultimate unity of the whole Christian brotherhood.

There was considerable excitement today (August 11) when the conference was called on to hear the report of Section No. Two on the Messages of the Church and to receive this report for discussion. The plan adopted was to divide the conference into four sections and to discuss the various subjects already announced, behind closed doors—then to submit to the body of the whole, written statements prepared in the sessions of the several sections, statements to be adopted by the conference and sent out to the world of Christians everywhere. The first report seemed to the writer quite harmless enough, in all conscience, but there were many objections to several expressions, inasmuch as the statement was supposed ultimately to go out to Christendom as an official message from all the churches then in conference. The expression, "assembled in a spirit of penitence, confessing the failure of Christendom to meet the demands of the world", etc., was objected to, on the ground that "we are not personally responsible for the disunion of Christendom"—but surely we are responsible for its persistence in the new age, and for this we should be penitent, certainly!

Section No. Two's report said, in part: "Sympathizing with the anguish of our generation, with its longing for intellectual sincerity, social justice and spiritual inspiration, the Church offers, in the eternal Gospel, the answer to all the legitimate needs and providential aspirations of the modern world". Section No. Three's report had the following: "As there is but one Christ and one life in Him, so there can be but one Church, holy, catholic and apostolic, visible and invisible. There are different views as to the relation of the visible and invisible character of the one Church—but we are agreed that it is the will of Christ that the one life of the one body should be manifest to the world by the visible unity of its members."

The Lausanne Cathedral in which the general public meetings were held is an historic one and numerous messages in the interest of reunion have been broadcast to the world from its pulpit of late. It is recalled that John Calvin contended with the Pope of Rome from this same pulpit in 1562 in the memorable ten days of his contention with the ecclesiastical hierarchy. The great historian Gibbon also spent some twenty-five years of his life here at Lausanne and did much of his writing in this picturesque town overlooking the famous Alps and the beautiful lake of Geneva. The city itself goes back to the fourth century and has had a romantic history. The Swiss University, famed the world over for its scholarship, is here and it was in the aula of this university that most of the sessions of the World Conference have been held.

It is apparent from the list of distinguished leaders in the conference that the meeting was one calculated to arrest the attention of the whole of Christendom and to make history for the whole race of humanity. The finest scholarship, the greatest eloquence and the ablest leadership in Christendom, outside of the Church of Rome, are represented in the following delegates: Archbishop Nathan Sodoblom, head of the Luthern State Church of Sweden; Metropolitan Germanos, of the Eastern Orthodox Church; Professor Adolph Deisserman, representing the Protestant Churches of Germany; Pastor Charles d'Aubique, of the Reformed Evangelical Church of France (all of these were elected vice-presidents of the conference); the Rev. Adolph Keller and Professor William Hadorn, representing the Protestant Churches of Switzerland; the Rev. Timothy Lew, Union Church of North China; Bishop of Dornakol, the Church in India; the Rev. Samuel M. Zewmer, of the Reformed Church in America; Bishop James Cannon, Bishop McConnell, Bishop McDowell and Bishop More of the American Methodist Church; Bishop Brent, Bishop Manning, Bishop Parsons and Bishop Perry, of the American Episcopal Church; Dr. Merrill, Dr. Cadman, Dr. Ainslie, Mr. Frederick Morehouse, Hon. Lord Sands, Dr. William Sturgis, Bishop Gore, Dr. William E. Barton, Dr. David Kay, etc. The list contains many more names of equally celebrated men, all of whom are giving themselves to the call of a united Christian Church—one in all the world.

The fact is not blinked, and the conference is under no delusion as to the inevitableness of the almost insuperable obstacles to be overcome—that union in the immediate future is well-nigh unbelievable, but the conference unquestionably represents the most serious step ever taken to bring the Churches into one fold. There are obstacles that can be overcome only by the power of God Himself and the prayers and patience and tolerant leadership and sane cooperation of all sections of the Church. There are not only the evident extremes of Catholicism and Protestantism to be reconciled, but also extremes of traditional, social, geographical, historic and ecclesiastical differences; traditions of racial aspirations, no less than denominational pride, prejudice and power which must be reconciled and adjusted and annealed. There is also the great barrier of language, which has been very evident in this conference. It appears to this writer that a decided step has been taken towards overcoming the many difficulties that are in the way—by reason of the sincere and dead-in-earnest nature of most of the leaders who are enlisted from now henceforth in the pressing cause of universal fellowship and oneness of organization and the unity of the whole Christian fraternity.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY OF THE SOUTH

REV. CLARENCE STUART McCLELLAN, JR., rector of old Calvary Episcopal Church, originated the idea of creating here a shrine where the memories of Southern writers, orators, artists, statesmen and benefactors might be fittingly honored. A native of New York State, Mr. McClellan spent some years in Texas and came four years ago to Fletcher to become rector of this church.

He says the South has so far neglected to erect memorials to its great men and women, a fact which is easily explained. New England has excelled in this. That is one reason you hear so much of New England history and so little of Southern history. That is why it is so easy to find out about New England and so difficult to find out about the South. We need today to be thinking more about the poets, artists, musicians, statesmen—idealists.

"The purpose of this Open-Air Westminster Abbey of the South," said Mr. McClellan, "is to keep before the eyes and minds and hearts of the coming generations the great ideals of the South, its songs, its poetry, its books of prose and their writers, its famous statesmen, in other words its idealists and every recollection, every tradition, every bit of history that is meaningful for the future. We need today just such a thing, I believe."

Four memorials are being dedicated in the abbey this summer. One to "Dan" Emmett, composer of Dixie, was unveiled on Sunday afternoon, July 3. Among the speakers were Hon. Felix E. Alley, Mrs. Lila Ripley Barnwell, author, and greetings were read from the Governor of Ohio and the mayor of Mount Vernon, Ohio, Emmett's native town.

On Sunday afternoon, July 24, was unveiled the monument to James Whitcomb Riley, the gift of Dr. Joe Shelby

Riley, the poet's cousin. Among the speakers were Dr. Riley, Dr. Lola Berry, a relative of the poet, and greetings were brought from the governor of Indiana and the mayors of Indianapolis and Greenfield, Indiana.

Stephen Collins Foster, composer of "Swanee River", and many other famous Southern songs, was honored on Tuesday, August 9, when a monument was unveiled to his memory with the principal address by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

The high-light of the summer program of unveilings came on Sunday, August 28, when the "O. Henry" monument will be unveiled. An alobarate program was arranged for this occasion, and many literary folk from various sections of the country were present. Dr. Archibald Henderson, of the University of North Carolina, himself a noted writer, made the principal address. O. Henry's widow, Mrs. William Sydney Porter, of Asheville, was among the speakers also. "The Crucible," one of O. Henry's compositions, was sung by Charles E. Burnham, of Asheville.

The memory of Sidney Lanier, one of the South's sweet singers, who likewise spent his declining years in the mountains of North Carolina, has been commemorated by a monument given by George G. Westfeldt, of New Orleans, to whose grandfather the poet dedicated his last poem, "Sunrise". Lanier visited this spot in September, 1881, while en route from Richmond Hill, Asheville, to Tryon, N. C., where he died.

Others to whom monuments will be erected in the future include Frances Fisher Tiernan (Christian Reid), Joel Chandler Harris, Henry Woodfin Grady, Frank L. Stanton, Dr. Francis O. Ticknor, Henry Timord, Zebulon B. Vance, author of "The Scattered Nation"; Paul Hamilton Hayne, Irwin Russell, St. George Tucker, Francis Scott Key, George Denison Prentice, Philip Pendleton Cooke, Richard Henry Wilde, James Matthews Legare, Henry Rootes Jackson, Mirabeau Buonapart Lamar, Lucius Q. C. Lamar, Alexander Beaufort Meek, Theodore O'Hara, William Gilmore Simms, John Reuben Thompson, Abram Joseph Ryan (Father Ryan), Severn Teackle Wallis, James Barron Hope, Margaret Junkin Preston, Edgar Allan Poe, Edward Coate Pinkney, John Esten Cooke, Thomas Nelson Page and a host of others.

Present plans call for the erection and dedication of at least four monuments a year.

Particularly happy was the selection of a site for this unique memorial abbey. Calvary Church was built in 1859, its communicants being for the most part distinguished families from South Carolina, such as the Rutledges and Blakes, who owned large estates in the immediate vicinity. During the War Between the States this church was used by Confederate forces as barracks. In the churchyard still stands, in a splendid state of preservation, an open air shed built by the Confederates for housing their horses. It is directly on the Dixie Highway from the Middle West to Florida and thousands of tourists pass it every day in the year. The churchyard proper contains twenty-four acres, mostly wooded while the rectory property just across the highway contains eight acres, thus providing ample ground for the taking care eventually of hundreds of monuments. The setting is one of natural beauty and the grounds are kept in fine condition at all times. The little graveyard, where sleep many of the Rutledges, Blakes and other prominent Carolinians, is unusually attractive with its markers, shrubbery and flowers.

There is small doubt that in the years to come this spot, ten miles out from Asheville on the Dixie Highway, will be a shrine that will attract increasingly large numbers of people each year.

DAILY NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE PORTIONS

By the Reverend W. Graham Scroggie, D. D.

THE SCRIPTURE UNION.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 4—ST. MARK 11:19-33.

Subject Title—Faith and Authority.

THE MESSAGE.

It is now Tuesday, and it is to be a busy day. Mark's record of it extends from 11:20, to 13:37. Two events come in today's portion. 1. The Lesson of the Withered Fig-tree (20-26). The answer, which Jesus gives to the half question of Peter (20, 21), is not such as we would have expected. Obviously the incident had a national significance (see yesterday's lesson), yet Jesus makes no reference to this, but teaches two lessons, one on faith (22-24), and one on forgiveness (25, 26). Faith in God finds its natural expression in prayer (24). Outward achievement (23) is determined by inward conviction (22). If we see God through the mountain, we make permanent difficulties which need only be temporary; but if we see the mountain through God, then the formidable, the threatening, the insuperable difficulty vanishes away (23). The secret of all achievement which is worth while is faith in God. But such faith, in order to free action, is dependent upon a true and humble heart. There must be a willingness and readiness to forgive those who have wronged us (25, 26). Though nothing is here said of repentance, yet it is assumed, because God does not forgive us unless we repent and confess. What our Lord emphasizes is, not the conditions of forgiveness, but the spirit of it. 2. The Sanhedrin and the Messiah in conflict (27-33). The Sanhedrin was the Ecclesiastical Court at Jerusalem. Their representatives (27) asked Jesus two questions (28): What kind of authority do You claim? and, who bestowed this authority upon You? They regarded Jesus as an unlicensed Teacher, as unordained; and it is this fact which gives to Jesus' counter-question its whole point (30). He asked in effect, Was John the Baptist licensed? was he ordained? We are told why they did not answer (31-33). Official ecclesiastical recognition is of very little significance: what does matter is the foreordination of God. The Sanhedrin would never have licensed Richard Weaver, or Gipsy Smith; but neither would have shed any tears over that.

Today's Thought: If God calls you, you have authority, though all Christendom turns you down.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5—ST. MARK 12:1-12.

Subject Title—Villainous Vine-Dressers.

THE MESSAGE.

It is still Tuesday. Our Lord has just silenced the Pharisees, Scribes and Elders (11:27-33), and now He speaks a parable against them; two parables indeed, 1-9, and 10, 11: and right well did they know it (12). The Jewish Nation is likened in Scripture to three trees, the vine (Isaiah 5:1-7, Ps. 80:8-16), the olive, and the fig. This nation was once a fruitful vine; it is now a withered fig-tree; and it is to be some day a flourishing olive. Our passage rehearses briefly but graphically the treatment meted out by this nation to the prophets, the Lord's servants, and declares also what they are about to do to Himself, the Lord's Son. Mark the growing violence of these men—they beat, they stoned, they killed. The O. T. furnishes abundant illustration of what is said here: Micaiah (1 Kings 22:24-27); Jeremiah (Jer. 37:15); Zechariah (2 Chron. 24:21). Notwithstanding this treatment of His servants, God sent to this people His Son also, and last of all (6). What we do to Him we do to ourselves. If we crucify Him we choose death for ourselves: if we welcome Him, we enter into life. The Jewish people "killed Him, and cast Him out" (8). What will God do now? He will give others, Gentiles, the opportunity which the Jews despised (9). At this point the figure is changed. The vine-dressers are now builders (10), and the Son is now a Stone. The point of this new parable is, that the experts failed. Builders ought to know what stones to choose; but, in this case, they rejected the best stone of all, the One which the Master-Builder has made "the Head of the corner". The widespread disposition today, as in that day, to trust absolutely the experts, the theologians, the philosophers, the scientists, is as perilous as it ever was. The Christ of the Gospels is still being rejected, but He is still "the Head of the corner", and the Foundation-Stone. God has sent His Son; have you received Him? The foundation is laid; are you resting upon it?

Today's Thought: Christ is God's Last Word (6).

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6—ST. MARK 12:13-27.

Subject Title—Critics Are Answered.

THE MESSAGE.

Glance through Chs. 11:20 to 13:37, and see how busy a day Tuesday was. All parties in the nation attacked Jesus: the Priests and Elders (11:27); the Pharisees and Herodians (12:13); and the Sadducees (12:18). Ecclesiastics and politicians unite to "catch Him in His words". It is in our talk that we need to be watchful, for we may be so easily trapped there. Notice how polite these enemies were; but alas, their courtesy was hypocrisy. Is yours? They wanted for answer to their question, "yes", or "no". But there are countless questions that permit of no such categorical answer. You cannot focus the whole truth in a word of two letters, or of three. Their question is clever; but the answer of Jesus is amazing in its brevity, comprehensiveness, justice, and wisdom. All men owe something to society and to what represents social order; we have both civil and religious duties, and we may not evade the former under cover of the latter, unless they plainly conflict (Rom. 13). Had Jesus answered either "yes", or "no", He would have been trapped; but He answered "yes", and "no". These two parties having been outwitted, a party of the priestly aristocracy, who accepted only the Pentateuch, then came forward with a question about the resurrection, in which they did not believe. For answer Jesus roundly charges them with ignorance, "ye know not the Scriptures", and irreligion, "neither the power of God". Both in understanding and experience they were astray, yet they were full of intellectual pride. How often that is the case, but see that it be not so with you. The truth of immortality has been brought to light by the Gospel. The living God is the God of the living, and as He is still the God of Abraham, Abraham still lives. If we have honest doubts and real difficulty we may go to Christ about it, but the proud and critical had better not go, except to repent.

Today's Thought: Is Your Difficulty Real or Feigned?

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7—ST. MARK 12:28-44.

Subject Title—Love, Wisdom, Indignation, and Recognition.

THE MESSAGE.

It is still Tuesday, and Jesus is still engaged in conflict and conversation with various parties. Now a lawyer steps forward with a plain and honest question, and receives a straightforward answer. Jesus told him and tells us that Love is the supreme Law (28-34). The keeping of all other laws should be motived by love; if it is not, then the moral value of obedience is lost. And the whole man must love (30), and must in this way love both God and man (30, 31). Every sin is a violation of the law of love; and every grace and virtue is an expression of love in one or other of its many aspects. When you love God with all your mind, you will study your Bible more carefully and constantly. This Scribe was religious and orthodox (32, 33), without being Christian (34). He was not far from the Kingdom, but he had not entered it. If thou art not far, enter in, else it would have been better to have been far off. The Scribe had asked a question, and now Jesus asks one: How can David's son be David's Lord? (35-37). The question arises out of Psalm 110, which Jewish interpreters regarded as Messianic. Incidentally, against modern critics, Jesus declares this to be a word of God through David: but the point is, addressing the Scribe, "you have regarded the O. T. precepts, but have you penetrated to the heart of its promises?" In other words, "Who do you suppose that I am?" (Matt. 22:42, 43). That still is the greatest of all questions; and what you think of Christ matters to you, as does also what He thinks of you. The next paragraph (38-40) reveals how Christ's righteous indignation could flash and scorch. The final word is about A Farthing (41-44). Mark two points here: First: Jesus knows what balance you have at the bank (44); and second: our giving is estimated according to our means and motive.

Today's Thought: Do I Give to Christ the Minimum or the Maximum?

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8—ST. MARK 13:1-13.

Subject Title—Forecasts of Judgment.

THE MESSAGE.

The whole of this chapter also falls in the events of that memorable Tuesday of the Passion Week. The Lord, as He left the Temple with His disciples, never to return to it, had His attention called to its stones (1), and uttered in the hearing of His disciples a brief and pregnant word (2), which later, on the Mount of Olives, and at their request, He expounded to them (3-4). With this account the parallel passages in Matt. 24, and Luke 21, should be carefully read, and an attempt made to get the prophetic perspective of this Great Eschatological Discourse. Here our Lord predicts the fall of Jerusalem—which took place forty years later, in 70 A. D.—and beyond that, the consummation of the age (Matt. 24:3). Let us not for a moment suppose that He is making a shrewd guess, or merely expressing an opinion on these great matters. This is an unveiling of the future, nearer and further, which, in part, has already been authenticated by history. The disciples ask two questions: When? and What? (4) The Lord replies both as to the signs and season, twice bidding His own "take heed" (3, 9). How unnatural sounds the exhortation of verse 7! Wars and rumors of wars, and yet, not be troubled! Is that possible? It depends upon whether you are living in the present or the future, living on Christ or on circumstances. The disciples were tested in their time; we are being tested in ours. We too have wars, earthquakes, famine and much travail. Also, the true followers of the Lamb are being persecuted, though not in the old way (9-13); and the Gospel is being "preached unto all the nations" (10). But the end is not yet (7), though it may be at hand. Are you ever "anxious beforehand" (11, R. V.)? "Be not," says Christ. "Endure unto the end" (13), that is, perfect endurance by perseverance in steadfastness. Be patient, loyal and strong. "The four moral keynotes of this discourse on the last things are—Beware, Watch, Endure, Pray". This is the path of Victory.

Today's Thought: Take Heed to Yourself (9).

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9—ST. MARK 13:14-27.

Subject Title—A Time of Trouble Described.

THE MESSAGE.

Today's lesson is a continuation of the Mount Olivet address on coming events. It is important to note the general character of this discourse. It is prediction (23) They who deny that prophecy in Scripture is very often prediction, is not only forth-telling, but also fore-telling, will have difficulty in making anything of this chapter; for those who will not admit a still future interpretation of parts of this discourse, must admit that the overthrow of Jerusalem is predicted, an event which was distant forty years from the time of this utterance. Could any one in 1887 have foretold what would be the world situation in 1927? But it is clear that our Lord here looks far beyond the solemn event of 70 A. D., to a "time of the end", which is also predicted in Daniel and the Revelation. Prophecy sees in one world-crisis the premonition of others, and, finally, of the end of all things. For instance, verse 26 was not fulfilled in 70 A. D., and that interpretation which so regards it does violation to words and the whole perspective of the discourse. Do not say that the average reader of the Bible cannot understand such a passage as this; read verse 14. Notwithstanding the easy optimism of many today, and the widespread exaltation of human nature, notwithstanding also the best endeavors of good men to secure world-peace, there is a time of judgment coming upon the world. It must be so, just because man is what he is, and God, what He is. In the history of the elect nation there have been countless anticipations of judgments to come, and, depend upon it, the Judge of all the earth will do right.

Today's Thought: Take Ye Heed (23).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10—ST. MARK 13:28-37.

Subject Title—The Lord Shall Return.

THE MESSAGE.

Are current events signs? May we interpret prophecy by history? Is it possible for us to know, by the characteristics of our age, whereabouts we are in the great unfolding chart of human history? The answer must be cautious: Verses 28, 29, would lead us to say, "yes"; and verses 32-37, to say, "no". We are not left entirely in the dark, neither are we altogether in the light: we may know, and yet, we may not know. A denial that we may read the future by the present, is a denial of what Jesus declares (28, 29); and, on the other hand, a dogmatic insistence that the door is even now on the latch, is a contravention of the same Lord's warning (33). Whatever may have been the first interpretation of the parable of 28, 29, it does seem as though our own age is full of the signs which, we are told, should introduce the end. Yet, it remains true that "we know not when the time is" (33, 35). What, then, should be our attitude? This is made perfectly plain in verses 32-37. Mark these great notes of the exhortation—Take Heed, Watch, Pray, Work. Nothing is more God-dishonoring than to give up working in order to watch, to give up laboring in order to pray. We must do both, and so take heed unto ourselves, for it is so easy to sleep (36). Remember that in the Virgin's Parable they "all slumbered and slept". "Awake thou that sleepest . . . . arise . . . and Christ shall shine upon thee." It is not enough to wake up, you must get up. Yes, Jesus is coming again; what if it were today? He will come in grace for His Church before He comes for judgment to the earth. The generation of verse 30, may be either the one to which He is speaking, or the one of which He is speaking.

Today's Thought: Am I Watching or Sleeping?

THE STORY OF PARIDISE

THE most wonderful, comprehensive and practical chapter in the Bible is the third of Genesis. It is a table of contents of the entire Scripture. Its truth is evident from our experience and its inspiration glows like the shining of the sun.

It begins with the fact of innocence, without the knowledge of good and evil. So begins every life—"Of such is the Kingdom of heaven".

But alas! The time comes when even in the God-made Paradise the serpent appears. "Now the serpent"; so in every home.

Temptation begins in doubt, "Yea, hath God said?"

Temptation not only begins in doubt but in doubting the punishment. It always begins thinking that we can sin and escape the consequences, "Ye shall not surely die" (v. 4).

The woman eats that she may know "good and evil" and gives to her husband. The sinner becomes a tempter, and does so in every case.

Now follows shame, "the eyes of them both were opened". Shame, the first result of the fatal wisdom in their experience and in ours. They attempt to cover their shame (v. 7). Who does not? They attempt to hide from the presence of God. We leave the Church, we close the Bible, we stop praying, and we plunge into pleasures, we rush into business, we close our eyes to the presence of God in the heavens "which declare the glory of God and in the firmament which showeth his handiwork"; anything to get away from God. But God pursues them and with the piercing question, the question that has pierced the conscience of every man that has been brought to confession and repentance, "Where art thou"? We awake to realize that we are in the "broad way that leadeth to destruction". They return to God and confess. Then follows the punishment. The greatest punishment falls upon the tempter. To the serpent God says: "Upon thy belly shalt thou go, dust shalt thou eat and the seed of the woman shall bruise thy head." Cursed, degraded and crushed. No degradation is equal to that of one who tempts a woman to her fall. Even his victim curses and crushes him. And for the man and woman the paradise of the innocence of ignorance is forever left. They have the fatal knowledge of good and evil. Toil and suffering follow.

But that is not all the story. The sun breaks through the clouds. God takes away their shame. "God made coats of skins and clothed them" (v. 21). With confession and repentance come the end of shame. They go forth to battle with sin. They did and we do. The paradise of the innocence of ignorance is left forever. But they went forth to follow the star of Bethlehem, the promise of victory, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head". The Christ thought beginning on the altar of sacrifice leads on to the cross of Christ.

But what becomes of the tree of life? It is not destroyed. It is kept. We turn many pages till we come to the closing chapter of the Bible. The paradise of innocence of ignorance without the knowledge of good and evil, has become the City of Victory.

Its streets are of gold and its gates are of pearl and the river of life flows through the midst of it, "And on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations" (Rev. 21 and 22). "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life." The city "had no need of the sun, neither of the moon" for "the Lamb is the light thereof." So Christ is the beginning and the end of the Holy Scripture.—Rev. J. de Hart Bruen.

SAFETY, CERTAINTY AND ENJOYMENT

By George Cutting

FIRST, then, let me speak briefly of the Way of Salvation.

Please to open your Bible, and read carefully Exodus 13:13; there you find these words from the lips of Jehovah: "Every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck: and all the firstborn of man among thy children shalt thou redeem."

Now come back with me in thought to a supposed scene of three thousand years ago. Two men (a priest of God and a poor Israelite) stand in earnest conversation. Let us stand by, with their permission, and listen. The gestures of each bespeak deep earnestness about some matter of importance, and it is not difficult to see that the subject of conversation is a little ass that stands trembling beside them.

"I have come to find out," says the poor Israelite, "if there cannot be a merciful exception made in my favor this once. This feeble little thing is the firstling of my ass, and though I know full well what the law of God says about it, I am hoping that mercy will be shown, and the ass's life spared. I am but a poor man in Israel, and can ill afford to lose the little colt."

"But," answers the priest firmly, "the law of the Lord is plain and unmistakable: Every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck'. Where is the lamb?"

"Ah, sir, no lamb do I possess!"

"Then go, purchase one, and return, or the ass's neck must be broken. The lamb must die, or the ass must die."

"Alas! then all my hopes are crushed," he cries, "for I am far too poor to buy a lamb."

While this conversation proceeds, a third person joins them, and after hearing the poor man's tale of sorrow, he turns to him and says kindly, "Be of good cheer, I can meet your need", and thus he proceeds: "We have in our house, on the hill-top yonder, one little lamb, brought up at our very hearthstone, which is 'without spot or blemish'. It has never once strayed from home, and stands (and rightly so) in highest favor with all that are in the house. This lamb will I fetch." And away he hastens up the hill. Presently you see him gently leading the fair, little creature down the slope, and very soon both lamb and ass are standing side by side.

Then the lamb is bound to the altar, its blood is shed, and the fire consumes it.

The righteous priest now turns to the poor man, and says, "You can freely take home your little colt in safety; no broken neck for it now. The lamb has died in the ass's stead, and consequently the ass goes righteously free. Thanks to your friend."

Now, poor troubled soul, can't you see in this God's own picture of a sinner's salvation? His claims as to your sin demanded a "broken neck"—i. e. righteous judgment upon your guilty head; the only alternative being the death of a divinely-appointed substitute.

Now you could not find the provision to meet your case; but, in the person of His beloved son, God Himself provided the Lamb. "Behold the Lamb of God," said John to his disciples, as his eyes fell upon that blessed, spotless One, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29).

Onward to Calvary He went, "as a lamb led to the slaughter", and there and then He "once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God" (1 Peter 3:18). He "was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification" (Romans 4:25). So that God does not abate one jot of His righteous, holy claims against sin when He justifies (i. e. clears from all charge of guilt) the ungodly sinner who believes in Jesus (Romans 3:26). Blessed be God for such a Saviour, such a Salvation!

"Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

"Well," you reply, "I have, as a poor condemned sinner, found in Him one that I can safely trust. I do believe on Him."

Then I can tell you that the full value of His sacrifice and death, as God estimates it, He makes as good to you as though you had accomplished it all yourself.

Oh, what a wondrous way of Salvation is this! Is it not great, and grand, and Godlike, worthy of God Himself —the gratification of His own heart of love, the glory of His precious Son, and the salvation of a sinner, all bound up together? What a bundle of grace and glory! Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has so ordered it that His own beloved Son should do all the work, and get all the praise, and that you and I, poor, guilty things, believing on Him should not only get all the blessings, but enjoy the blissful company of the Blesser for ever and ever! "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together" (Psalm 34:3).

But perhaps your eager inquiry may be, "How is it that since I do really distrust self and self-work, and wholly rely upon Christ and Christ's work, that I have not the full certainty of my Salvation"? You say, "If my feelings warrant me saying that I am saved one day, they are pretty sure to blight every hope the next, and I am left like a ship storm-tossed, without any anchorage whatever". Ah! there lies your mistake. Did you ever hear of a captain trying to find anchorage by fastening his anchor inside the ship. Never. Always outside.

It may be that you are quite clear that it is Christ's death alone that gives safety; but you think that it is what you feel that gives certainty.

Now, again, take your Bible; for I now wish you to see from God's Word how He gives a man

The Knowledge of Salvation.

Before you turn to the verse which I shall ask you very carefully to look at, which speaks of how a believer is to know that he has Eternal life, let me quote it in the distorted way that man's imagination often puts it. "These happy feelings have I given unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life." Now open your Bible, and while you compare this with God's blessed and unchanging Word may He give you from your very heart to say with David, "I hate vain thoughts; but thy law do I love" (Psalm 119:113). The verse just misquoted is 1 John 5:13, and reads thus in our version: "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life."

How did the firstborn sons of the thousands of Israel know for certain that they were safe the night of the Passover and Egypt's judgment? (See Exodus 12.)

Let us take a visit to two of their houses and hear what they have to say.

What is the secret of all this paleness and trembling? we inquire: and the firstborn son informs us that the Angel of Death is coming round the land, and that he is not quite certain how matters will stand with him at that solemn moment.

"When the destroying angel has passed our house," says he, "and the night of judgment is over, I shall then know that I am safe; but I can't see how I can be quite sure of it until then. They say they are sure of salvation next door, but we think it very presumptuous. All I can do is to spend the long dreary night hoping for the best."

"Well," we inquire, "but has the God of Israel not provided a way of safety for His people?"

"True," he replies, "and we have availed ourselves of that way of escape. The blood of the spotless and unblemished first year lamb has been duly sprinkled with the bunch of hyssop on the lintel and two sideposts, but we still are not fully assured of shelter."

Let us now leave these doubting, troubled ones, and enter next door.

What a striking contrast meets our eye at once. Peace rests on every countenance. There they stand, with girded loins, and staff in hand, feeding on the roasted lamb.

What can be the meaning of all this tranquility on such a solemn night as this? "Ah," say they all, "we are only waiting for Jehovah's marching orders, and then we shall bid a last farewell to the taskmaster's cruel lash and all the drudgery of Egypt!"

"But hold! Do you forget that this is the night of Egypt's judgment?"

"Right well we know it; but our firstborn son is safe. The blood has been sprinkled according to the wish of our God."

"But so it has been the next door," we reply; "but they are all unhappy because all uncertain of safety."

"Ah!" firmly responds the firstborn, "but we have more than the sprinkled blood, we have the unerring Word of God about it. God has said: 'When I see the blood I will pass over you.' God rests satisfied with the blood outside, and we rest satisfied with His word inside."

The sprinkled blood makes us safe.

The spoken Word makes us sure.

Could anything make us more safe than the sprinkled blood, or more sure than His spoken word? Nothing, nothing.

Now, reader, let me ask you a question. "Which of those two houses, think you, was the safer?"

Do you say No. Two, where all were so peaceful? Nay, then, you are wrong.

Both are safe alike.

Their safety depends upon what God thinks about the blood outside, and not upon the state of their feelings inside.

If you would be sure of your own blessings, then, dear reader, listen not to the unstable testimony of inward emotions, but to the infallible witness of the Word of God,

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life" (John 6:47).

Let me give you a simple illustration from everyday life. A certain farmer in the country, not having sufficient grass for his cattle, applies for a piece of pasture land which he hears is to be let near his own house. For some time he gets no answer from the landlord. One day a neighbor comes in, and says, "I feel quite sure you will get that field. Don't you recollect how that last Christmas he sent you a special present of game, and that he gave you a kind nod of recognition the other day when he drove past in the carriage?" And with such like words the farmer's mind is filled with sanguine hopes.

Next day another neighbor meets him, and in course of conversation he says: "I'm afraid you will stand no chance whatever of getting that grass field. Mr. ——— has applied for it, and you cannot but be aware what a favorite he is with the Squire—occasionally visits with him," etc. And the poor farmer's bright hopes are dashed to the ground and burst like soap-bubbles. One day he is hoping, the next day full of perplexing doubts.

Presently the postman calls, and the farmer's heart beats fast as he breaks the seal of the letter; for he sees by the handwriting that it is from the Squire himself. See his countenance change from anxious suspense to undisguised joy as he reads and re-reads that letter.

"It's a settled thing now," exclaims he to his wife; no more doubts and fears about it; "hopes" and "ifs" are things of the past. "The Squire says the field is mine as long as I require it, on the most easy terms, and that's enough for me. I care for no man's opinion now. His word settles all!"

How many a poor soul is in a like condition to the poor troubled farmer—tossed and perplexed by the opinions of men, or the thoughts and feelings of his own treacherous heart; and it is only upon receiving the Word of God as the Word of God that certainty takes the place of doubts and peradventures. When God speaks there must be a certainty, whether He pronounces the damnation of the unbeliever, or the salvation of the believer.

"For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven" (Psalm 119:89); and to the simple-hearted believer His Word settles all.

"Hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?" (Numbers 23: 19).

Another six days' work is done;
Another Lord's Day has begun;
Return, my soul, enjoy the rest,
Improve the hours that God has blessed.

This day, my soul, devoutly rise
As heavenly incense, to the skies;
And heaven the sweet repose bestow
Which none but they who feel can know.

Peaceful calm within the breast
Is a sure pledge of heavenly rest,
Which for the Church of God remains
The end of care, the end of pain.

In holy pleasure let the day
In holy duties pass away.
How sweet the Sabbath thus to spend
In hope of one that ne'er shall end.

THE MIRACLE OF PRAYER.

Robert L. Pitfield, M. D.

"Not believe in the miracles of the New Testament?" I asked of a friend.

"No, I do not," he replied candidly.

"And yet you pray to God?"

"Of course, every day."

"Then, my dear friend, every time you do so, you invoke a miracle, you believe in one. When you pour forth, either a silent or vocal prayer unto God, you believe that He, no matter where He is, hears you or knows what you ask for. Christ said, 'For your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him'. Yet, you deny that it is not possible for Him to have been born of the Virgin, or rise from the dead?"

"Yes."

"You hardly ask anything of God without believing that at least a portion of your petition will be answered some time and somewhere?"

"That is true."

"Then if God answers your prayer, is not that as great a miracle as that of Christ walking upon the sea, which you do not believe?"

"I think that you are right about that. If God hears my prayer and answers it, then two miracles have been performed."

"You hope to go to heaven?"

"Yes."

"What greater miracle then can there be than that your soul (itself a miracle) shall at death, leap from the seen and finite into the unseen and infinite. Believing in a future state in heaven implies that you believe in a great miracle. Indeed you now own that you believe in three great miracles."

"Yes, that is so."

"Then, why not believe in all the doings and sayings of Christ as related in the New Testament?"

"I think that I have been inconsistent, yes, I know I have."

"Of course, you have been inconsistent. You can never be truly happy unless you believe in the supernatural Fatherhood of God, He being supernatural and able to hear prayers, answer them and open the door of His heaven, is capable of doing supernatural things and infinity of them, that our poor finite minds cannot comprehend."

"That is so."

Christ says, 'He that has seen me has seen the Father, How sayest thou then show us the Father'. If Christ is one with the Father, is it not perfectly possible that He, who can hear an unuttered prayer, did walk upon the Sea of Galilee and raised Lazarus from the dead?"

"I think that you are right."

"One cannot escape the supernatural and the belief in it. The same is true of belief in the majesty and supernaturalness of Christ. Your constant prayer should be, 'Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief'."

THE NAME OF GOD IN THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

Mr. Editor:

In a letter which appeared in last week's issue of The Southern Churchman, the question was asked, "Why was the Book of Esther put into the canon as the name of God does not appear"?

Years ago I read an article in The Homiletic Review, by the Rev. Dr. Witherspoon, entitled, "The Hiding of God in the Book of Esther". Much to my sorrow, that copy of The Review was lost. Not long ago I bought a copy of The Companion Bible, and in it was the same explanation of the non-appearance of God's name.

The following is a condensed statement. There are five acrostics in Esther: Chapters 1:20; 5:4; 5:13; 7:7 and 7:5. Before proceeding with the acrostics it is well to be reminded that there are three principal names by which God is revealed, Elohim, the Creator; Jehovah, the covenant keeping God and Eyeh, which occurs in Exodus 3:15, the last part. "This is my name for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations".

The first acrostic (1:20) transliterated reads this: He Veqal Hannashim Yittim. Here you have the consonants appearing in Jehovah (in Hebrew Yehovah) YHVH. Freely rendered (note the capital letters), Due Respect Our Ladies all, etc., which gives, as you see, the word, LORD in reverse order.

The second acrostic (5:4), transliterated, Ybho Hammalech Vehaman Hayyom. Again, YHVH, Yehovah. Freely translated, let—come the—king and—haman this—day, etc. Let Our Royal Dinner. Again, LORD in regular order.

The third acrostic (5:13), transliterated, zeH 'eynennV shove H liY, YHVH in reverse order, saDd forR nO avaiL (LORD).

The fourth acrostic (7:7), kY kalethaH 'elaV hara'aH, YHVH. Freely rendered, eviL, tO feaR determineD (Lord).

Acrostic five (7:5), transliterated, huE zeH ve'eY zeH, EHYH (Eyeh), freely rendered, wherE dwelletH the—enemY that—daretH (EYEH). "This is my name forever."

Notice how the capitals move their places. As the enemy's plans move on towards completion the name of God, rather the letters forming God's name are not their proper order; but when God begins to move to overthrow the work of the enemy the letters assume the right order.

"Hence though His name is HIDDEN, yet it is there in the Word; and so wonderfully interwoven that no enemy will ever know how to put it out."

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

Deep in unfathomable mines
With never failing skill
He treasures up His bright designs,
And works His sovereign will.

Blind unbelief is sure to err
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.

A CORRECTION.

In my letter answering the Rev. Mr. Ward, dated August 8, published in the Churchman of August 20, our transcriber quite ruined a large part of what I said. My correct statement was: "Jesus had for His Bible our Old Testament books and none others." The transcriber made me say "and some others". Just exactly what I was trying not to say. The Jews of that time never accepted the Apocrypha. They had then as they have now just our Old Testament books for canonical and divinely inspired.

Daughters of the King.

The Daughters of the King realize with much thankfulness that an increasing interest in their work is being manifested by the bishops and clergy. Many clergymen say that they would welcome chapters in their parishes if it were possible for them to add another organization. Many parishes are organized to the limit and it is no wonder that an already over-burdened rector thinks anything more an impossibility. At the same time they realize what a help a chapter of the Daughters of the King might be in the parish, especially in the follow-up work of the Bishops' Crusade.

Several rectors have solved this problem by transforming the existing Altar Guild into a chapter of the Daughters of the King. The members continue the altar work and add to it the personal service of the Daughters of the King. Any girl or woman who is doing this work in the right spirit ought to make a very fine member of the Daughters of the King.

"This plan has been tried in several parishes with real success and we feel that it ought to be brought to the attention of the clergy, especially as the suggestion that it might be of general interest was made by a rector who had tried the experiment in his own parish.

Further information will gladly be supplied by the Publicity Chairman, Miss Julia N. McLean, Portland, Connecticut.

Church Intelligence

Adds Medical Course.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, is this fall adding to its foreign missionary course instruction in Medicine and Elemental Surgery. These subjects will be taught by Dr. H. L. Canright, who was for years an effective medical missionary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Chengtu, West China. Dr. Canright is a graduate in Medicine of the University of Michigan, and took post-graduate work in the School of Medicine, New York City. During the last five years of Dr. Canright's missionary work in China, he served as Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, and Professor of Anatomy in the West China Union University.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Home-Coming Day.

The annual "Home-Coming Day" of old Aquia Church, Stafford County, Virginia, will be held Sunday, September 4. There will be two services at 11 A. M. and 3 P. M., and the public as usual is cordially invited. Luncheon will be served on the grounds of the church at one P. M.

Aquia is the main church of Overwharton Parish, one of the most ancient parishes in America. The present church was erected about 1752 and many believe that it still contains more of the original woodwork than any other Colonial Church. The home-coming Sunday was first held many years ago, and is now an annual feature with attendance from many parts of the country.

The rector, the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, will preach at one of the services and it is expected that some distinguished visiting clergyman will also preach.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Last of the Diocesan Days.

A different group of speakers from those of the previous week spoke at the "Diocesan Day" services at Radford on August 23, Bedford, on the twenty-fourth, Madison Heights on the twenty-fifth, and Lexington, on the twenty-sixth.

Social Service was discussed at Radford by the Rev. Arthur W. Taylor, of Marion, and at the other three points by the Rev. John F. Coleman, of Pulaski.

The Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey discussed Religious Education at Radford and the Rev. Sidney L. Vail of New Orleans, who supplied for the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley at St. John's, Roanoke, during the month of August, was the speaker on this subject at Bedford, Madison Heights and Lexington.

The Church's Mission and the Field Department was discussed at Radford by Mr. Thomas A. Scott, at Bedford and Madison Heights by the Rev. Dr. Churchill J. Gibson of Lexington, and at Lexington by the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., of Trinity Church, Staunton.

At Radford, Miss Jane Byrd Pendleton, of Wytheville, was the speaker on the "Four Church School Projects", and Mrs. Anna M. Davidson of Blacksburg made an address on the work and plans of the Woman's Auxiliary. On the other three days Mrs. Davidson took up the Church School Projects and Mrs. W. H. B. Loving of Roanoke spoke for the Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. Loving is Diocesan President of the Auxiliary and Mrs. Davidson is an associate member of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education.

Bishop Jett was present for a little while during the morning session at Lexington, and made a short address. On account of his many other engagements this was the only opportunity for him to attend one of the eight Diocesan Days.

It is felt that this plan of holding a series of such meetings each year, with groups of speakers on various subjects at each meeting, can be made, through the earnest cooperation of all the clergymen and vestries in the Diocese, a most efficient means of informing the people on the more important phases of the Church's work and life.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor

The Rev. Philip F. Tilghman has offered his resignation as minister-in-charge of Christ Church, Norfolk Mr Tilghman will sail for Australia about the middle of September, having accepted his appointment as rector of Wauchope Parish, in the Diocese of Grafton, Province of New South Wales.

Mr. Tilghman came to Southern Virginia in 1920. He became assistant to the rector of Christ Church, Norfolk, in 1925. On the resignation of the Rev. Dr. Francis C. Steinmetz from Christ Church in March, 1927, Mr. Tilghman became minister-in-charge, which position he has held ever since.

Mr. Tilghman was the first director of the Diocesan Camp Robert Hunt and saw the erection of the Lodge at the Camp.

During his sojourn in Norfolk, Mr. Tilghman has made many sincere friends who regret his leaving the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

Mr. Tilghman's address will be, The Rectory, Wauchope, Australia.

The children of the Jackson-Feild Home, at Purdy, were given a week's outing at Camp Robert Hunt beginning August 29. This was made possible by the Woman's Auxiliary, who secured funds from various branches and from individual contributions throughout the Diocese.

On Wednesday morning, August 24, in Grace Church, Norfolk, Va., the Bishop of Southern Virginia, the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., LL. D., ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Basil Kent, of Lunenburg County, Virginia. The Litany was said by the Bishop of Virginia, the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., who also celebrated the Holy Communion. The Rev. Dr. Bragg, of Baltimore, read the Epistle and the Gospel was read by the Rev. E. E. Miller, of Petersburg, Va. Archdeacon Jas. S. Russell, D. D., of Lawrenceville, Va., presented the candidate and assisted in the Communion Service. Other clergy assisting in the ordination were: the Rev. A. A. Birch, of Newport News; the Rev. E. H. Hamilton, of Hampton, and the Rev. B. W. Harris, rector of Grace Church, Norfolk. The sermon was preached by the Rev. E. E. Miller. The Rev. Mr. Kent will continue his work in Lunenburg, where he has already given long and faithful service to the Church.

N. E. T.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Clyde Brown, rector of Silver Spring Parish, has accepted a call to become rector of St. Matthew's Parish, which includes in its outlines, Pinkney Memorial Church, Hyattsville; St. Luke's Church, Bladensburg, and St. John's Church, Mount Rainier. He will take charge of the new work October 15. Mr. Brown will not go to St. Matthew's Parish as a stranger, for he served there as assistant rector for a short time during the rectorate of his brother-in-law, the Rev. Charles E. McAllister, and also that of the Rev. Charles L. Monroe. He was later assistant rector of St. Stephen's Parish, Washington, leaving there for Silver Spring Parish, where he has been for about three years. Mr. Brown will succeed in this work the Rev. Henry L. Durrant, who has recently resigned as rector of St. Matthew's Parish, to become rector of St. Paul's Church, Louisville, Kentucky.

A number of Washington clergy who have been taking vacations during the month of August, are expected back for the services beginning the first Sunday in September. Dr. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Church, returned to the city recently and took charge of the services at Epiphany Church, both morning and evening on August 21. Dr. Phillips is spending his vacation at Yarmouth Point, Mass. The Rev. Thomas W. Cooke, rector of Ascension Church, has also returned to the city and is in charge of his parish. Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth is expected to return September 1, to his parish of Christ Church, Georgetown. The Rev. F. Bland Tucker is also expected to return shortly from his European trip and joint services between Christ Church and St. John's will be discontinued.

The Rev. John Gayner Banks, D. D., who has been preaching at Washington Cathedral during the month of August, has used as his general topic, "The Redemption of the Body", and has aroused a marked interest in his hearers by his clear presentation of his message and the deeply spiritual nature of his sermons. Dr. Banks, of Mountain Lake, New Jersey, is director-general of the Society of the Nazarene, and is well known to Washingtonians who have attended the meetings of the Society held in Washington from time to time.

Exhibits Featured at Sewanee.

The Service Program of the Church School has been carried out with enthusiasm in many parishes throughout the Province, if one may judge from the splendid exhibits shown at the Adult Conference in Sewanee. In 1926 only five Church Schools in the Province had exhibits at the Conference, while this year eleven Church Schools were represented and several other organizations. The classes on service projects were well attended and many new ideas were presented through the exhibits.

The Children's Corner set up in All Saints' Chapel by Miss Rosalie Wilson, of St. John's, Jacksonville, Fla., attracted much attention from those attending the Conference and was a source of delight to the children who happened to be visiting in Sewanee.

The two exhibits from China, one from St. Faith's School, Yang Chow, placed by Miss Theo Young, of Upper South Carolina, who has just returned from China, and the other from St. Mary's, Shanghai, placed by Mrs. Olive Chisholm, who has also recently returned from China, were of especial interest to all. Both Miss Young and Mrs. Chisholm made interesting talks on their work and added to the vividness of their descriptions by using Chinese articles as illustrations.

Charts of every diocese in the province were on display giving the names of all Church School teachers and officers who have credits in the N. A. T. A. and the parishes from whence they came. Another chart showed the relative standing of the Provinces and the number of teachers in training in each. The Province of Sewanee leads the list at present.

Others who exhibited included St. Barnabas' Guild, the C. P. C. Valle Crucis Summer School, Camp Horner, Western North Carolina, the youngest of the Y. P. Camps in the Province; Camp Tomachichi, Georgia, and the following Church Schools: St. Mary's Cathedral, Calvary and Grace Church, Memphis; All Saints, Atlanta; Christ Church, Macon, Ga.; St. John's and Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Fla.; Advent, Nashville; St. John's, Johnson City; Christ Church, Greenville, S. C., and Christ Church, Houston, Texas. These exhibits included notebooks kept by children of various ages showing their weekly progress in Christian Nurture, the work of the Schools in the various fields, and teachers' plan books, as well as the hand work done at the week-day session. The Diocese of Tennessee had an especially creditable showing of articles made at the week-day sessions.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Long Island is at present not a static problem to be considered and solved, but a series of emergencies to be met, where changing conditions and overnight developments make necessary the widest vision and most sympathetic understanding.

In the cities at the western end of the island, Brooklyn, Long Island, Jamaica and Flushing, populations are shifting rapidly and the Church is planting new parochial missions or extending the mother-work into the new localities whither her people are moving.

The Mission of St. Simon, Brooklyn, is a striking example of what can be accomplished by a congregation which acts with faith and courage. In the shift of population she found herself left in a neighborhood where the incoming dwellers were strongly affiliated with another faith. Her own people were coming back to her from a distance, making the working support so necessary to growth constantly more difficult to maintain.

A survey of the various territories nearby was made by the Archdeacon and a committee from the Mission, and a new location was found accessible to the existing congregation, not within too close a radius of any other church, and in the midst of a rapidly-growing section of the city. And now, little more than a year from the time when the change was projected, St. Simon's is thoroughly and prosperously at work in her new home. The spirit of the Mission is in its work and it has effectively demonstrated that the affection of a congregation is not dependent upon the brick and mortar of its temporal habitation.

The Church of St. John, Flushing, has taken title to land at Auburndale, and a parochial Mission will be planted there within a short time.

Further out on the island whole towns are springing into existence almost over night. One may ride through certain sections of the Archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau and see miles of streets with finished houses on either side, where in May or June were wide stretches of unbroken fields. The families moving into these new developments, with their pretentious names and their raw edges, unpaved streets and unsodded land, have paid perhaps all they have in the world as the first deposit on their homes. Tax assessments for improvements will join with future installment dues to keep them literally on the ragged edge of solvency for years to come: yet the Church must reach and serve these communities until they are able to support the work for themselves. The Bishop of Long Island has announced that there are at least twelve sites where diocesan missions must be established at once. This is not the least of the problems before the diocese in the coming year.

Further out, in the Archdeaconry of Suffolk, her Archdeacon says that "Suffolk does not know herself any more". The present villages are becoming towns, new settlements are to be seen wherever one rides, millionaire hotels and colonies appear even on Montauk Point, where a short year ago was a Land's End of moors and sea. Communities previously served by summer services for two months are growing into all-year-round neighborhoods.

The Bishop recently stated that the present movement of population into Long Island is "the greatest now taking place on the face of this globe" and to the observer it is stupendous, unbelievable, almost appalling. It is no wonder that the Bishop has asked his people that he may have their prayers to help him as he considers this tremendous situation.

Previous mention has been made of the Sunday-evening services held at St. James, L. I., at the Church of St. James. This quaint old church, in the heart of a rural district of small towns and great estates, has been adapting itself quietly to changing circumstances, with the greatest success. The services begin with organ music at eight-fifteen, when the day is done and people are returning from God's out-of-doors. There are plenty of hymns, and every one sings. The church seats about two hundred, and it was very nearly full last Sunday evening, when your correspondent attended, the preacher being the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, Bishop of Mexico. The sexton told us that this congregation was very little larger than that of previous weeks. Some had driven more than forty miles for the service.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

Death of the Rev. Leroy F. Baker.

Harrisburg: The Rev. Leroy F. Baker, senior presbyter of the Diocese, died early on Monday morning August 8. Death came following a year's illness that developed an attack of pneumonia. Mr. Baker was in his seventy-ninth year, and is survived by his widow and daughter.

The funeral service was held on Thursday morning at St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, the rector, the Rev. Dr. Oscar F. R. Troder, officiating, assisted by the Rev. Archibald M. Judd, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Harrisburg. At Mr. Baker's expressed request the service was simple, there being no music or eulogy. The Standing Committee and officers of the diocese acted as honorary pallbearers.

The Rev. Mr. Baker was born at Mount Pleasant, Wayne County, Pa., November 26, 1848. He was a graduate of Cornell University and of the Philadelphia Divinity School. He was ordained Deacon on June 11, 1875, and Priest September 23, 1876, by the Rt. Rev. M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Bishop of the Old Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, which embraced the present Diocese of Harrisburg. Upon his ordination he was appointed as missionary at Great Bend and New Milford, Pa. Three years later he became rector of St. Paul's, Harrisburg, assuming charge July 13, 1879. While rector of St. Paul's he organized Trinity Church, Steelton, holding first services there December 11, 1879. He also organized St. Andrew's Church, Harrisburg, where he held the first service February 1, 1903.

In 1905, Mr. Baker resigned the rectorship of St. Paul's to accept appointment as General Missionary of the Diocese of Harrisburg, with headquarters at Selinsgrove. After serving in this capacity for nearly twelve years he resigned from the active ministry and moved back to Harrisburg to become private secretary to Bishop Darlington, in which capacity he continued for nine years. He was forced to resign last year because of ill health.

During the course of his ministry, Mr. Baker has been prominent in diocesan affairs, and has held many important offices. He was for several years

Collect for Twelfth Sunday After Trinity.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than either we desire or deserve; Pour down upon us the abundance of Thy mercy; forgiving us those things whereof our conscience is afraid, and giving us those good things which we are not worthy to ask, but through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, Thy Son, Our Lord. Amen.

Wealth.

My Master was so very poor,
A manger was His cradling place;
So very rich my Master was
Kings came from far to gain His grace.

My Master was so very poor
And with the poor He broke the bread;
So very rich my Master was
That multitudes by Him were fed.

My Master was so very poor
They nailed Him naked to a cross;
So very rich my Master was
He gave His all and knew no loss.

—Selected.

Faith.

What is included in Christ's command: "Have faith in God?"

First, have faith that God is. The "Hebrews" say, "He that cometh to God must believe that He is". "That is easy," some one may say, "I am no atheist; of course I believe in the existence of God." Therefore, that cannot be all. We must go farther. To believe that God is means that we count God in. It must not be a belief held separate in our minds, as we believe the sun is so many million miles away from the earth, a fact which we keep in a pigeon hole for occasional use. Rather, it is like our belief that the sun is a source of light, and we count it among the facts of our life. We open our houses to the light; we take care not to have a single room in our house that cannot get it. So we are to believe that God is. He is, and He is a fact in our life, the chiefest fact of all. There are many facts of life we must take into account if we are to live well. But God is the chiefest fact of all. We must take Him into account, we must build His existence into the texture of our thought and life, as we build the sunlight into our houses.

That involves a faith, not only that God is, but that He is present with us. He is as really present as the sunlight, which came into our house this morning. And His presence is a more universal fact than sunlight, for sunlight passes and it is night. But day and night, and in all the affairs of life, God's presence with us is a fact calling for recognition. Believing in the presence of God, we adjust our home to that supreme fact. Faith says, "God is here in my home, and I must please Him". Believing in the presence of God, we adjust our work to that fact. Faith says, "God is with me in my work, and it must be governed by His will". We adjust our citizenship to the same fact. We say, "God is in our city, with certain purposes for its life, and I must see to it that my life as a citizen helps Him to His goal". So also God is present in the Church, in its worship and ministry and life, and I must see to it that as a member of the Church I am doing something by my prayer and my love and my help to sweeten its atmosphere and make it fitter for His use.

"Have faith in God," Jesus says, "the faith which believes that He is and is present with you, the faith which seeks to adjust the whole of your life to that supreme fact."

Second, have faith that God loves. Why is it that we often find it hard to adjust our life to the presence of God? Why is it indeed that we sometimes feel that to do so would be to hamper and cripple and darken our life? It is because we do not really believe that God loves us, and that His will for us is always our best and richest life. However we may deny it in words, the thought of our heart is that God is hard, that His will would cramp us and take some of the joy and success out of life. Distrust of God's goodness was the first evil thought planted in the heart of man. The serpent said, "Has God forbidden you to eat of this tree? It is because He knows that if you did eat of it you would become wise like Himself". Thus man got to believe that God in forbidding him something was shutting him out from some great good. As this distrust of God's goodness was the first evil thought of God in man's heart, so it is one of the last to be got rid of. We persist in thinking that if we take God's will into certain parts of our life, it will mean shutting the door against some good or cutting out of our life something which will leave it poor. We profess to believe that God is love. But it is one of the last facts about God that we work into our lives.

If we acted on this faith on God's love, how would it show itself? It would show itself, first, in obedience. We would seek His will in all affairs of our life, believing it is always a good will, and that obedience to it can only enrich us. Obedience must always be good and best, because God loves. Second, it would show itself in peace. One or other of two things is a sort of excuse for worry. If a man is guide and governor of his life, it is difficult to see how he can help worrying. For he does not know what will come into his life tomorrow, nor does he know that he will be able to meet it. Or, if he is a Christian and so has God to guide and govern him, but he thinks God is hard and may cripple him somehow or darken him or keep him from success or happiness, how can he help worrying. But if God loves, if the great fact of the universe for me is that God loves and loves me, why should I be anxious? Love guides, love governs, and it is God's love, the love of the Omnipotent Father. Third, this faith would show itself in hope. The disciples following Jesus came to the dark week of the crucifixion, and they lost hope; with broken hearts they buried their hope in the grave of their Master. We know now they should not have given up hope just then. With more faith they would have believed that Christ's love could not be defeated, and that if He seemed to suffer defeat it would turn out to be victory instead. Let a man follow Christ, believing in His love and purpose of good, believing also that He is mightiest of all, and hope will burn in his heart through dark days.

Third, have faith that God hears. God asks us to pray and promises to hear and answer. With a present God and a God who loves and who, being God, has all power, prayer is natural and reasonable and indeed inevitable. Have faith in the presence and love of God, and you are always to yourself a penitent who needs to be forgiven, a beggar who needs to be made rich, a servant who needs strength.

Of course, there are many difficulties connected with this matter of prayer. But two things are absolutely certain. First, God bids us pray and promises to answer. Do you think He would do that if prayer were of no avail? Would you treat your children so, leading them to expect and dooming them to disappointment? Second, experience has proved that prayer works. No man ever prayed the prayer of the publican in the publican's spirit, but he was forgiven. No man out of a deep sense of need ever cried to God for help, but he got it. No man, when the affairs of his life were perplexed, ever cried to God for guidance, but the light of heaven shone on his way.

Have faith in God, that He is, that He loves, that He hears. Cultivate this faith. Seek it as the secret of life. With it life is rich and glad. Without it life is poor and goes out into the dark.—David Ross, in Presbyterian Banner.

Happiness.

"Why," I sometimes wonder (though usually I take the statement for granted and enjoy it without speculation), "am I essentially and almost certainly happy?" Good health, I suppose, is one reason for not only have I a good health heritage, but all my life long I have been in surroundings which preserved health and made a normally functioning body a natural result.

An eager, interested mind is, doubtless, another reason. The best that American education offers a woman has been mine for the taking. I have lived in a home where good books were considered as important and were supplied as liberally as food; where table-talk and the commonplace events of every day were constantly made the source of intellectual stimulation for the children of the household. I have been taught to observe and so have found the world of Nature a very lovely thing. I have been trained socially and have made joyous friendships. I have known the delight of normal, affectionate family life. I have had a "job" that has engaged and developed such natural powers as I possess and has opened a way to ever-increasing usefulness and joy.

But some way I am sure there is a more fundamental reason for my happiness than any or all those I have mentioned. Twenty years ago, when I was a junior in college, there came, almost instantaneously, though out of months of intellectual struggle, a clear conviction that God was able to solve my problems, to guide me into intellectual freedom and safely to develop my life. Quite unemotionally, but with a certainty then wholly inexplicable to me, I concluded to risk myself and all my interests on that conviction. I know that on that decision my present happiness is based.

As years have passed, God, revealing Himself in the Lord Jesus Christ, has proved, over and over again, His power to solve not only the problems of the mind which have confronted me, but also those even more insistent ones which relate to my life with others and to the effort to conquer sin in my own heart. Indeed, in every phase of thought and action, He has become a gracious Comrade, Source of utter confidence. I am not afraid of life. Why should I be?

Be Patient.

Be patient with the young;
Their life is just begun.
Their questions do not spurn
For much they need to learn.
Oh, help them in the fight
Of life, for truth and right

Be patient with the old;
Their life is nearly told.
Many pangs for you they bore
In childhood days of yore;
And you may be some day
As old and "queer" as they.

Be patient with them all
As on thy strength they call.
Thank God that even thou
Canst help another now—
That in thy ministry
The Master, too, they see.

Be patient with thyself;
Greater than earthly pelf
Are love and patience, too.
This try, O soul, to do
Tho' it may seem to be
Hardest of all to thee.

Be patient, heart of mine!
God's sun will ever shine.
Wait on the Lord and He Will give thee victory.
Be patient then—be still
And wait the Father's will.

—M. H. Willingham, in Christian Index.

Carlyle to His Mother.

"No able man ever had a fool for a mother," said sharp-tongued, clear-minded Thomas Carlyle. Neither did any good man have a bad woman for a mother. It would be simple enough to find a hundred expressions of love and gratitude that famous sons have written about the mothers that bore and bred them, but is not all that they could say summed up in this charming letter written by Carlyle to his mother on his birthday?

"Dear old mother, weak and sick and dear to me, what a day this has been in my solitary thoughts! For except a few words to Jane I have not spoken to any one, nor indeed hardly went out, it being dusk and dark before I went out—a dim, silent Sabbath day, the sky foggy, dark with damp, and a universal stillness the consequence, and it is this day gone fifty-eight years that I was born. And my poor mother! Well, we are all in God's hands; surely God is good. Surely we ought to trust Him, or what is there for the sons of men? O my dear mother, let it ever be a comfort to you, however weak you are, that you did your part honorably and well while in strength and were a noble mother to me and to us all. I am now grown old, and have various things to do and suffer for so many years that there is nothing I ever had to be so much thankful for as the mother I had. That is a truth which I know well, and perhaps this day again it may be some comfort to you. Yes, surely, for if there has been any good in the things I have uttered in the world's hearing, it was your voice essentially that was speaking through me, essentially what you and my brave father meant and taught me to mean; this was the purport of all I spoke and wrote. And if in the few years that may remain to me I am to get any more written for the world, the essence of it, so far as it is worthy and good, will still be yours.

"May God reward you, dearest mother, for all you have done for me. I never can. Ah, no, but will think of it with gratitude and pious love so long as I have the power of thinking, and I will pray God's blessings on you now and always."—Youth's Companion.

The Rural Problem.

Among eight or ten notes on Rural Work, from as many fields, appearing in the April issue of The Rural Messenger, is the following from Olympia:

Those of us who have studied the Rural Problem, religious and sociological, seem to agree on these findings: We have in our diocese a huge territory—most of our farmers own or are by way of owning their land. Nearly all have motor cars, but there is a real isolation problem none the less. The distances are heroic and there are many islands and an astonishing coast line. Many of us are nautical miles galore from our own church, many indeed are far from any religious service, and there is a rather large floating rural population—fishermen and loggers, especially the latter. The so-called "Community Church" is the commonest effort at salving the religious problem, and it is a valuable factor in the community it reaches. The radio services reach even more people and the possibilities there are breath-taking.

On the whole the people do not lack religious entertainment, or even kindly, generous ministration. What we do lack is the Sacramental Life of the Church. Only less than that is the lack of rounded religious instruction.

A solution, for one island, has been found in that one of the larger churches in Seattle shares its vicar with these isolated fellow Christians. He comes to the island on a Saturday afternoon boat and visits diligently his scattered flock, and on the second Sunday of the month has, in a private home (near the wharf), a seven o'clock Holy Communion Celebration; and takes the eight o'clock boat to town, getting there in time for breakfast before Sunday School and the morning services. This is just the one visit a month, but it is just life from death to some of us. "Baptism and the Supper of the Lord"—these we Auxiliary women of Olympia believe to be the special need of the country people in our Diocese. It is astonishing from what unexpected quarters the response comes when this opportunity is offered. "Now that," people say, "is worth while."—Henderson D. Norman, Educational Secretary, Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Olympia.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of Promotion.

Among my Nine Grandchildren there be two brothers. And Bobby is nearly seven, and is in the Second Grade; and he can count by Fives, saying five, ten, fifteen, twenty, and so on up to an hundred. Whereas Billy doth Count Laboriously, one, two, three, four, and so on up to about seventeen.

And Bobby is in the Second Grade because he could Read before he went to school; for so did his Mother teach him. And Billy, he began to read when Bobby did, and he can read almost as well. Howbeit, he goeth not to school, for he is not yet Five.

Now it came to pass on a Recent day that Billy was missing about the middle of the forenoon, and when he appeared, he walked home with Bobby. And they both were Very Proud.

For Billy had taken his Book under his arm, and walked alone to School. And he entered the First Grade, and said, I can Read.

And he stood up before the Teacher, and did Read aloud out of his Book.

And the children were Amused. But the teacher said, Be quiet, Children, and listen for he doth read Remarkably Well.

But Billy was Oblivious of any other Business that the School might have on hand that day, and he would fain have read his Book through.

But after a time, and not a very short time, the Teacher said, Billy, thou hast read well and now I think it were well for thee to go to Bobby's room, and be ready to walk home with him.

So he went to the Second Grade. And he said unto the Teacher, I can read.

And he stood up and read aloud.

And the teacher listened to him for some time; and the Pupils were Interested. And the Teacher said, That will do, now, Billy. Thou dost read well. Sit thee down with Bobby, and it soon will be time to go home with him.

And all these things did Billy and Bobby relate unto their Mother and that night they related these things again unto their Father. And again did they relate them unto their Grandfather.

Now on the day after this incident, Billy put on his hat and coat, and said, I go to school again with Bobby.

And his Mother said, I think it were better not to go today.

But he said, I went through the First and Second Grades yesterday, and today I will go through the Third and Fourth.

Now when all this was told to me, I shouted with Approval, but not in his presence—and I said, He will find that his Promotions in life come a bit more slowly, but he will take them, one by one, and nothing will ever halt him.

And Billy said, Bobby is older than I, and taller than I, and more learned than I. Bobby can count by Fives.

Even blessings that have been promised, and that are sure to come, have to be waited for. Our time of desiring a promised blessing is not always God's time of giving it. Yet it will come just when it is best for our good and for God's glory. "Ye have need of patience, that, having done the will of God, ye may receive the promise.—Henry Clay Trumbull.

For the Young Folks

The Still Small Voice.

Now that the birds of summer everywhere
Atune the earth to their glad roundelays,
Man treads no more the weary track of care
That led through gloom of winter's miry ways.
We look to God, and joy is in the air.
Yes, the heart lifts and looks above, in praise.

This is God's grace. His is the will and power
That swing the earth through pathless ways of space.
His love bears fruit in warmth of sun and shower,
And all the world becomes a flowery place;
The woods exult in the glad sunshine hour,
And meadowlands all wear a pleasant face.

Through forest depths we like to wander out,
And over hills that are a vantage-ground.
Look, far and far the leafy world about
All testifies of Him whose power profound,
Tempered with love, banishes grief and doubt,
And scatters wealth of summer joy around.

The higher hills are calling. Let us go.
For now that summer holds high revel here,
Beauty and grandeur beckon us, and so
By lovely, lonely lakes, all crystal clear,
We pitch our camp, and near the high peak's snow
Unto the still small voice incline the ear.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus and the Law.

M. L. G.

"I came not to destroy, but to fulfill," said our Master. But the Pharisees did not like His way of keeping the law. They had a thousand tiny rules, too many for the common people to remember, and so their law became a burden. But He gave a new commandment, in one word—Love—and in giving it broke all the cords that bound His people down, and gave not only the Law, but power to keep the Law.

You may hear people speak today of how much breaking of the laws of our land there is. "It is all right," some say, "if you don't get caught." I think we would do well to bring into all our thought of keeping the law, the new commandment. "Is it kind?" we may ask, instead of, "Can I do it and get away"?

For love will not be willing to injure our brother. Even if some little wrong act seems safe for ourselves, if it is not right for our neighbor, we will not do it. We will not weaken the whole law by letting it sag where we should uphold it.

"I came to fulfill." Love is the fulfilling.

The Best Friend is Love Himself, and in faithful following of Him lies the answer to every question of law. Shall we not learn His Law by heart—in our hearts, written there as God wrote the Commandments in the stone of Sinai. "A new Commandment I give unto you—that ye love one another."

The Jolt.

(In Two Parts.)

PART 1.

A shrill whistle, the stamping of feet, the babble of voices from the galleries, the disappearance of all players from the floor, meant that the first half of a basketball game between Morello and Winston high schools was finished. It was the last game of the season, and interest ran high among the spectators.

The players were not off the floor before Freeman Horton, cheer leader, was in his place on the little platform in front of the Morello gallery. The shouting increased in volume as the students sang out the score: "One—two—three—four—five! Winston! Winston! Winston!"

"One — two — three — four — five — six — seven," ending in an ecstatic, long-drawn-out "Mor-r-r-rello!"

There followed a series of enthusiastic yells delivered with remarkable force and unison. Horton, an embodiment of energy and school spirit, was one of those follows who are always given the places that require more energy than the average high school student possesses.

He was president of the juniors, treasurer of the Athletic Association, and cheer leader. The students generously gave him all due honor. They admired his personality, had no doubt of his ability, and followed him loyally.

When the game ended in victory for Morello, Freeman was the first to leap down with a hearty handshake and a slap on the back for the members of the home team, and then he took charge of the visitors. The players soon escaped from the eddying crowd to their dressing rooms, and in a few minutes were on the way to a cafe downtown where school-girls served steaming bouillon and sandwiches. As Freeman, after seating the guests, was about to take his place at a nearby table, he felt an imperative tug at his sleeve.

"Come with me; Miss Lettie will serve us at this little table in the corner. I want to talk with you," commanded Mr. Carnes, manual-training instructor and a close friend of all the boys.

As they dropped into chairs, the teacher began to speak enthusiastically of the recent game, frankly complimenting Horton on his own part in it. "That yelling was great!" he exclaimed. "The inspiration of a rousing cheer will do half the work of winning a game. You have them pretty well trained, Free."

Freeman was pleased at the praise, but he knew it was deserved. There is no harder work than training fellows to cheer. His rather absent-minded consideration of this fact was interrupted by his friend's words:

"Morris said they wanted a boy this summer who would help sort and grade lumber. They want a member of the junior class because he will be through school next year. He could study the grades of lumber under my instruction, and the following summer would be given a position with them."

The older man's offer to recommend Freeman for the position was met with eagerness. The boy declared he could not have chosen a better opportunity for himself. Mr. Carnes promised to write Morris immediately, harboring not the least doubt that the place would be his.

Free was in high spirits the rest of the evening. They sent Winston off in a storm of cheers and then walked home whistling. As he sprang up the steps of his home the moonlight showed two books lying in the porch swing where he had flung them as he passed in the afternoon.

He picked them up and carried them upstairs with him. A door opened as he reached the landing and his sister Lettie stepped out in kimono and slippers, eager to discuss the proposition she had heard Mr. Carnes making to him. Sitting on the top step with his books beside him, he talked freely of what he called his great luck.

"Perhaps dad will quit nagging me about my books now. It will seem mighty good to spend a summer away from them. I always liked to study before this year; but I have been so busy the last few months."

"A case of too much popularity," Lettie remarked. "Now, I never have more than one honor thrust upon me at a time, and it is much more convenient for one's peace of mind. Are you going to burn the midnight oil?"

"I am not!" Freeman declared as he stepped into his own room, "it's late. Besides, I am too excited to get down to such dull subjects tonight."

As he undressed he thought of the final examinations that would begin tomorrow. He had not been able to find much time to study those places in his books that one or another of his duties to his classmates had forced him to skim over lightly.

Some judicious cramming the past week gave him confidence, but he would be glad when examinations were over. There was no doubt he would pass, although he would like to feel certain of making grades he wouldn't be ashamed of. However, nothing kept him from falling asleep immediately when he had thrown off his clothes and jumped into bed.

On the way to school the next morning he met a half dozen boys, all eager to discuss the recent victory and prospects for athletics the next year. Freeman had never engaged actively in the school sports, but his enthusiasm for a good game was unbounded.

By the time they came within a block of the school, they had planned the defeat of all their rivals. Meeting another crowd a little farther on, they burst into singing the school songs and yelling at the top of their voices.

One of the older boys pushed to the front and made a megaphone of his hands. "Say, folks, they tell me it was Free who really won the game by leading our yells. All together now three cheers for Horton!"

As the shouts broke about their ears, Free's chum, Phil Larrimer, murmured: "You're going to be cheer leader next year, too. We have already decided that."

"Free," queried one boy, nudging him violently in the ribs: "Is it true that there is a balance in the athletic treasury? It sounds like a fairy tale to me. But that is what they told me last night."

Free nodded. "All debts paid and some to begin on next fall."

"Now we can buy a new football in September and start in right. You're some little treasurer, Free! Last year I had to make a speech before the student body, begging them with tears in my eyes to come across with their dues to the Athletic Association."

Most of the students went into the study hall determined to use well this last hour before examinations began. Freeman propped his history up on the study table and put his feet far ahead of him. Thrusting his hands in his pockets he stared steadily before him. —King's Treasury.

Life Arithmetic.

We have the wisest teacher,
And she has given us this rule
That helps us in our lessons—
You can use it in your school.

Always add a smile or two
When things are going wrong,
Subtract the frowns that try to come
When lessons seem too long,

Then multiply your efforts when
The figures won't come right,
Divide your pleasures, day by day,
With every one in sight.

Now if you always use this rule
You'll have a happy day,
For lessons then are easy,
And the hours fly away.

A Little Boy's Dream.

One day Freddy waked up early in the morning and was very hungry. He thought, "I'll get dressed as fast as I can and go down and get something to eat".

He quickly put on his clothes and went downstairs, but there was no one there. "Perhaps I'm too early," he thought, "and Mary is still asleep. Well, I'll go into the pantry and get some bread and butter."

He opened the pantry door, but there wasn't anything there! Every shelf was quite bare. "Why, where is all the food?" said the little boy.

Then he thought, "I will go down in the cellar and find some apples". But when he reached the place where the barrels had been there wasn't one there. "Who can have taken them away?" said Freddy.

Now he remembered how good some milk would taste and he said, "Perhaps John is out in the barn and I'll ask him to give me a cup of milk when he milks the cows".

He went out to the barn, but he couldn't find John. The mooly cow wasn't there, either. "Where can she be?" said the little boy.

Back into the house he went and up to his mother's room. But no one was there. Now he began to cry. "Oh, I can't get along without anything to eat and drink, and without my mother and father," he sobbed. Then he called, "Mother! Mother!"

"Yes, dear little son, what is it?" said his mother's voice.

The little boy rubbed his eyes and looked around and where do you think he was? Right in his warm little bed, and his dear mother was bending over him. "Why, darling, what is the matter?" she asked.

"O Mother, I thought you and father had gone away," said Freddy, "and I couldn't find you, and I couldn't find anything to eat or to drink."

"It was a dream, I think, dear, for mother is right here ready to take care of her own little son. Get up now and dress yourself, and you shall have a nice breakfast."

When the little boy came downstairs he ran out into the kitchen. "O Mary, I'm glad to you are here getting breakfast," he said. Then he told her of his dream. He peeped into the pantry. "I'm glad these shelves aren't really empty, as I thought they were."

When he sat down to breakfast he bowed his head, as father thanked God for the food. Then Freddy said, "I'm glad we have some food, father, and that the pantry shelves aren't bare and the apple barrels gone, as I dreamed."

"Yes, that would have been hard for all of us," said his father.

A nice rosy apple was on Freddy's plate and after he had eaten it, Mary brought him a dish of corn flakes.

"Do you know where the corn flakes came from, little son?" asked his mother.

"No, mother," he answered.

"The farmer planted the seed in the spring," said mother, "and God sent the sunshine and the rain to help the corn to grow. In the fall the tall stalks were cut down.

"Then the miller ground the corn from which the flakes were made for my little boy's breakfast. So you see, dear, that we must thank the farmer and the miller and our heavenly Father."

"And mooly cow for the cream," said the little boy, as his mother poured it over his cornflakes.

"Yes, and our heavenly Father for making the grass grow, so that the cow should have her food, and for sending the rain, so that she should have water to drink."

"Mother, God takes care of mooly cow, just as He takes care of me, doesn't he?" said Freddy.

"Yes, God takes care of all the animals," replied his mother.

"Does He take care of everybody, the big people and children?" asked the little boy.

"Yes, dear, He takes care of every one. When father goes to work God takes care of him. When we all sleep at night God watches over us and keeps us safe. He gives us food and drink, clothes to wear and a nice home in which to live," said mother.

"I'm very glad God takes care of us," said the little boy. "He is very good to us, isn't he mother?"—Sunday Story Hour, Courtesy Doran.

What Shall I Read?

Helen and Louise sauntered into the public library one day, with their arms full of story books to return. "I don't think I'll take out any books this time," announced Helen. "I'm tired of reading."

"Maybe I won't either," replied Louise. "I'm not tired of reading, but I certainly was bored with this lot of books. If I read any more of these I'll be so fed up on college and boarding school that I won't want to go away myself!"

The girls entered the library and left their books at the desk. Helen was ready to start out again, but Louise looked around rather wistfully. "Wish I could find something good," she whispered. "Wait a minute, Helen. Let's go back and look around." Helen rather reluctantly followed Louise, who had already started for the stacks.

"Looks hopeless to me," declared Helen, glancing at the rows and rows of drab-colored volumes.

Louise, already taking down a book, did not hear her. Louise was soon absorbed in the volume she had picked at random, and dropped down on a low step-ladder which stood between the stacks. The book was an account of life in the Philippine Islands in the year 1897. At last she jumped up and turned to find Helen, in order to inform her friend that they kept house-snakes in the Philippines, instead of cats, to catch the rats, of which there was always a great abundance. Louise then discovered that Helen had disappeared, and that it was already getting late. So picking at random two more volumes, she checked them out and hurried home.

Louise wiped the dishes that evening at a speed endangering their lives in order to get back to her book on the Philippines. Two nights later she had just settled down to one of the other books when she was called to the telephone. "Come and go to the movies with us," said Helen's voice at the other end of the line. "Father's going with us, and we will bring you home."

"Thanks a lot," replied Louise, "but I simply can't go tonight."

"Why not?" asked Helen, disappointment in her voice.

"Because," said Louise, "I've got Dr. Grenfell, on an ice-pan in the Atlantic Ocean, and I've got to find out whether he freezes to death before any one rescues him."

"What do you mean?" demanded Helen, quite taken back.

"Oh, you know. It's one of those books I got at the library the other day. It's too good to leave. Thanks for calling me up, anyway."

That set Helen to thinking. A book better than the movies must be a pretty good book. The next day she caught Louise and began firing questions at her. The result was that Helen herself became too absorbed that evening in the "Life of Dr. Grenfell" to join an informal party next door.

"Where shall I find more books like that?" asked Helen of Louise the next day at school.

"Under biography or travel," answered Louise. "There are lots more good ones. Last night I read about John Muir. It was much more exciting than those novels we've been reading, because you know it's all true. I've got a book on South America which I am going to start next."

Some little time later Helen announced that she had made a find..

"What is it?" asked Louise.

"'Concerning the Nature of Things,'" proudly announced Helen.

"That sounds like physics," commented Louise.

"Well, it is," replied Helen, "in a way, but it is most interesting. I never really understood about atoms until I read that book, and the part about radium is like a fairy tale."

"I'll try it," said Louise. "My, I'm glad we're finding out what's really in the library," she continued.

"So am I," affirmed Helen. "I didn't know there could be so many interesting books. I'm glad we didn't quit reading altogether when we got tired of those stories."—Girls' World.

Brownie.

One summer, while staying in a hotel at the seashore, I saw a very kind family who collected the scraps of food left from their meals, and the two little daughters carried them to a homeless dog who slept under the porch.

Poor hungry creature, how he enjoyed those meals, eating all eagerly! One day he had a large sweet potato for dessert, which he ate, wagging his tail gratefully. They called him Brownie, and it was thought that he was left at Cape May by hunters, because he was gun-shy.

I wonder if you know what a terrible thing it is for a dog, or any other animal, to be gun-shy. It means that they start and tremble in terror at any noise which sounds like the report of a gun, and long to hide in a dark, quiet place. They also suffer greatly during a thunder storm, and on the Fourth of July, when there are so many loud noises.

Brownie loves the beach at Cape May, and seldom goes into the town. He would probably have perished from cold and hunger during the severe winter months except for his most devoted friend, a very kind lady, who did not have a home to which she could take him, but who carried warm meals to him, and interested another lady, who gave him a large box for shelter, with plenty of straw as bedding. This good friend tried hard to find a home for Brownie, and at last she succeeded in doing so, and he is now a family pet.—Apples of Gold.

Winnsboro Blue Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest Man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.

Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—granite—genuine Winnsboro Blue. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

Of All The Gray Granites,

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes that resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Deaths

HANSELL: Died, at Saint Albans, West Virginia, on August 19, MARY HARTRIDGE, elder daughter of the late Judge Charles P. and Rhetta Charlton Hansell, of Thomasville, Georgia. Funeral from St. Thomas' Church, Thomasville, Ga., on Sunday, August 21.

MISS MARY H. HANSELL.

On Sunday afternoon, August 22, there was laid to rest in Thomasville, Georgia, one of whom it can be said, "She hath done what she could".

Within a frail body there dwelt a soul of great spiritual power and richness whose influence and example was felt far and wide and will long be remembered and cherished. Her constant thought was "I must do the work of Him that sent me".

What she did for the city and county in which she lived was of the utmost value. As head of the Library with limited resources she combined in a remarkable way modern ideas in library work with the informality and friendliness of a true Southern home. Her quiet but steady devotion and enthusiasm for her parish and her work in it was an inspiration and a help to all.

Grant her Thy peace, O God.

HENRY W. NELSON.

WILLIAM CONWAY WHITTLE, JR.

"He asked life of Thee, and Thou gavest him a long life, even forever and ever." WILLIAM CONWAY WHITTLE, JR., entered into the Larger Life Beyond on Tuesday night, August 2nd, at his native city, Norfolk, Virginia. He was born June 27, 1881, in the fine old house which has been the home of his family for generations. He was the son of the late Captain and Mrs. Wm. C. Whittle; his mother, Elizabeth Calvert Page, was a daughter of General Richard L. Page. Thus he was descended from the leading families of both Upper and Lower Virginia. He was educated at the University of Virginia, and returning home from there had been in business in Norfolk ever since. He married Miss Georgiana Randolph Charrington, of Warrenton, Virginia, and they had three children: William Conway Whittle, Georgiana Charrington Whittle and Beverley Randolph Whittle, who, with their mother are all living in Norfolk. He is also survived by his four sisters, Mrs. J. Cabell Dabney, and Misses Alexina, Elizabeth and Mona Whittle.

His death is a loss irreparable not only to family and friends, but to his church and community; for a home life of the perfect type, he added a completeness that makes for love and influence to all who knew him, a Galahad among men: who could but love and delight in his warm and genial manner full of simple, unconscious charm; his loyal, untiring friendships; his quick, helpful sympathy; his utter integrity of word and deed; his quiet, unswerving, Christian life. He was devoted to his church, St. Luke's, in which he was born, and where he grew to manhood under the teachings of the Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, where he served as vestryman through many years (though his whole life has been but a short one), and where every Sunday one saw his dignified, noble face, and tall, stately form, sitting in the old-fashioned way together with wife and children, and one knew that his prayer was ever for the best of the Spirit's gifts for the Church he so steadfastly loved.

The love and high respect shown by the whole community in its grief at his loss is challenging proof of the worth of quietly living a fine Christian life, faithful as son, husband, father, brother, citizen, Christian. He was the very flowering of his fine forbears, himself a priceless legacy and inspiration to his children.

"He scarce had need to doff his pride or slough the dross of earth—
E'en as he trod that day to God, so walked he from his birth,
In simpleness and gentleness and honor and clean mirth."

Secretary of the Commission for Church Work among the Deaf; Secretary-Treasurer of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg for ten years; an examining chaplain by appointment successively of Bishops Rowe, Rulison, Talbot, and Darlington; deputy to the General Convention in 1892 and 1895; Archdeacon of Harrisburg for eight years until he became the General Missionary; member of the Board of Missions, and later secretary of that body until it was merged into the Department of Missions; deputy to the Provincial Synod; and Secretary of the Standing Committee, in addition to which he was a member of various other important committees in the Diocese. He was elected President of the Primary Convention of the Diocese, and also of the special Convention at which the present Bishop was elected. Mr. Baker was nominated for Bishop of Central Pennsylvania in 1898, when Bishop Talbot was elected.

Mr. Baker spent almost his entire ministry in what is now known as the Diocese of Harrisburg. He was known during his active days for his persistent work through personal contacts with the members of his parish. He was regarded universally as a man of highest spirituality and fine scholarship, charitable to an extreme, and with a self-sacrificing love for his fellow beings.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Mr. William Morgan Fowler, physical director and in charge of the young people's activities at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, died suddenly August 20, and was buried from the church to which he had given many years' valuable service. Mr. Fowler was from Flushing, N. Y., saw active service in France during the war, and came to the Church of the Good Shepherd about eight years ago. Mr. Fowler was well-known to the young people of the diocese, and will be much missed by them.

Bishop Juhan is at Sewanee, where he is acting as Young People's Bishop. He expects to return to the diocese about the first of next month.

The Rev. Menard Doswell, rector of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, has returned from a vacation spent in New England and Sewanee.

The Rev. C. A. Ashby, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, who was elected a delegate to the International Rotary Convention at Ostend, to be sent by his local club, was unable to make the trip, because of plans in connection with the church building this parish will shortly erect.

The Rev. Harris Mallinkropt, of Fernandina, has been added to the Standing Committee. The Rev. L. F. J. Hindry being made chairman in place of the Rev. Van Winder Shield, D. D., deceased.

OFFERS AN ENTREE INTO TWO MILLION RELIGIOUS HOMES

New Advertising Combination Formed by Members of the Religious Press.

By WILLIAM H. WOOSTER.

The recently announced combination of the leading religious periodicals into one big advertising unit to be known as the Association Religious Publications opens a rich, highly cultivated field to national advertisers.

This new advertising combination is made up exclusively of members of The Religious Press Department of The International Advertising Association. It offers an entree into some two million religious homes extending from Maine to California, which may be arranged for as easily as one buys space in a single publication.

It may be interesting to note that many of the religious publications now available in this unit (or their forbears) were not only the pioneers in religious journalism in America, but they were also the actual forerunners of our big National Magazines, which are the popular advertising mediums of today. Perhaps a little over half a century ago the religious press had the field almost to itself, and it amply demonstrated the power of advertising in marketing the products of the day. National advertising, however, was then in its infancy and these religious papers almost unaided, nursed and nurtured this lusty youngster, while it grew by leaps and bounds into the big industry it now is.

The advent of the big popular magazines with their attractive exterior and more or less sensational contents, was the signal for advertisers, to develop publicly campaigns on a scale hitherto unknown. The success of the original advertisers in the religious field had actually pointed the way to other manufacturers and producers to a land of golden opportunity. Strange to say, however, the medium which had already proven itself as a tremendous factor, if not the greatest power, in reaching the "key" homes of the country, had gradually become ignored by the advertising world it inspired—if it did not wholly create.

In their haste to reap the biggest harvests in the shortest and easiest way, general advertisers had gradually reduced, or eliminated entirely, their advertising from the religious press, flocking almost in a body to "intensified" fields. The lure of big circulations has caused them to sacrifice an essential element of all successful advertising, viz., prominence. That national advertisers are also now recognizing that general magazine advertising is not alone the solution of their problem, and that "flock" advertising can be, and is being, overdone, is evident on all sides. One expert advertiser places the waste in this field as high as ninety-five per cent.

To this statement, every advertiser who is obliged to go through, sometimes, one hundred pages or more of advertising to find out whether his own announcement has been inserted, will readily assent. The new religious press unit not only offers to national advertisers an almost undeveloped field, but it safely guarantees that its advertising pages are read and carefully noted by loyal subscribers to whom each issue of their favorite religious paper comes as a distinct message. The circulation, running into millions, either among the weeklies or monthlies now may be purchased through one stroke of the pen.

A highly important experiment is now ready for a trial by advertisers who can meet the test of high ethical standards and service.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, General Missioner of Port Washington, L. I., has sailed for London to take charge, during September, of Holy Trinity Church, Selhurst, S. E. He returns in October to resume his mission work opening at St. Mary's, Kansas City, Mo., on the fifteenth. His address in London will be, care American Express Company, Haymarket.

The Rev. Wm. S. Blackshear, rector of St. John's Church, Versailles, Ky., who is supply for Dr. H. P. Almon Abbott, at Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, Md., sails September 9 for England, where he will spend a year of post-graduate work in Oxford University.

While your salvation depends on Jesus and His finished work, and on that alone, your enjoyment of that salvation depends very much on yourself—on your holy walk with God, living daily by faith in Him who loved you and gave Himself for you. Without this you may be a Christian, but you will never be a peaceful, praising, happy Christian.—F. Whitfield.

On one occasion I met a mountaineer on a by path and asked him what he was then doing. "Wuking for the same ole Coperation, the old 'oman and the chilluns". So am I, as you see.

When compelled to give up Missionary work in the mountains by bad health of myself and wife I sought out this near Colonial Church—it sent a delegate to Council in 1779—set off here in the country by itself and continued the Missionary work.

The Church and Rectory, after thirty years without a Rector, have been renovated and restored at a cost of $2,500, all paid—but it has about exhausted our resources.

The pressing need for Rural Work are Parish Houses or halls for conferences, lectures, recreation, etc.

Please help us to get one for St. Luke's. Send checks to me.

Yours still in the work,

CHURCH EQUIPMENT SERVICE.

This new feature in the Southern Churchman will be appreciated by its readers. It will give them an insight into the finest tools and the best methods in the finest and best work of all—the Lord's work, more generally thought of as church work.

Few churches are complete and fully efficient. Some have the very best in an outdoor bulletin board, but have not of the possibilities of reaching further into the community with a church bell or chimes. Some have gotten the most beautiful of pews, but have not thoughtfully considered the effect a beautifully-toned organ would have in creating and developing the spiritual attitude of the congregation.

Many churches—their ministers and active lay workers—are constantly alert for new methods and better ways of doing the best work. Others are in a rut—satisfied to do the same thing in the same way. It is hoped that this service will be of value to the first class and that it will act as a stimulant for the second group.

Church Equipment Service is planned for the readers' benefit. It is hoped that those who have problems will send them in and they will be treated as quickly as possible. The advertising adjacent to this plan will also carry valued suggestions, and it will pay to give it careful attention. This plan will be followed hereafter in the first issue of each month.

Our readers can help us to make this department very much more interesting if they write to us about any new equipment they have been using or are planning to use, telling us of its advantages and giving results where possible. For instance, one church found that their congregation increased very noticeably when they installed a new organ and engaged an organist who played good music for half an hour before each service. Possibly your church has had a similar experience with bells or chimes, or by the use of a bulletin board, or has added to the evening attendance by better lighting equipment, etc., etc.

Write and tell us your experiences, addressing this publication and marking your envelope or card, "Church Equipment Service".

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The practice of honesty is more convincing than the profession of holiness.

Often the best thing you can do with your doubts is to hang them up to dry. —Rev. Horace Bushnell.

If the yoke you are wearing is not easy, get out of it; it is not the yoke of Christ.

A poor picture is not helped by being put in a good light.

God makes the poisons of life work together and antidote one another for the good of His people.

Despair is the growth of pride and not of humility. Why are we overwhelmed with doubts and fears? Because we are unworthy. Is it not plain, therefore, that we look for a worthiness in ourselves, which we neither have nor ever shall have?

We doubt the Word that tells us, Ask,
And ye shall have your prayer;
We turn our thoughts as to a task,
With will constrained and rare.

And yet we have; these scanty prayers
Yield gold without alloy;
O God! but he that trusts and dares
Must have a boundless joy!
—George Macdonald.

Christ would be loved for all He did, and for all He is; and we cannot love Him for one, without loving Him for the other. The sense of His benefits will be in proportion to the sense we have of our own sinfulness, which cannot be without an earnest desire to be delivered from it.—Rev. Thomas Adam.

On the whole there is no possession so valuable as good habits, for this means that that only is the mind pledged and covenanted to good, but the muscles are supple, and even the bones are bent to what is good.—Rev. James Stalker.

No country is safe with its city in the hands of the enemy. If Christianity fails in the city it fails everywhere. The world has no use for a religion which fails at the point of supremest importance. The city must be cleansed, or like a mighty heart it will keep on pumping poison through every artery and vein of the body of our national life.—Rev. C. E. Jefferson.

When the tide has been coming in, I have often seen how it chafed and fretted, running into some narrow-mouthed bay, filling it, swirling it round, and lapping upon the shores, till by and by, still flowing, and flowing, and flowing, it filled the bay full. The tide had spent itself: there ran a smoothing ripple all over the surface, and the whole bay at last was at rest. And so the soul, while yet it is being filled, is disturbed by ripples and eddies; and by and by, when it shall have been filled full of the power and presence of God, it will be satisfied, perfectly at peace, full of joy.—Beecher.

There is no journey of life but has its cloudy days; and there are some days in which our eyes are so blinded with tears that we find it hard to see our way or even read God's promises. Those days that have a bright sunrise, followed by sudden thunderclaps and bursts of unlooked-for sorrows are the ones that test certain of our graces most severely. Yet the law of spiritual eyesight very closely resembles the law of physical optics. When we come suddenly out of the daylight into a room even moderately darkened, we can discern nothing; but the pupil of our eye gradually enlarges until unseen objects become visible. Even so the pupil of the eye of faith has the blessed faculty of enlarging in dark hours of bereavement, so that we discover that our loving Father's heart is holding the cup of trial, and by and by the gloom becomes luminous with glory.—T. L. Cuyler.

CONTRASTS

Reading the average daily newspaper of the average day, many of us are tempted to shuddering, sickened surmise whether there is anywhere remaining in the human race any beauty, purity and grace of life, courage and nobility of impulse in men, devotion and chastity in women. Column after column is filled with details of scandals and divorces in what reporters absurdly describe as "high life", which really is the cheapest and coarsest of low life. Other columns tells us of rascalities of officials, betrayals of trust, treacheries and villainies among those who have ample opportunity to be respectable and leaders for good, by comparison with whom the frankly criminal thugs and burglars seem almost admirable. Huge headlines and pictures assail our eyes with the immoralities of loose women and base men and we are drenched with brazen immodesties, tales of flappers and rowdies, ostentatious cheats, filthy hypocrisies, hideous heresies, vulgar sensationalists and publicity seekers misusing for shameful purposes the noble and sacred name of Christianity. Not only the ugly facts as they are obtruded on us, but realization that many thousands gloat and revel in reading them and that editors eagerly cater to such depraved cravings dishearten those of us who try to think seriously and hope for signs of betterment of humanity and the doing on earth of the will of God as it is done in Heaven.

Led by such displays to despondency, we may refresh, cleanse and strengthen our souls by observation of the contrasting conditions. We may consider what we know, or easily can learn, of the real life of the people of the small towns, the big towns, the rural communities, even what are called the slums as well as the better residential districts of the great cities. In all of these there are beauties and glories which do not show in the newspapers, are known by none but the All Loving and All Seeing Power, and, perhaps, the most intimate associates. Few of us realize that in New York City and Chicago, from which we get daily outpouring of horrors and atrocities until we think of them as like Sodom and Gomorrah, there are many hundreds of thousands of the righteous—quiet, clean living, devout, God-obeying, Church-going families who do not parade nor display themselves, go with mobs nor appear in the courts or police records.

For every faithless, vindictive or murderous wife whose name and personal history and photograph glare at us from the first page, there are thousands and thousands of faithful and faithfully loving wives, true as steel to all duties and obligations, of whom we hear nothing, because their lives and hopes are in their homes and churches and good works and they shun rather than seek notoriety. For every deserting or brutal husband told of in paragraphs or columns, according to his prominence or insignificance, there are countless thousands who are loving and loyal, unfailing in allegiance to the marriage vows of fidelity through any stress or change until death forces the parting. For every indifferent or cruel mother there are millions clinging to and sacrificing for sons and daughters. For every son who basely neglects or despises or repudiates parents, there are thousands who continue affection and reverence and diligent care until the inevitable separation of the completed lives and the lives beginning and yet growing. For every rebellious, disobedient, dissolute daughter, flaunting away to dreadful desecration of her womanhood, to scorn and misery, potters' field, there are many thousand daughters laying youth and strength and ambitions on the altar of filial duty and love, their arms enveloping to the last the worn bodies, their tender kisses, soothing and comforting tired white heads to the final wearied sigh.

There is more beauty and hope in the world than ever before. We can find them always if we will seek them. We can enjoy them to the depths of our hearts and souls if we will be parts of them, contribute as we can, even if no more than spoken sympathy and recognition, and so help the ceaseless undercurrent of the Christ spirit, flowing always and all around us beneath the surface of coarse follies and sordid chronicles of sin and corruption. The vast majority of the mass of the people delight in real manliness and the finer qualities of womanhood. The dirt and crime were thrust into obscure places on the inside pages and we were relieved of them, when the stories of the aviators crossing oceans came like cleansing and refreshing breezes in a fetid atmosphere. The populations of five countries forgot to be interested in the frailties and misdeeds of fellow men and put aside their own meaner impulses to glorify courage and modesty. Among the lowliest of the people there are daily instances of real heroism and generosity of which the general public hears nothing. Facts to prove the ever-increasing longing of the strong to aid the weak and misguided, the ever-growing interest of the fortunate in the welfare of the unfortunate, can be marshaled indefinitely. Never has the disposition to share one another's burdens been so widespread as now. Never has there been so much faithful and effective work, such lavish, open-handed giving by men for mankind, as we see now.

Contrast between horrors of which we read and realities of which we know, or may know if we will open our minds and eyes and ears, is glorious. In it we may find endless comfort and encouragement and stimulation to do what little or much we can to bring the time, surely coming, foretold by the wise old prophets, promised at the Annunciation—the time of universal peace and good will from which our race will march onward and upward steadily to its magnificent, mysterious mission and destiny.

WORLD CONFERENCE ON FAITH AND ORDER

By Reverend Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

THE commission whose business it will be to carry forward the work of unity during the interim between this conference and the second such meeting, has been chosen, and it contains some thirty-five names. The following are the American representatives on the Continuation Committee: Bishop Charles H. Brent, Mr. George Zabriskie, the Rev. Peter Ainslie, the Rev. Robert A. Ainsworth, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Bishop William T. Manning, Bishop F. J. McConnell and the Rev. M. G. G. Scherer.

Conference's Message to Christendom.

The world-wide statement on the Nature of the Gospel, above referred to, is as follows:

"The World Conference on Faith and Order, met at Lausanne, August 3-21, 1927, expresses the message of the Church to the World as follows:

"(1) The message of the Church to the world is and must always remain the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

"(2) The Gospel is the joyful message of redemption, both here and hereafter, the gift of God to sinful man in Jesus Christ.

"(3) The world was prepared for the coming of Christ through the activities of God's spirit in all humanity, but especially in His revelation as given in the Old Testament; and in the fulness of time the eternal Word of God became incarnate, and was made man, Jesus Christ, the Son of God and the Son of Man, full of grace and truth.

"(4) Through His life and teaching, His call to repentance, His proclamation of the coming of the Kingdom of God and of judgment, His suffering and death, His resurrection and exaltation to the right hand of the Father, and by the mission of the Holy Spirit, He has brought to us forgiveness of sins, and has revealed the fulness of the living God and His boundless love toward us. By the appeal of that love, shown in its completeness on the Cross, He summons us to the new life of faith, self-sacrifice, and devotion to His service and the service of men.

"(5) Jesus Christ, as the crucified and the Living One, as Saviour and Lord, is also the centre of the world-wide Gospel of the Apostles and the Church. Because He Himself is the Gospel, the Gospel is the message of the Church to the World. It is more than a philosophical theory; more than a theological system; more than a program for material betterment. The Gospel is rather the gift of a new world from God to this old world of sin and death: still more, it is the victory over sin and death, the revelation of eternal life in Him who has knit together the whole family in Heaven and on earth in the communion of saints, united in the fellowship of service, of prayer, and of praise.

"(6) The Gospel is the prophetic call to sinful man to turn to God, the joyful tidings of justification and of sanctification to those who believe in Christ. It is the comfort of the glorious liberty of the sons of God. The Gospel brings peace and joy to the heart, and produces in men self-denial, readiness for brotherly service, and compassionate love. It offers the supreme goal for the aspirations of youth, strength to the toiler, rest to the weary, and the crown of life to the martyr.

"(7) The Gospel is the sure source of power for social regeneration. It proclaims the only way by which humanity can escape from those class and race hatreds which devastate society at present, into the enjoyment of national well-being and international friendship and peace. It is also a gracious invitation to the non-Christian world, East and West, to enter into the joy of the Living Lord.

"(8) Sympathizing with the anguish of our generation, with its longing for intellectual sincerity, social justice, and spiritual inspiration, the Church in the eternal Gospel meets the needs and fulfils the God-given aspirations of the modern world. Consequently, as in the past, so also in the present, the Gospel is the only way of salvation. Thus, through His Church, the Living Christ still says to men: 'Come unto me! . . . He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.' "

August 19, 1927.

Closing Hours of the World Conference.

After three weeks of discussion on matters bearing upon the life of the whole Christian world, the Lausanne Conference on Faith and Order came to a close today (August 21). The Cathedral was filled with an inspired congregation. All were happy and thankful that the conference, called under such circumstances as to challenge the whole Church and yet made up as it was of the most extreme groups (so much so that some feared that it could result in no constructive good), had been a pronounced success. As at the opening service, three languages were used and three addresses in German, English and French were heard. The hymns were also in three languages.

Bishop Paul Jensen, Moravian; Bishop Edward L. Parsons, Episcopal, and Pastor Elie Gounelle, Reformed, were the speakers. They treated jointly the text, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever", speaking respectively of what Christ means to the past, the present and the future, for the progress and well-being of the world. Bishop Charles H. Brent brought the great meeting to a close with the benediction. Thus ended the most significant and far-reaching conference ever held in the history of Christendom.

On Saturday the closing business session was held in the aula of the University. The statesmanship of Bishop Brent, Episcopal, the wisdom and sanity of Dr. Alfred Garvie, Congregational, and the timely suggestion of Bishop Fisher, Methodist, prevented the conference from impending disruption in its final session. Five of the six Conference Statements to the Whole Christian World had been received—bearing on the Nature of the Church, its sacraments, its ministry, its message and its faith. These were passed by the conference without dissent and will be broadcast to the Churches of all nations for their consideration, with a view to unity some time in the future. It was during the discussion of the statement on the relation of the united Church to the existing Churches, that a small group of High Church Episcopalians of America, augmented by a few other ecclesiastical extremists, threw an eleventh-hour bomb into the sessions. The entire report, which had represented days of collaboration on the part of delegates of divergent views, was attacked, the chief spokesman being Dr. Frederick W. Morehouse, editor of The Living Church, Milwaukee, Wis. It looked as though the report and all that it represented in the interest of harmony, would be lost to the conference and to the Christian world—as a unanimous vote was necessary to its reception for transmission to the entire Church. But motion was made that it be referred to the Continuation Committee for such action as they might see fit to take. While the message, which was harmless enough in the opinion of the writer and also in the majority mind of the conference, will not take its place alongside of the other five ecumenical documents to be sent out to all branches of the Church. I have been assured that the Committee has already taken steps to deal with it "sympathetically and constructively", so that its findings will not be entirely lost, as was at first threatened. It was a dramatic moment—so much so that Dr. Lew, leader of the Chinese delegates, made heated protest and declared, "I am shocked beyond measure at this eleventh hour surprise". It looked like a dagger had indeed been struck into the heart of the conference—but the day was saved by its reference to the Committee on Continuation.

It seems that the main objection hinged upon the fact that the report suggested inter-communion for the future Church (which obviously must be one of the sine qua nons of complete unity!): "Complete fellowship in the Church will not be realized until the way is opened for all God's children to join in communion at the Lord's Table." Practically all the leaders of the conference felt deeply the hurt of this wound in the body of the conference, but it is generally felt that no real harm has come, either to the results or to the spirit of the meeting.

Statement on the Sacraments.

It is significant that the following statement, drafted, read and discussed by representatives of the most extreme views throughout the body of the Church, was officially received, without a dissenting vote, to be included in the message, which is to go out from this conference to world-wide Christendom:

"We are convinced that for the purpose in view in this conference, we should not go into detail in considering Sacraments, by some called 'mysteries'. The purpose therefore of this statement is to show that there may be a common approach to and appreciation of Sacraments on the part of those, who may otherwise differ in conception and interpretation.

"We testify to the fact that the Christian World gives evidence of an increasing sense of the significance and value of Sacraments, and would express our belief that this movement should be fostered and guided as a means of deepening the life and experience of the Churches. In this connection we recognize that the Sacraments have special reference to the corporate life and fellowship of the Church and that the Grace is conveyed by the Holy Spirit, taking of the things of Christ and applying them to the soul through Faith.

"We agree that Sacraments are of divine appointment and that the Church ought thankfully to observe them as divine gifts.

"We hold that in the Sacraments there is an outward sign and an inward Grace, and that the Sacraments are means of Grace through which God works invisibly in us. We recognize also that in the gifts of His Grace God is not limited by His own Sacraments.

"The Orthodox Church and others hold that there are seven Sacraments and that for their valid administration there must be a proper form, a proper matter and a proper ministry. Others can regard only Baptism and the Lord's Supper as Sacraments. Others, again, while attaching high value to the sacramental principle, do not make use of the outward signs of Sacraments, but hold that all spiritual benefits are given through immediate contact with God through His Spirit. In this conference we lay stress on the two Sacraments of Baptism and Lord's Supper, because they are the Sacraments which are generally acknowledged by the members of this conference.

"We believe that in Baptism administered with water in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, for the remission of sins, we are baptized by one Spirit into one body. By this statement it is not meant to ignore the difference in conception, interpretation and mode which exist among us.

"We believe that in the Holy Communion our Lord is present, that we have fellowship with God our Father in Jesus Christ His Son, our Living Lord, who is our one Bread, given for the life of the world, sustaining the life of all His people, and that we are in fellowship with all others who are united to Him. We agree that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is the Church's most sacred act of worship in which the Lord's atoning death is commemorated and proclaimed, and that it is a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving and an act of solemn self-oblation.

"There are among us divergent views, especially as to (1) the mode and manner of the presence of our Lord; (2) the conception of the commemoration and the sacrifice; (3) the relation of the elements to the Grace conveyed; and (4) the relation between the minister of this Sacrament and the validity and efficacy of the rite. We are aware that the reality of the divine presence and gift in this Sacrament cannot be adequately apprehended by human thought or expressed in human language.

"We close this statement with the prayer that the differences which prevent full communion at the present time may be removed."

WHAT EVANGELICAL RELIGION IS

By Bishop J. C. Ryle

(d) The fourth leading feature in Evangelical Religion is the high place which it assigns to the inward work of the Holy Spirit in the heart of man.

Its theory is that the root and foundation of all vital Christianity in any one, is a work of grace in the heart, and that until there is a real experimental business within a man, his religion is a mere husk, and shell, and name, and form, and can neither comfort nor save. We maintain that the things which need most to be pressed on men's attention are those mighty works of the Holy Spirit, inward repentance, inward faith, inward hope, inward hatred of sin, and inward love to God's law. And we say that to tell men to take comfort in their baptism or Church-membership, when these all-important graces are unknown, is not merely a mistake, but positive cruelty.

We hold that, as an inward work of the Holy Ghost is a necessary thing to a man's salvation, so also it is a thing that must be inwardly felt. We admit that feelings are often deceptive, and that a man may feel much, or weep much, or rejoice much, and yet remain dead in trespasses and sins. But we maintain firmly that there can be no real conversion to God, no new creation in Christ, no new birth of the Spirit, where there is nothing felt and experienced within. We hold that the witness of the Spirit, however much it may be abused, is a real, true thing. We deem it a solemn duty to be no less jealous about the work of the Holy Ghost in its place and degree, than we are about the work of Christ. And we insist that where there is nothing felt within the heart of a man, there is nothing really possessed.

(e) The fifth and last leading feature in Evangelical Religion is the importance which it attaches to the outward and visible work of the Holy Ghost in the life of man.

Its theory is that the true grace of God is a thing that will always make itself manifest in the conduct, behavior, tastes, ways, choices, and habits of him who has it. It is not a dormant thing that can be within a man and not show itself without. The heavenly seed is "not corruptible, but incorruptible". It is a seed which is distinctly said to "remain" in every one that is born of God (1 Peter 1:23; 1 John 3:9). Where the Spirit is, He will always make His presence known.

We hold that it is wrong to tell men that they are "children of God, and members of Christ, and heirs of the Kingdom of Heaven", unless they really overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. We maintain that to tell a man he is "born of God", or regenerated, while he is living in carelessness or sin, is a dangerous delusion, and calculated to do infinite mischief to his soul. We affirm confidently that "fruit" is the only certain evidence of a man's spiritual condition; that if we would know whose he is and whom he serves, we must look first at his life. Where there is the grace of the Spirit there will be always more or less fruit of the Spirit. Grace that cannot be seen is no grace at all, and nothing better than Antinomianism. In short, we believe that where there is nothing seen, there is nothing possessed.

Such are the leading features of Evangelical Religion. Such are the main principles which characterize the teaching of the Evangelical School in the Church of England. To my eyes they seem to stand out in the theological horizon like Tabor and Hermon among the mountains, and to tower upward like cathedral spires in our English plains. It will readily be perceived that I have only sketched them in outline. I have purposely avoided much that might have been said in the way of amplification and demonstration. I have omitted many things which might have been handled as parts and portions of our system, not because they are not important, but because they are comparatively of secondary importance. But enough has probably been said to serve my present purpose. I have pointed out what I conscientiously believe are the five distinctive doctrinal marks by which the members of the Evangelical body may be discerned. Rightly or wrongly, I have laid them down plainly. I venture to think that my statements will hold water and stand the fire.

I do not for a moment deny, be it remembered, that many Churchmen who are outside the Evangelical body, are sound in the main about the five points I have named, if you take them one by one. Propound them separately, as points to be believed, and they would omit them every one. But they do not give them the prominence, position, rank, degree, priority, dignity, and precedence which we do. And this I hold to be a most important difference between us and them. It is the position which we assign to these points, which is one of the grand characteristics of Evangelical theology. We say boldly that they are first, foremost, chief, and principal things in Christianity, and that want of attention to their position mars and spoils the teaching of many well-meaning Churchmen.

To show all the foundations on which Evangelical Religion is based, would be clearly impossible in a paper like this. We appeal boldly to the Holy Scriptures, and challenge any one to examine our system by the light of the New Testament. We appeal boldly to the Thirty-Nine Articles of our own Church, and assert unhesitatingly that they are on our side. We appeal boldly to the writings of our leading Divines, from the Reformation down to the time of Archbishop Laud, and invite any man to compare our teaching with theirs. We repudiate with scorn the vulgar charge of novelty, and tell the man who makes it that he only exposes his own ignorance. We ask him to turn again to his New Testament, to study afresh the Thirty-Nine Articles, to take down and read once more the English theology of the pre-Caroline age. We court the fullest, strictest investigation into our case, and shall abide the result without fear. Of ourselves and our imperfections we may well be ashamed; but of what is called "Evangelical Religion" we have no cause to be ashamed at all. Let men say what they please. Nothing is easier than to call names, affix odious epithets, and frighten ignorant people, by raising the cry of "Calvinism" or "Puritanism" against the Evangelical School. "The curse causeless shall not come" (Prov. 26:2). I believe firmly that impartial inquiry will always show that Evangelical Religion is the religion of Scripture and of the Church of England.

SAFETY, CERTAINTY AND ENJOYMENT

By George Cutting

BUT how can I know that I have the right kind of faith?"

Well, there can be but one answer to that question: viz., "Have you confidence in the right person; i. e., in the blessed Son of God"?

It is not a question of the amount of your faith, but of the trustworthiness of the person you repose your confidence in. One man takes hold of Christ, as it were, with A Drowning Man's Grip.

Another but touches the hem of His garment; but the sinner who does the former is not a bit safer than the one who does the latter. They have both made the same discovery, viz., that while all of self is totally untrustworthy they may safely confide in Christ, calmly rely on His Word, and confidently rest in the eternal efficacy of His finished work. That is what is meant by believing on Him. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me HATH everlasting life" (John 6:47).

Make sure of it then, reader, that your confidence is not reposed in your works of amendment, your religious observances, your pious feeling when under religious influences, your moral training from childhood, and the like. You may have the strongest faith in any or all of these and perish everlastingly. Don't deceive yourself by any "fair show in the flesh". The feeblest faith in Christ eternally saves, while the strongest faith in aught beside is but the offspring of a deceived heart; but the leafy twigs of your enemy's arranging over the pitfall of eternal perdition.

God, in the Gospel, simply introduces to you the Lord Jesus Christ, and says: "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." "You may," He says, "with all confidence trust His heart, though you cannot with impunity trust your own."

"I do really believe on Him," said a sad-looking soul to me one day, "but yet, when asked if I am saved, I don't like to say yes, for fear I should be telling a lie". This young woman was a butcher's daughter in a small town in the Midlands. It happened to be market-day and her father had not then returned from the market. So I said, "Now, suppose when your father comes home you ask him how many sheep he bought today, and he answers, 'Ten'. After awhile a man comes to the shop, and says, 'How many sheep did your father buy today'? and you reply, 'I don't like to say, for fear I should be telling a lie'." "But," said mother (who was standing by at the time), with righteous indignation, "that would be making your father the liar".

Now, dear reader, don't you see that this well-meaning young woman was virtually saying, "I do believe on the Son of God, and He says I have everlasting life, but I don't like to say I have lest I should be telling a lie". What daring presumption!

Making Christ Out to be a Liar,

"But," says another, "how may I be sure that I really do believe? I have tried often enough to believe, and looked within to see if I had got it, but the more I look at my faith, the less I seem to have."

Ah, friend, you are looking in the wrong direction to find that out, and your trying to believe but plainly shows that you are on the wrong track.

Let me give you another illustration to explain what I want to convey to you.

You are sitting at your quiet fireside one evening when a man comes in and tells you that the station-master has been killed that night on the railroad.

Now, it so happens that this man has long borne the character in the place for being a very dishonest man, and the most daring, notorious liar in the neighborhood.

Do you believe, or even try to believe, that man?

"Of course not," you exclaim. "Pray, why?"

"Oh, I know him too well for that!"

"But tell me how you know that you don't believe him. Is it by looking within at your faith or feelings?"

"No," you reply, "I think of the man that brings me the message."

Presently a neighbor drops in, and says, "The station-master has been Run Over by a Freight Train.

tonight, and killed upon the spot". After he has left I hear you cautiously say, "Well, I partly believe it now; for to my recollection this man only once in his life deceived me, though I have known him from boyhood".

But again I ask, "Is it by looking at your faith this time that you know you partly believe it?"

"No," you repeat, "I am thinking of the character of my informant."

Well, this man has scarcely left your room before a third person enters, and brings you the same sad news as the first. But this time you say, "Now, John, I believe it. Since you tell me, I can believe it".

Again I press my question (which is, remember, but the re-echo of your own), "How do you know that you so confidently believe your friend John"?

"Because of who and what John is," you reply. "He never has deceived me, and I don't think he ever will."

Well then, just in the same way I know that I believe the Gospel: viz., because of the One who brings me the news. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this is the witness of God which He hath testified of His Son. He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of His Son (1 John 5:9, 10). Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness (Romans 4:3).

An anxious soul once said to a servant of Christ, "Oh, sir, I can't believe!" To which the preacher wisely and quietly replied, "Indeed, who is it that you can't believe"? This broke the spell. He had been looking at faith as an indescribable something he must feel within himself in order to be sure he was all right for heaven; whereas faith ever looks outside to a living Person, and His finished work, and quietly listens to the testimony of a faithful God about both.

It is the outside look that brings the inside peace. When a man turns his face towards the sun his own shadow is behind him. You cannot look at self and a glorified Christ in heaven at the same moment.

Thus we have seen that the blessed Person of God's Son wins my confidence. His finished work makes me eternally safe. God's Word about those who believe on Him makes me unalterably sure. I find in Christ and His work the way of Salvation, and in the Word of God the knowledge of Salvation.

But if saved, my reader may say, How is it that I have such a fluctuating experience, so often and comfort, and getting as wretched and downcast as I was before my conversion? Well, this brings us to our third point, viz.:

(To Be Continued.)

THE STORY OF A LOST OPPORTUNITY

By the Reverend George F. Bragg, D. D., Baltimore, Md.

THE influence of Virginia in the National Church in furnishing Bishops, in the work of foreign missions, and, in the progress of the work among the Colored race, since the War Between the States, constitutes an exceedingly rich and interesting chapter in the history of missions.

The particular item which fascinates and attracts us is the record of its work among the Colored population. Much faithful and good work was done during the days anterior to the Civil War, but, it was not until after the close of the war that steps were taken towards real Church extension among the Colored people. The first definite attempt in this direction was St. Stephen's Church, Petersburg, Va. Caroline W. Bragg, whose Church life found commencement way back in the days of Bishop Moore, her children, and grand-children, constituted the neucleus for expansion into larger proportions. In Petersburg her activities were begun when she cooperated with the late Rev. Dr. C. J. Gibson, in an "upper room" in laying the foundations for Grace Church. And, it was in Grace Church that the Colored group, who were to be the pioneers of their race, were trained and brought up. The character of many of the white communicants of that parish, and their sympathetic relation to this work, may easily be inferred from a brief paragraph in a letter written by a Northern lady of that period. The first edifice, used as a church, and also as a school building, by Northern white teachers, was destroyed by fire. Miss Amanda Aiken, a Northern white teacher, in writing to the commission in Pennsylvania concerning the fire, said:

"Of course the keenest disappointment is felt by the little flock who after so many longing years rejoiced at last in having a church of their own. In anticipation of the Bishop's visit, next month, Mr. Weddell was having the interior made more church-like, and they were to have the rite of Confirmation administered at an altar of their own. Mr. Weddell, who considered them as his congregation, and who had given his whole heart to their cause, is exceedingly disappointed, but like myself, more determined than ever to work until they have another church edifice of their own."

Mr. Weddell was a layman, a vestryman of Grace Church. Later, he entered the ministry, and became one of the prominent and influential clergy of the diocese. Shortly, a new church was erected.

But, the one man, above all others in Virginia, who was destined to put the Colored work on the ecclesiastical map, and courageously led in Church extension among the black people of Virginia, at that time, was beyond her borders. Virginia never had a truer son than he, and he himself first saw the light of day in one of the blackest counties of that state. Francis McNeece Whittle was born in Mecklenburg County, Virginia. He was born among black people, and he proved their friend in such sincerity as can be asserted of few other white men. It seems as if Providence had caused to be reared to his memory a monument as strikingly appropriate as it is beautiful. In the county where Bishop Whittle was born there are more Colored Episcopal congregations than in any other county in the United States. Born in that same county was a Negro babe who, during the years following, was confirmed, ordained deacon, and priest by Bishop Whittle, and who, ultimately, in an adjoining county, founded and established a Negro literary institution, now the largest one of its kind in the American Church, Bishop Whittle, during his Episcopate, ordained, both deacon and priest, six men. Others, by him, were ordained to the diaconate; but six he himself ordained deacon and priest. And, it is an interesting fact that five of the six were born in "the black belt" of Virginia, and a county in North Carolina touching this section of Virginia. The counties represented are Mecklenburg, Brunswick, Lunenburg, and Warren County, in North Carolina.

About the time of the rise of St. Stephen's in Virginia, Dr. Whittle, as the rector of an important parish in the City of Louisville, Ky., was, unconsciously, preparing himself, and others, for leadership of the work in his native state. He became very much interested in a Mr. Atwell, a West Indian, recently ordained in Louisville, by Bishop Smith, and in charge of Church and School work among the Colored people of that city. Shortly, a young Colored lady came from Philadelphia to Louisville, to aid Mr. Atwell in his work. The lady was a Virginian, a native of Lunenburg County. Both Mr. Atwell and Miss Jennings became exceedingly fond of Dr. Whittle, and some time later, when they were joined in holy matrimony, Dr. Whittle was the clergyman to tie the knot. Here, then, is the explanation of the presence on Virginia's soil of the first Colored clergyman of the Church. Just about the same time, Dr. Whittle thought it his duty to respond to the call that the Virginia Church had made upon him, as assistant Bishop to the aged Bishop Jones. Coming to Virginia, following his consecration, almost his very first Episcopal act was the consecration of St. Stephen's Church, Petersburg, and the Rev. Mr. Atwell, of Kentucky, followed closely behind him, becoming the very first rector of this initial venture in Virginia among the Colored race. The very next year, following the consecration, in St. Stephen's Church, Bishop Johns advanced Mr. Atwell to the priesthood.

It was the year 1859, 1869, 1879 and 1889, chronicle events of great significance in the history of the work among the Colored people in the Diocese of Virginia.

1869 was the starting point and it is rendered memorable because of the opening of this first Colored church, the ordination to the priesthood of its first rector, his admission to full membership in the Diocesan Council, and the respectful petition of the Vestry of St. Stephen's, to the Council, to be admitted, as a parish, in union with the Council. The Council of 1869, held at Fredericksburg, was an exceedingly stormy one. Its membership was distinctly, and clearly, divided on the admission of this Negro congregation as a parish. It was an able and exciting debate, which occupied the greater portion of the time of the convention, and which resulted in somewhat of a compromise.

The rector and vestry of St. Stephen's, in sending in their petition, and memorial, were acting under the immediate advice and direction of Dr. Gibson, "the father" of the enterprise, and the spiritual father of the black children begotten in the communion of the Church. Dr. Gibson was chairman of the committee on the Admission of the New Parishes, to whom was referred the petition. And, although this committee reported unanimously in favor of its admission, the report of the committee proved but the prelude to one of the greatest debates which has ever characterized that body. The friends of the Negro were not a few in that convention, but, alas, they were in the minority. It was a red-hot debate and provoked much feeling on both sides. And, although Mr. Atwell, the clergyman, was received and given full and complete privilege, the petition of the church, to be admitted as a parish was rejected. In lieu thereof, a "Standing Committee on Colored Congregations" was created to care for the interests of such churches.

The petitioners knew exactly what they wanted. Their memorial closed with the following language:

"And, therefore, respectfully pray your honorable body to receive us under your direction as a parish with all the rights and privileges of other parishes of this diocese."

Dr. Gibson argued that the committee "deem the favorable and immediate action of the Council upon this petition a matter of vital importance to the interests of our Church in their work among the Colored population of the diocese".

The action of the Council resulted in seriously arresting the work which had commenced with such enthusiasm and bright prospects among the Colored race. A few years later Mr. Atwell resigned, and removed to the Diocese of Georgia, and, in 1873, he was succeeded at St. Stephen's by the Rev. Giles B. Cooke, a former staff-officer of General Robert E. Lee. At first trouble threatened over the selection of Mr. Cooke, but it was smothered, and, in time, disappeared.

During the ensuing decade, never did any group of white Church people work more earnestly, and devotedly, among their Colored brethren, than many of the very best families of Virginia. Large Sunday Schools, of Colored children in various sections of the state were taught by ladies and gentlemen of the highest standing. Their approach was not only sympathetic, but they put themselves to extra pains to win the love and friendship of their pupils. In Lexington, under General Pendleton, was a very large and exceedingly interesting group. A Mrs. Brent, near Gordonsville, and Mrs. Pattie Buford, of Brunswick, distinguished themselves as few Southern women have ever done in creating the profoundest impression for good among the masses, the very poor and helpless. All the while, the only definite, and organized work, of a Church proper was that at Petersburg, where "Major" Cooke was pushing steadily forward, not only with the church, but with his Normal School, which was sending out the first persons of the Colored race to be employed as public school teachers. The Rev. Dr. George W. Dane, of Danville, was Superintendent of Education for that city and Pittsylvania County, and was deeply, and earnestly, interested in this work. He received a number of teachers from this school and put them to work under him. The year following the coming of Rev. Mr. Cooke to St. Stephen's, among those to whom he administered holy baptism, was a youth, John Pollard, born in Lunenburg County. He was an advanced pupil in the school, and was manly and aspiring. Shortly afterwards, he was sent out as a teacher to Northern Virginia. He became deeply interested in Church work, and, while teaching, was privately preparing for the diaconate by the Rev. William Meade Dame, at that time rector of Christ Church, Alexandria. Mr. Pollard was the first Colored person made a deacon in the state of Virginia, and it was the first ordination of Bishop Whittle of a Colored person. He was ordained at the Virginia Theological Seminary, with the class graduating from that institution in 1878. The ending of this first decade was significantly marked not only by this "first fruits", but, apparently, by "the breaking of the day". As a reward for the long and devoted services of the noble white men and women who had so self-sacrificingly engaged in this work, in the midst of opposition and discouragement of the Colored race, due chiefly to the great ignorance and illiteracy which prevailed at that time, all of a sudden, there was a knock at our ecclesiastical door.

At the convention of 1879, the story of this "knock" was briefly summed up in a paragraph of the report of the Committee on the State of the Church, submitted by the venerable Dean Packard, of the Virginia Seminary, who was its chairman. Said he:

"The remarkable work in Brunswick and adjoining counties under Mrs. F. E. Buford, has awakened great hope as to our being able to reach, on a large scale, and to influence for good this class of our population. Through the efforts of this refined and modest Church woman, under God, we call attention to the fact that an entire congregation, called the Zion Union Apostolic Church, consisting of their Bishop, more than twenty preachers, and about two thousand communicants, is seeking to be placed under the care of our Church."

Truly, did the late Dr. Weddell close the report of the special committee, with these significant words: "It may be a crisis with these Negroes; it is a crisis with us."

TOC H---ITS ORIGIN, MEANING AND PURPOSE

By Mary Mine Wilkins

"TOC H!" A queer sound to many who do not yet know; in reality an affectionate term, a nickname for a house that served the needs of men in the dark and difficult days of the War, and has since become a living thing, growing, as that which has life does, a spirit in service, a living and enduring memorial, a challenge to youth, an international movement already well begun.

Toc H was first a house in Popernighe, a little border town which served the feverish life of the devoted troops who held the Ypres salient at an average wastage of two hundred and thirty a day, for four years. Here men lived in fellowship and service with no limitations of rank—here they sought by hundreds its famous Upper Room, located in the attic of this crude dwelling and furnished with an old carpenter's bench for its altar—here they partook of a spiritual food and learned for the first time, in many cases, of the spiritual refreshment gained by such an experience.

The story of Toc H is bound up in love and service, something springing into life in the midst of war and its consequent hatred and horror, seeming to be prophecied in the diary of the English A. W. R. Don who died September 13, 1916, "Here indeed is death become creative".

There were found there everything to suggest home. Simplicity and crudeness of furnishing were there, but a spirit transformed it into something not to be defined, but sought by hundreds and hundreds, day and night. It was more than the other recreation centers, club houses and the like, which did valuable work for the men during those days. Toc H was something that had to live on. The men who were there believed that Something was that Upper Room which was approached only by a ladder, ministered to hundreds of men in the midst of great danger.

The house was really Talbot House, named as a memorial to young Gilbert Talbot, of Christ Church, Oxford, the youngest and most brilliant son of the Bishop of Winchester, who fell in the bitter fighting around Chateau of Hooge, due east of Ypres, in July, 1915. It had been Gilbert's ambition to be a great Christian statesman and those who knew him believed him already well equipped for the task. Talbot House became T. H., and then Toc H, as the letters are used by the English Army signaller to avoid confusion or misunderstanding. His code, so to speak, gave to the letter T the sound of Toc, and thus this house, this institution, this spirit of fellowship and service is known as Toc H.

Over the door of this Talbot House in Popernighe ran the motto, "All rank abandon ye, who enter here". Under this caption, surprising things happened and officers in high command alongside of doughboys and others of inferior rank, supped together and knelt together in the Upper Room. Mottoes in other rooms caught the interest of many homesick lads. A hand pointing to the door, read: "To pessimists, the way out". Over the guest book, instead of "Please register", one saw, "Put your name here, else how can we return your umbrella or trace our silver spoons". A man, coming in for the first time, just had to smile as he read "This is a library, not a lounge", and many a private there has seen an officer straightening up some dishevelled corner, or putting books in order on their shelves.

The House in Popernighe had faith in men, and devotion to the right. It had religion, with its fountain source in its Upper Room service. It has been called "The outward sign of that immortal spirit that lived in war to redeem the world".

Toc H, which was to live on, beginning in Popernighe under the leadership of a clergyman of the Church of England, naturally found its new life in England. As a peace-time movement, however, it was no longer of the Church of England. It regarded denominational differences as barriers to Christian unity and service, and at first limited itself to being definitely Christian. It would not be a new denomination. It could not yet be undenominational. It must be, therefore, interdenominational. Toc H has been translated to mean, "To Conger Hate".

In this spirit its new houses, or "Marks", were established.

The old house in "Pop" was transplanted to London. From thence it has taken root in the British Isles, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, the Malay States, India, Egypt, South Africa, South America, and the United States.

In the United States, branches have been established in New York, Philadelphia and Washington.

Now, what of its program, its method, its inspiration?

First of all, it takes one step at a time and this because it is primarily a growth, not an organization, something led of the Spirit, as it in turn leads others.

Ideally, each branch must have a House, though this is not a primary essential for beginning a group. This House is called Mark I., II., or III., in the order of its founding. Of necessity there must be a chapel in every House. No one is forced to use it, but it is there as a natural and normal part of the House. Here men, some perhaps unaccustomed to pray, gather and family prayer is a natural outcome. Here men find a quiet room, where private devotions, reading, or study, may continue uninterrupted for silence there is a recognized duty.

This chapel, doing its own silent work of conversion and uplift, is always closed on Sundays, thus avoiding competition with the Church. Family prayers and week-day celebrations of the Holy Communion rather emphasize week-day religion, thus making as one, religion and life, too often found to be things apart.

Ideally, each Mark has its Padre or Chaplain. He is a necessary element, whether living in the House or only very closely affiliated with it. Various religious bodies may be here represented. It is important primarily that he be consecrated to his task, to lead men to know Christ. Toc H has been so evangelistic in spirit and in the action of its Padre that large numbers of young men have been recruited for the ministry and many others furnished for leadership in such valuable movements as the "Boy Scouts". This, all quietly and silently, not by campaign, drive or conscious effort. The Padre is an important part of Toc H and must be selected with great care. There is also the Job Master to take care of the domestic and executive side of Toc H. Each house is the home of some who would otherwise be without home life and helpful companionship and these feel themselves hosts rather than guests in the social and work center of the larger group not living in it.

Outstanding features of Toc H are as follows:

1. They are self-governing and after initial expenses are paid, self-supporting.

2. They are pledged to a definite contribution of time and energy for pressing social needs in the community, for Toc H is the recruiting service for the Army of

3. An essential and interesting feature is the periodical "Guest Night" when every man comes to tell his story.

4. Each branch has its own Padre, chosen by the members, or several, representing various denominations.

5. They possess their "Lamps of Maintenance", symbolic of the Light passed on by failing hands continually to the young and living. These lamps are lit in the "Silence of remembrance" at the beginning of each Toc H gathering in memory of those that "grow not old".

6. These Branches or Houses are instinct, as was the "Brotherhood of the Trenches" with the spirit of high-hearted comradeship in the common task.

The four points of the Toc H compass are summed up in the words:

To think fairly,
To love widely,
To witness humbly,
To build bravely.

Toc H does not expand by drives or campaigns—hardly by the spoken word to that end. Rather, its very life radiates the beauty of service and fellowship and its spirit is caught by others and finds its root in new fields.

Mark I of the United States is located in Washington, and has its house, its chapel, its job master and all. Its Lamp of Maintenance was dedicated at a very beautiful service in Washington Cathedral on April 20 last, this being the first branch of Toc H in the United States. Other branches are in Philadelphia and New York.

The order of service for the dedication is beautiful and inspiring indeed, an act of praise and purpose, containing prayer, praise, litany, meditation, reading and pledge. The opening pages of this ritual contain what may be written here as an epitome of all that has been set down as an effort to set forth the glory and wonder and beauty of Toc H.

"Toc H, as we are beginning to see it, is a family of youth (and youth be it remembered is an affair of the heart, not merely of years), setting out both to be and to do something in and for its generation. In it, you will find fellows of all ranks (their rank forgotten for the time) and all shades of opinion who are seeking to put love and humor and cooperation in place of the bitterness and dismalness and strife which have marred the past. Each of them is pledged to build bravely, love wisely, think fairly and witness humbly and is called upon to pay 'Rent for his room on Earth' in service for and with others. Toc H is a tiny seed that first germinated in 'Flanders Fields' in 1915. It is already deeply rooted and who knows how high the tree may grow."

SOME TESTIMONIES TO THE OLD FAITH

Belief in Christ's Physical Resurrection a Necessity.

(From Bishop Collins Denny's recent address to the Methodist League for Faith and Life in Baltimore, Md.)

The background and authority of Jesus' claims to divine glory is the fact of His resurrection. This Modernism denies. I cannot understand how a man can deny the resurrection of Jesus Christ and call himself a Christian! They speak of a "spiritual resurrection", but their spiritual resurrection is no resurrection at all. The body of Jesus for Modernists remains in the tomb. The certainty of His spiritual existence beyond the experience of death is communicated to His disciples by no sense experience. Historically, for Modernists, Christ is no more risen than is Paul or John. This is in effect a complete negation of Christianity. It is a denial of the chief evidence of Christ's person, and of the chief bases of all His claims. In the presence of such a denial we dare not keep quiet. We must speak out. Those who deny this and other central truths of Christianity are not Christians. As Paul said, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain".

Dismiss Teacher for Resurrection Views.

Rev. W. A. Hearn, instructor in Soochow University, Soochow, China, was dismissed from his position yesterday after a hearing before the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, because he denied the physical resurrection of Christ.

Action of the Board was taken after the committee had received a recommendation for dismissal from Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, who had recently visited China, and the Rev. Mr. Hearn had reaffirmed his views on the resurrection as set forth in a questionnaire furnished him by Bishop Ainsworth.

A Personal Testimony.

By Howard A. Kelly, M. D.

(To those who have believed that faith in the Bible and the God of the Bible does not harmonize with the modern scientific spirit, the following testimony from a distinguished physician and surgeon should be of great value.

The editor of Appelton's Magazine says of Dr. Kelly:

"Dr. Howard Kelly, of Baltimore, holds a position almost unique in his profession. With academic, professional and honorary degrees from the Universities of Pennsylvania, Washington and Lee, Aberdeen and Edinburgh, his rank as a scholar is clearly recognized. For some twenty years professors of obsterics and gynecology at Johns Hopkins University, his place as a worker and teacher in the applied science of his profession has been beyond question the highest in America and Europe. At least a dozen learned societies in England, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, Germany, Austria, France and the United States have welcomed him to membership as a master in his specialty in surgery. Finally, his published works have caused him to be reckoned the most eminent of all authorities in his own field.")

I have, within the past twenty years of my life, come out of uncertainty and doubt into a faith which is an absolute dominating conviction of the truth and about which I have not a shadow of doubt. I have been intimately associated with eminent scientific workers; have heard them discuss the profoundest questions; have myself engaged in scientific work, and so know the value of such opinions. I was once profoundly disturbed in the traditional faith in which I have been brought up—that of a Protestant Episcopalian—by inroads which were made upon the book of Genesis by the higher critics. I could not then gainsay them, not knowing Hebrew nor archaeology well, and to me, as to many, to pull out one great prop was to make the whole foundation uncertain.

So I floundered on for some years trying, as some of my higher critical friends are trying today, to continue to use the Bible as the Word of God and at the same time holding it of composite authorship, a curious and disastrous piece of mental gymnastics—a bridge over the chasm separating an older Bible-loving generation from a newer Bible-emancipated race. I saw in the book a great light and glow of heat, yet shivered out in the cold.

One day it occurred to me to see what the book had to say about itself. As a short, but perhaps not the best method, I took a concordance and looked out "Word", when I found that the Bible claimed from one end to the other to be the authoritative Word of God to man. I then tried the natural plan of taking it as my text-book of religion, as I would use a text-book in any science, testing it by submitting to its condition. I found that Christ Himself invites men (John 7:17) to do this.

I now believe the Bible to be the inspired Word of God, inspired in a sense utterly different from that of any merely human book.

I believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, without human father, conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary. That all men, without exception, are by nature sinners, alienated from God, and when thus utterly lost in sin the Son of God Himself came down to earth, and by shedding His blood upon the cross paid the infinite penalty of the guilt of the "ungodly". I believe he who thus receives Jesus Christ as his Saviour is born again spiritually as definitely as in his first birth, and, so born spiritually, has new privileges, appetites and affections; that he is one body with Christ the Head and will live with Him forever. I believe no man can save himself by good works, or what is commonly known as a "moral life". such works being but the necessary fruits and evidence of the faith within.

Satan I believe to be the cause of man's fall and sin, and his rebellion against God as rightful governor. Satan is the Prince of all the kingdoms of this world, yet will in the end be cast into the pit and made harmless. Christ will come again in glory to earth to reign even as He went away from the earth, and I look for His return day by day.

I believe the Bible to be God's Word, because, as I use it day by day as spiritual food, I discover in my own life, as well as in the lives of those who likewise use it, a transformation correcting evil tendencies, purifying affections, giving pure desires, and teaching that concerning the righteousness of God which those who do not so use it can know nothing of. It is as really food for the spirit as bread is for the body.

Perhaps one of my strongest reasons for believing the Bible is that it reveals to me as no other book in the world could do, that which appeals to me as a physician, a diagnosis of my spiritual condition. It shows me clearly what I am by nature—one lost in sin and alienated from the life that is in God. I find in it a consistent and wonderful revelation, from Genesis to Revelation, of the character of God, a God far removed from any of my natural imaginings.

It also reveals a tenderness and nearness of God in Christ which satisfies the heart's longings, and shows me that the infinite God, Creator of the world, took our very nature upon Him that He might in infinite love be one with His people to redeem them. I believe in it because it reveals a religion adapted to all classes and races, and it is intellectual suicide knowing it not to believe it.

What it means to me is as intimate and difficult a question to answer as to be required to give reasons for love of father and mother, wife and children. But this reasonable faith gives me a different relation to family and friends; greater tenderness to these and deeper interest in all men. It takes away the fear of death and creates a bond with those gone before. It shows me God as a Father who perfectly understands, who can give control of appetites and affections, and rouse one to fight with self instead of being self-contented.

And if faith so reveals God to me I go, without question, wherever He may lead me. I can put His assertions and commands above every seeming probability in life, dismissing cherished convictions and looking upon the wisdom and ratiocinations of men as folly opposed to Him. I place no limits to faith when once vested in God, the sum of all wisdom and knowledge, and can trust Him, though I should have to stand alone before the world in declaring Him to be true.

THE SELF RESPECT OF MEEKNESS

By Arnold N. Hoath

THE SELF-RESPECT OF MEEKNESS.

THE word meekness has an offensive sound to our modern ears because it suggests to us the cringing "'umbleness" of the rascally Uriah Heap, or at its best the self-distrust of the saintly Mr. Harding, of Barchester Towers.

The qualities which our age admires are strength and aggressiveness—the bold energy of the "go-getter"—and meekness which has become synonymous in our thoughts with weakness is abhorrent to us.

Psychology, however, has made the surprising discovery that we have been mistaken in thinking that the desire for prominence and the will to power have their source in an over-abundance of strength. They come, so we are told, from this very thing we detest—weakness and self-suspicion. Some unpleasant and uncomfortable experience which has put us at a disadvantage before others has left within the sub-conscious self a permanent sense of inferiority, although the conscious mind no longer remembers the humiliating occurrence. Thinking to overcome or to disguise this shadowy feeling of inferiority and mortification, we put on superlative airs of superiority and strenuously seek to attain authority over others. Egotistic self-assertion, psychology warns us, has its roots in an inferiority that is secretly and unconsciously admitted, from which we are trying to escape. People anxiously seek the highest position of prominence, as in our Lord's parable, in an effort to hide from themselves and from others their unfitness for pre-eminence.

Meekness, on the other hand, has no relationship to weakness, but is born of a self-respect that feels no need for self-assertion or self-defense. There is, therefore, nothing quarrelsome about meekness—no inclination to raise trifles into affairs of importance, to stand solemnly or angrily upon one's dignity, or to be aggressively assertive. Meekness is the quality that brings with it the inheritance of the earth, for the simple reason that it knows no jealousy or fear, because one is absolutely certain of one's self and therefore wishes all men well. The meek people are the irrepressible people whom it is impossible to down by insult or injustice or to rouse to vindictive opposition by personal abuse. They see into the heart of things and so they are neither frightened nor angry with what appears upon the surface. They are the joyous people whose mastery of motives and freedom from false valuations give no opportunity to others to domineer over them. You cannot domineer over people who carry with them their own large freedom and honest self-respect.

It is evident, therefore, that it is impossible to insult one who possesses this quality of Christian meekness, for since meekness issues from a modest self-respect there is nothing for an insult to grab hold of. The elder brother felt insulted and in his resentment he would not go in to meet the prodigal, but had he not been arrogant and self-seeking, and in spite of his brother's conduct conscious of his own inferiority, he would have recognized no affront. Does not the sting of an insult lie entirely in the willingness of the one injured to receive it rather than in the power of the aggressor to hurt? Jesus commends the turning of the other cheek to one who smites us—that is to say, the way to be free from any possibility of being insulted is to possess the deep self-respect and calm poise that will not recognize or act upon an injury. The blow on the right cheek, to which Jesus refers, was not a slap, but a contemptuous flick with the side of the hand, as though one were to snap one's fingers in the face of one's antagonist. Its purpose was to outrage the feelings and to make one feel one's inferiority—and so it became a rabbinic expression for an insult. Jesus would teach us, therefore, that the way to be beyond the power of an insult is to possess the unassuming superiority that has its basis in a character so strong that it simply refuses to accept the intended insolence or affront. For you cannot insult people who will not be insulted—they are the meek who have entered upon their inheritance of the lordship of life. These, and not the arrogant or boldly aggressive, are the masters of life rather than its slaves.

That this and not weakness of character or weakness of purpose is the Christian meaning of meekness is evident from the gospel portrait of Him who described Himself as meek and lowly in heart, and yet also said, "I have overcome the world". There is a buoyancy and an energy about the gospel picture of Jesus that assures us that whatever meekness is, it is something that expects to triumph—it is not the putting of one's hands to the plough and then leaving the job because the work is strenuous or difficult and one doubts one's own ability. There are no marks of defeat upon the face of meekness. When the women wept as Jesus carried His cross towards Golgotha, He exclaimed, "Weep not for me". This meek man needed no tears. There is no obsequiousness in meekness, for Jesus met with regal bearing all the awkward situations that were thrust upon him. Meek and lowly in heart as He truly was, the word "King" above His cross seemed fit and appropriate.

Meekness, as Jesus defined it in His life, is that quality of deep self-respect that contains no arrogant self-assertiveness and no self-seeking for purely personal ends. In the meek man all anger and hatred that have their source in wounded pride or vanity give way to a genuine love of the offender. The resentment that rises so quickly when private plans are thwarted yields to a patience that knows no irritation. Yet this is not all; meekness is patience, but it is persistence as well. It knows definitely what the direction of its life is to be and it goes forward without losing its head or its temper, steadily, persistently to the accomplishment of its purpose. "The meek will He guide in judgment," said the psalmist. "The meek shall be lords of life," said Jesus. And not even our modern civilization with its false emphasis and ambitions can prevent the fulfilment of these promises.

A SMILE.

A smile costs nothing, but gives much. It enriches those who receive without making poorer those who give. It takes but a moment, but the memory of it sometimes lasts forever. None is so rich or mighty that he can get along without it, and none is so poor but that he can be made rich by it. A smile creates happiness in the home, fosters good will in business, and is the countersign of friendship. It brings rest to the weary, cheer to the discouraged, sunshine to the sad, and it is nature's best antidote for trouble. Yet it cannot be bought, begged, borrowed or stolen, for it is something that is of no value to any one until it is given away. Some people are too tired to give you a smile. Give them one of yours, as none needs a smile so much as he who has no more to give.

LETTER FROM MR. LAY.

Beaufort, N. C., August 19, 1927.

To the Editor of the Southern Churchman, Richmond, Va.

Dear Sir:

At the risk of being told that I should retire from the ministry, I venture to comment on the answer of Mr. Langbourne M. Williams to the Rev. E. H. Ward in your issue of August 20.

The questions of Mr. Ward seemed to me reasonable and courteous and are being asked by many people. He said: "A rational answer to these questions would lift a burden from the mind and heart of many a believer." I read the reply, hoping to get it. I regret that I failed to find what would satisfy either the mind or the heart of a believer.

That our Lord Himself is our great authority for accepting the canonical books of the Old Testament is of the utmost importance. But since Mr. Williams himself has "good reason to think that the work was done by Ezra under the direction of "Nehemiah", which was many centuries before our Lord's time, this hardly answers the question: "When, where and by whom was the Canon of the Old Testament settled?" Mr. Williams thinks it does not matter. With all courtesy I wish to say that it matters a great deal to very many intelligent people, especially when we must ask the same question about the New Testament, for which we have no authority from our Lord whatsoever, since it was all written after He left this earth.

In his fourth and fifth paragraphs either Mr. Williams is not clear or the proof-reader is at fault. He mixes up the Bible and the canonical books thereof and appears to make or imply some curious statements. He says, "Josephus, Philo . . . give our books. The Septuagint version . . . gives the same." As the Septuagint contains all the Apocrypha, does he mean to accept the Apocrypha among "our books"? He also says: "It is undoubted that our Lord had for His Bible our Old Testament books and some others. St. Paul and the other apostles quote them profusely and regard them of divine sanction." Does this mean that our Lord accepted all, or part of, the Apocryphal books as part of His Bible and that the apostles did likewise? Then he says that the Apocryphal books were not "considered part of the Bible by any Church till the Council of Trent included them in the Canon. We include the canonical books and exclude the Apocryphal." The facts are otherwise. The Bible of the whole Western world, including the Church of England, was for centuries the Latin Vulgate, which includes the Apocrypha. King James told his learned men to translate the Bible. They did as they were told and gave to us the so-called King James Bible containing the Apocrypha as well as the canonical books. The revisers of recent times did the same thing. To read the lessons provided by the Church at divine service it is necessary to have on the lectern a volume entitled "Holy Bible", containing the Apocrypha as well as the canonical books. This well illustrates the position of the Anglican Communion. The Roman Church made the Apocryphal books canonical, the extreme Protestants therefore excluded them entirely from the Bible. The Church of England retained its ancient usage so well expressed in Article VI in the words of St. Jerome and still to be found printed in the end of our Book of Common Prayer. Indeed, that dear book puts selections from the Apocrypha under the head of "Lessons of Holy Scripture". Of course that proves nothing, since I have seen a Congregational hymnal which printed the Te Deum and the Benedicite under the head of "Selections from Holy Scripture".

I remain, yours very truly,

GEORGE W. LAY.

AN INSPIRED WORK.

September 1, 1927.

The Rev. George W. Lay, Beaufort, N. C.

Dear Mr. Lay:

The point I tried to make in my letter to Dr. Ward is that our blessed Lord had for His Bible our Old Testament, using it and quoting it as the Word of God, authoritative in matters of faith and morals. This indubitable fact is not only of "utmost importance", as you say, but it is much more; it is entirely decisive for us as to the divine character of the books of the Old Testament.

The transcriber certainly did me a decided damage, as you seem to suspect. What I said was, "It is undoubted that our Lord had for His Bible our Old Testament books and none others". The transcriber made me say "and some others", just what I tried not to say. Our Lord was reared an orthodox Jew, and it is well known that their Bible consisted of our Old Testament books and none others.

Of course, if this be conceded, all questions of "when, where and by whom", however interesting, are secondary. They are all naturally to be considered in the light and in the spirit of the blessed, heartening assurance that these books are by our Lord's authority stamped as inspired. What He accepted as God's Word, we gladly so accept, and, in the truth of that acceptance, all subsidiary matters are to be considered. In so far as Jesus was in this great matter a "traditionalist" or a "literalist" or a "fundamentalist", or even an "extreme protestant", to that extent we are so also.

As to the Apocrypha, we know that our Lord's Bible excluded its books, for the Palestine Jews, as well as all orthodox Jews since, excluded them. I referred to Philo of Alexandria and to Josephus as giving testimony to this. The Septuagint, it is true, included the Apocryphal books, held as they were in high esteem and often cited by individuals as Scripture. But the Jewish Synagogue and the early Christian Church never regarded them as Canonical.

Jerome's dictum, quoted in our Article 6, and so strangely, as it seems to me, misappropriated by you, is that the Church reads these books for example of life and instruction in morals, "but yet doth it not apply them to establish any doctrine", a clear exclusion of the Apocryphal books from the canon of inspired Scripture. They are classed with pious and instructive homilies and edifying religious treatises. This is also the opinion of Melito of Sardis, of Athanasius, and of Origen. Indeed, from Origen down the Greek Church has excluded the Apocryphal books from the Canon. The Synod of Laodicea, in the fourth century, gave the list of books acknowledged by the Church as inspired of God. The Old Testament list excludes the Apocrypha. The position taken by the great German and English reformers, than whom there never have been any better learned theologians, nor any men to whom all Christendom, whether Roman or Evangelical, owes so deep a debt of gratitude, was not "extreme" Protestant, or any other extreme thing. It was just the distinct affirmation of what the primitive, uncorrupted and truly Catholic Church held. The English Church in Article 6 is in harmony with all the great Protestant confessions, using in much the same statements. The Council of Trent put not only the Apocryphal books, but also what is vaguely called tradition, on an equality with the Canonical books—a sectarian act intended to furnish material wherewith to fight Protestantism.

I am astonished, and, indeed, my dear sir, really distressed, that you can bring yourself to say that in regard to the New Testament "we have no authority from our Lord whatsoever, since it was all written after He left this earth".

It would seem that John 14:17 and 26, John 15:27, John 16:13, 14, as well as John 20:22 and Acts 1:8, are enough to show you that the contrary is true. Our Lord distinctly and repeatedly promised the especial gift of the Holy Spirit to His apostles. He declared that He would give them this gift in an unusual, unique, divinely effectual way. The Spirit when given would teach them all things. He would bring to their remembrance all things whatsoever Jesus had said to them. He would guide them into all the truth. He would show them things to come. Besides, the Lord by a definite act bestowed the Holy Spirit on these His chosen witnesses. Surely the men so endued and so inspired were definitely authorized to convey His message. What they wrote had that wonderful, unmatched authorization. Indeed, the proof of inspiration is Apostolic authorship. A writing by an apostle is ipso facto inspired —a part of God's Word.

As to St. Paul, his miraculous conversion by direct action of Jesus Himself, as well as the specific statement at Acts 9:15, 16, and the apostle's own claims at Gal. 1:11, 12, establish his apostleship and consequent inspiration.

Indeed, if even at this late day there should be brought to light an undoubted work of an apostle, or of one of their immediate companions, as Barnabas, or Luke, or Mark, or Apollo, we should be constrained to accept it as an inspired writing.

I think you must admit, therefore, that the New Testament has the strongest authorization from our Lord. Perhaps, in saying that it had none at all from Him, you referred to the completed Book, rather than to the men who wrote it. But surely to inspire the writers was to inspire the writings.

It is a consoling fact on which we may in reason rest, that the Lord has given us our precious New Testament, through chosen agents, whom He so fitted and filled and guided by His Spirit, the Spirit of Truth, as to make their words in effect His words—their writings God's inspired Scriptures.

Finally, I would recall to you the words of that great Roman Catholic soldier of the cross, Masillon, who said:

"Truth, that light of heaven figured by the star which on this day appears to the Magi, is the only thing here below worthy of the cares and the researches of man. It alone is the light of our mind, the rule of our heart, the source of solid joys, the foundation of our hopes, the consolation of our fears, the alleviation of our evils, the cure for all our afflictions; it alone is the refuge of the good conscience, and the terror of the bad, the inward punishment of vice, the internal recompense of virtue; it alone immortalizes those who love it, and renders illustrious the chains of those who suffer for it, attracts public honors to the ashes of its martyrs and defenders, and bestows respectability on the abjection and the poverty of those who have quitted all to follow it; all our zeal to defend it; in men we ought then to look only for truth, to have no wish of pleasing them but by truth, to esteem in them only truth, and to be resolved that they shall never please us but by it.

"But, my brethren, 'the kingdom of God cometh not with observation'. Truth is not the fruit of controversy and dispute, but of tears and groanings; it is by purifying our heart in meditation and in prayer that we alone must expect, like the Magi, the light of heaven, and to become worthy of distinguishing and knowing it."

Yours very truly,
(Signed) LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS,
President.

A CORRECTION.

Mr. Editor:

A recent issue of the "Southern Churchman" makes appreciative reference to the gift to the Library of the Cathedral in Washington of papers certifying to the ordination of the Rev. Thomas Read in London in 1773.

May I venture a slight correction?

The Rev. Thomas Read, far from being "of English birth", traces back his Read ancestry to the early years of the settlement of Virginia, and in a female line can trace a probable descent from Jamestown.

Of less importance is the fact that the donors of the papers are the three grandchildren of Robert Read, long identified with the Farmers & Mechanics Bank of Georgetown, and in his later years its president, and that Alfreda Post Carhart, mentioned in your item among the donors, is the same person as Mrs. Charles L. Carhart, and is far from wishing to claim a double portion of the credit of the gift.

Yours truly,
CHARLES L. CARHART.

GIVE OUT TRUTH.

We have received the following letter from a consecrated minister of the gospel, dated August 30, 1927:

"Be strong in the Lord."

Dear Mr. Williams:

I recently called to see you in your office and found that you were out of town; so I write to do what I could not do then, namely, congratulate you and wish you Godspeed in your undertaking in connection with the Southern Churchman.

* * * * *

You will probably be regarded and called "narrow" ("narrow is the way"), bigoted, a theological fossil, but all that is a small matter, and, when used by some, is a good sign about those to whom the epithets are applied.

I once learned that the best way to combat error was simply to give out truth that contradicts it—rather than get into controversy about it. The latter often does harm by intensifying the errorist in his opinion. "Defend the Bible?" said Spurgeon. "The Bible is a lion; turned loose!" Keep at it, Mr. Williams! God has said: "My Word shall not return unto me void, but shall accomplish that which I please and prosper in the thing whereunto I send it." The truth of God is absolutely sure of triumph. Our part is to be in line with it and participate in the final victory.

"The Lord bless and keep thee."

P. S.—I hope to take part with you in prayer.

Mr. L. M. Williams, Richmond, Va.

Dear Mr. Williams:

It was exceedingly kind of you to send in a donation of $5 in response to my special letter. This will be of great help to us, coming in at this time.

I wonder if you know that the American Anti-Bible Society, with offices here in New York, has recently been organized for the purpose of reprinting all old books, pamphlets and tracts that are against the Bible, and publishing new Atheistic literature at the same time.

We must face this crisis, and in order to do so must secure a large number of new friends. Will you pray with us that God will raise up these friends?

Very sincerely yours,

WM. H. MATTHEWS,
General Secretary.

Gentlemen:

Will you kindly insert the following in your paper:

All communications relative to Religious Education and Young People's Work for the Diocese of Mississippi should be addressed to the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, Box 524, Vicksburg, Miss.

Thanking you, I remain,

Very truly yours,
GORDON M. RETSE.

We have a letter dated August 30 from a most learned and able Virginian, in which he says:

"The Evangelical stand of the Southern Churchman for truth and righteousness and the Scriptures gives me great pleasure and satisfaction. May it prosper materially and its influence for good steadily increase."

Book Reviews

CHILDREN OF THE SECOND BIRTH. By S. M. Shoemaker, Jr. Fleming H. Revell Company.

There are many books published today for which there is no excuse. But in Mr. Shoemaker's Children of the Second Birth we have a real contribution to the cause of Christ and are treading in untrodden paths. Not that we have not abundant literature dealing with the marvels of conversion, but amid such a class as Park Avenue, and in a city parish of the Episcopal Church, such a glorious record as he presents of Christ's transforming work is, we believe, unique, certainly in the American Church. The book is really a new side light on Professor James' Varieties of Religious Experience. For a skeptical age, cluttered as the Church today is with the rubbish of dead works, often twice dead and plucked up by the roots, this true Apostolic application of the simple gospel with "the Lord confirming the Word with signs following", is a beacon light of hope amid the dark, dreary desert life of much of our Church activity. Ministers and Church workers will find it helpful as a study of methods. It is a revelation of what a Church can be. It proves that with adaptations rescue mission methods can be successfully applied in a modern city parish. The heart hunger and obscure tragedies under the cover of much outward church membership reveal the appalling need of conversion in our churches. And the crux of a dead membership is shown to be unwillingness to surrender. The problem of dead organizations is laid bare in the statement, "no organizations until people are ready for them".

Amid the failure of social effort it is refreshing to read of this shift to a transformed society by individual transformation through the power of the Living Christ. The gospel as given by Paul and by Moody and through the ages is the same in its unfailing power and when conditions are met will work anywhere.

The book cannot fail to help us to know our Lord Jesus better. It is a panoramic series of rapid fire sketches that grip and enthrall one. Our hope is that it will have a wide reading and that more of our churches will become like Calvary, a House of Joy.

THE MASTER SAYS "WE". By Rev. D. H. Dolman, M. A. The Bible Institute Colportage Association.

We commend this helpful devotional study of John 6: 1-11. Many times we ponder large volumes and find only chaff. But in this little booklet you will find unwinnowed grain and the beaten oil from the Word. Much is original and put in such a way that it allures one to read on to the end. There is spiritual help here for the reader, and its low cost will enable him to scatter good seed if he would present some one else with a real gift.

LEWIS W. BURTON,
President.

MERCER P. LOGAN,
Secretary.

"The Southern Mountaineers" was the topic chosen by Bishop Gray in an address which he gave Thursday evening, August 25, before a gathering at the thirty-ninth annual General Conference of the First Brethren Church, convened at Winona Lake, near Warsaw, Ind.

Bishop Gray spent four years among the mountaineers of Tennessee about thirty years ago, and has made many visits there since that time. The content of his address was the story of his experiences among these people, and the forward strides that have been made there both religiously and educationally in the past thirty years.

Several hundred delegates from all parts of the country attended the meeting, the conference opening August 25 and closing Sunday, September 4. Bishop Gray was accompanied by the Ven. Howard R. White, Archdeacon of Northern Indiana.

MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

The Fifty-fifth Niobrara Convocation.

The most unique church gathering in the United States is that of our Indian Churchmen among the Sioux. This year it was to have met at Standing Dock, in the northern part of South Dakota, but was transferred to Pine Ridge, in the south, when it was decided that the President would make a visit to that reservation.

The Convocation met on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, August 14-16, and the President appeared on the day following.

Notwithstanding the fear that the throng attracted by the visit of the President might interfere materially with the effectiveness of the meeting, and that possibly it would also divert the attention of the members of Convocation from its own affairs, the meeting proved to be one of the best ever held. The attendance was large and the interest maintained throughout. Those present at the final service on Tuesday evening compared favorably in numbers with the congregation at the great opening service Sunday morning. Many white visitors were also present for the whole or a part of the time.

The chief news events of Convocation were the presence on Monday morning of Commissioner Charles H. Burke, a fellow-citizen of our State, and a fellow-Churchman. He received a cordial welcome from his Dakota friends and spoke most earnestly of the great contribution made by the missionaries of the solution of the Indian problem. The government, he said, could never have accomplished what it has done without them. He desired still closer cooperation and earnestly urged the Indian people to make for themselves a worthy place in the citizenship of the nation.

Convocation met in three groups—the men, the Woman's Auxiliary and the Young People's Service League—and the days were filled with services and sessions of all sorts. The total offerings brought amounted to almost $4,000, and were presented on the altar at the closing service. The early communions were especially well attended, the communicants ordinarily reaching 400 in number. Some 2,500 of our Church fold were in camp.

At the closing service the Bishop expressed his gratitude and appreciation of the work done by the Rev. Messrs. Joyner, Clark and Shaw in making such admirable arrangements for the Convocation on such short notice, and also to the members for their earnest and loyal participation throughout.

At the suggestion of the Bishop the Convocation appointed a committee to prepare a message for presentation to the President. It consisted of the Revs. Amos Ross, Philip J. Deloria and Dallas Shaw. This was engrossed in the Dakota tongue with an accompanying translation, and was unanimously adopted.

President Coolidge Sees Our Christian Indians.

The visit of President Coolidge to the Pine Ridge Reservation was set for Wednesday, August 17, the day following the close of the Niobrara Convocation, on the fair grounds two miles from our church. Ten thousand Indians were awaiting him and an elaborate pageant had been prepared. Notwithstanding this fact, the entire body of helpers, catechists and clergy, and a large proportion of the members of Convocation remained to give him a welcome as he came down the highway past the Church of the Holy Cross. Arrangements had been made for him to stop two minutes. At 12:30 the clergy, catechists and helpers assembled and vested. An intercessory service was then held in the church, which was crowded. Petitions were made for the President, the country and our missionary work among the Dakota people. At the close of this service, singing a Dakota hymn, the procession marched out and took its place on the sloping bank by the roadside, with the vested group of clergy in the center.

The presidential party arrived promptly and President and Mrs. Coolidge and their son John very graciously alighted and joined our group. After the inevitable photograph Bishop Burleson spoke for a moment, requesting the privilege of presenting the President a message which had been prepared by the Convocation. This was enclosed by a beautiful old beadwork tobacco pouch and was given to the President by three veterans in service, Revs. Amos Ross, Philip J. Deloria and Dallas Shaw. Three representatives of the women, Mrs. Julia Deloria, Mrs. Lucy Ross and Mrs. Nancy American Horse, then gave Mrs. Coolidge, from the women, a lovely beaded deerskin bag containing a pair of moccasins. The whole group then sang one verse of "America" in the Dakota tongue, which concluded the ceremony. The presidential party returned to their conveyances.

Brief as it was, this event must have been strikingly significant to the President, who has seen somewhat overmuch of the spectacular presentation of Indian life, now utterly gone, with its devocation of war-paint and feathers.

Camp Remington Visits the President.

At 1:30 on the afternoon of Friday, August 19, on the invitation of the President, the bishops, clergy and other residents of Camp Remington were received by him at the Game Lodge, which is his summer home. Our Church camp is a bare twelve miles from the Presidents summer residence, and our little Chapel of the Transfiguration in the midst of the camp is the nearest place of worship.

About thirty-five paid their respects to the President and Mrs. Coolidge, who shook hands with them all. Bishop Burleson took advantage of this opportunity to present to Mrs. Coolidge, for her son John, the gift of an Indian beadwork belt and watch-fob which the Young People's Service League, at the Niobrara Convocation, had prepared for him. This was received most graciously by the first lady of the land, and an appreciative note of thanks has been received from John Coolidge and transmitted to the donors.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

This isn't just news. It's a sermon.

First of all, let it be remembered that a number of counties in the west end of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia are grouped together and somewhat informally known as the Associate Missions field, with the Rev. H. H. Young, of Bluefield, Va., as the Dean, and the Rev. Edward W. Hughes, of Pearisburg as his clerical assistant.

Scattered through this field and ministering to people and communities of various types, in the coal and timber country of the Virginia mountains, are a number of consecrated women missionaries, Deaconess Williams and Miss Chester at Dante, Deaconess Binns at Nora, Miss Mansfield at Grace House-on-the-Mountain near St. Paul. Also a candidate for orders, Mr. John A. Wilson, Jr., is serving in the field, with his headquarters at Richlands.

If one child, in a rather wild flight of the imagination, conceive of some such title as, say, "Sister Superior" in the Protestant Episcopal Church in Virginia, one would doubtless think first of Deaconess Williams as the holder of the title. Best known and best beloved of the splendid women who are devoting their lives to the Church in this Diocese, Deaconess Williams also has served longest in this field, and so faithfully and so wonderfully well, that she has become a real specialist in work of this kind. And the life that she lives, and the faith that she portrays, and the sweet graces of her character bring joy and inspiration to the hearts of all who are so fortunate as to be associated with her in any way.

Flowers while we live? Why not? Small danger that such a woman as this will ever receive more flowers than she deserves.

Each year a number of young ladies from various dioceses come to serve as volunteer assistants in our associate missions and thus render most valuable service to the Church in this Diocese. The following is an account written by Deaconess Williams of the work done by these most welcome visitors during the summer of 1927, and is reproduced in her words:

Eleanor Nevin, graduate of the New York Training School for Deaconesses, from Newark, N. J.

Bernice Jansen, graduate Winona State Teachers' College, Winona, Minn., from Red Wing, Minn.

Bess Cowling, Eastville, Va., student at Harrisonburg State Teachers' College.

Eliza deSaussure, Greenville, S. C., graduate Winthrop College, Rock Hill, S. C.

Della M. Parmley, Coalmont, Tenn., student at Winthrop College.

Bessie L. Fraser, Georgetown, S. C., student at Winthrop College.

Caro Belser, Summerton, S. C., student at Winthrop College.

Henrietta Jones, New York City, formerly Field Secretary, Girls' Friendly Society.

Anzolette Gadsden, President Woman's Auxiliary, R. E. Lee Memorial Church, Lexingxton, Va.

Mary Simpson, Columbus, Ohio student at Ohio State University.

Mary Brown, Portsmouth, Va., student at Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Eleanor Lay, Oil City, Pa., student at National Cathedral School, Washington D. C.

Sallie Chase, Oil City, Pa., student at National Cathedral School.

Mattie Lou Davis, Meridian, Miss.

The above list of names may be very uninteresting to the uninitiated, but to us regular workers in the southwestern corner of the Diocese they are full of meaning. They stand for so many things which could not have been, but for the girls listed above. Each one has given a month of her vacation, save Miss Jansen, who gave seven weeks. She meant a kindergarten for some thirty little tots in Dante, besides a week-day club for fifty boys and girls two miles up Bear Wallow Hollow. Of course Bess Cowling and Miss Gadsden helped with this as with many other things, and Sallie Chase and Eleanor Lay carried the work on during August. And in all of this volunteer work here in Dante these outsiders have had the help of our older Girls' Friendly members, Elizabeth Booth, Cecile Osborne and Lenore Erwin.

At Sandy Ridge Mission we were able to have two months of school for an average of fifteen children. Here two of the South Carolina girls, Eliza deSaussure and Della Parmley, lived and taught school during July, and in August Mary Simpson carried on with Miss Chester, regular worker at Dante, in charge. How much such a school means to these little children who live too far away from public schools to attend through the winter.

Bess Fraser and Mary Brown at Grace House have endeared themselves to every one, and Eleanor Nevin is to remain as Miss Mansfield's permanent assistant, so nothing need be said as to the kind of record she has made.

Deaconess Binns has had no help during the summer but the volunteers, so it would have been impossible for even her to carry on her three Sunday schools without their help. Caro Belser and Henrietta Jones were just what one would expect from representatives of the Girls' Friendly and Winthrop College, and Miss Davis has followed in their footsteps, filling an unexpected gap in the teaching force at Pilot Knob, and helping in many ways.

The Woman's Auxiliaries of the two South Carolina Dioceses pay all the expenses of the four girls they send. Would that other Auxiliaries would follow this example. Also the example of Miss Gadsden, the President of a Parish Branch, in giving a month of her vacation to seeing mission work first hand.

It is very beautiful to see the splendid spirit and real consecration of these girls, as they undertake and carry through work altogether new to them, from lighting an oil stove to making bread and conducting Sunday schools.

There's Christianity in action among the mountains of Southwestern Virginia, as described by Deaconess Williams.

This account would be incomplete without a reference to dear "Little Deaconess" Adams, who for years has carried on, single handed and alone, at the little mining town of Keokee, in Lee County, the mission farthest to the southwest in this Diocese. With a physique in inverse proportion to her indomitable courage and unflagging perseverance, with a spirit of cheer that carries her safely through such trials as would frighten almost any other soul, she is one of the wonders of Southwestern Virginia, like the Natural Tunnel and the Natural Bridge and—and—Deaconess Williams.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

The Board of Religious Education in the Diocese of Long Island is planning a dedication service, to be used throughout the Diocese, on the Sunday nearest the opening of each Church school. This has been developed locally along the lines suggested by the National Department, and it is felt that this new means of inspiration will be a help to the teachers and add to the quality of the work.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

The first anniversary of the rectorate of Rev. Clarence P. Parker at St. John's Church, Bethesda, Md., was marked by special services at the church on Sunday morning, September 4. Mr. Parker is a graduate of the Theological School of the University of the Souse at Sewanee, Tenn. Since his coming to the Bethesda Parish marked progress has been made and several additions have been made to the church buildings.

Mr. Parker was formerly a member of the religious drama department of the National Religious Education Department of the National Council, and is now a member of the Department of Education of the Diocese of Washington.

The special preacher at Epiphany Church on September 4 at the morning and evening services was Rev. J. Manly Cobb.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

The centennial of St. Paul's Church, Franklin, Tenn., was observed on Sunday, August 28, amid much rejoicing. After a week of the crusade preached by the Rev. A. G. Wilson, of Chattanooga, the congregation entered on its festival spiritually as well as materially prepared. Bishop Gailor was the preacher and celebrant at 11 A. M. He was assisted by the rector, Rev. Bernard Campbell, former rectors and the Rev. Russell Smith, of Atlanta; the Rev. A. C. Killefer, of Monterey, and the Rev. E. M. Bearden, of Cornwall on Hudson. A picked choir of trained voices rendered the music. Several hundred made their communion late in addition to nearly all the local parish who came early. The local committee had barbecued ten lambs and four young pigs. Over seven hundred guests were served on the adjoining green. Old communicants returned from every section of the country, from New York, Florida, Oklahoma and other adjacent towns. There were many family reunions and many friends exchanged greetings in Christ, though separated Collect for Thirteenth Sunday After Trinity.

Almighty and merciful God, or whose only gift it cometh that Thy faithful people do unto Thee true and laudable service; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we may so faithfully serve Thee in this life that we fail not finally to attain Thy heavenly promises; through the merits of Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer For Love.

Let me not run impatient from the scene,
If by my waiting weakness may be strong,
For Love hath aye an arm on which to lean,
And soothes the night with song.

Let me not speak too hasty to condemn,
If silence in the wrangle better teach.
Oh, wisdom only knoweth how to stem
The waste of witless speech.

Let me not force another to my will,
If kind persuasion find a surer way.
Better a comrade than a slave, and still
To love well is to pray.

Let not my hand deny the kindly deed,
If some poor soul may welcome but the crumbs.
I too have learned with hungry lips to plead
When cold neglect benumbs.

Let me not chill the air with cynic scorn,
If I may breathe a whisper of true praise
For one who held high hope at early morn
Then wandered in the maze.

I would be one of those in whom men find
A place of refuge from the loveless host
Yet in the waiting am I often blind
To them that need me most.

—Robert MacGowan.

For the Southern Churchman.

After Thirty Years.

Deaconess Lucy N. Carter.

The life at Moapa, Nevada, seemed going back to the primitive, when I went there last September. The old building was a mere shell. Mr. Woodpecker and all the family disputed my possession. It has been made into quite a comfortable dwelling place, except that we have not succeeded in getting the water into the house; fortunately, there was a lower screen porch, built just at the edge of the ditch. I moved into that and instead of having to carry the water up the steps it was right at my door.

The Indians are taking more interest in the mission. They are so devil or witch ridden. One poor little boy died a short time ago, because "our enemy willed it so". His father seemed doomed, too, although three doctors, upon examination, found nothing wrong with him. For some reason the medicine man was persuaded to take off the curse and he was all right when I left. I can only hope that my repeated statements that neither man nor devil can harm them if they trust in God, may have had some effect.

On Sunday, the fifth of June, Mr. Parker gave us a service, driving out sixty miles from Las Vegas, after holding the morning service in his church there. Our mission room was filled, and there was hearty singing. A good many of our young men and girls have been off to school, and they particularly enjoy the singing.

It had begun to register around a hundred in the shade, and as I could not get ice, food was unappetizing; having had permission from Bishop Moulton to come to my former station during July to do what I could to help the missionaries here, I decided to leave on the twentieth.

It seemed rather an undertaking to drive four hundred and eighty miles, from Southern Nevada to Northeastern Utah. The hardest part is getting started; leaving the house in order, locking up against possible marauders, packing what you may need in the car; a cot, blankets, clothing for both hot and cold weather, with nobody to remind you or to help. One feels being alone at such times more than when on the road. If anything happens there, it is only you and your car to be hurt. Then, one does have a very happy sense of: "I will be with you."

A perfectly up-to-date young woman was driving through from Moapa to Colorado; our cars started together, but we could hardly have been called companions, for I never caught sight of her except when she had trouble with her car and had to stop to change a tire. The second day we said goodbye, she going to Salt Lake, and I coming over the highway to Price. As you go up and down the grades you hope earnestly that you will not meet a car around the curve, you hold your breath, round the turn, give a sigh of relief and speed up. The scenery is wonderful; we went up over six thousand feet down, then up nine thousand. I could not enjoy it exactly, for I have only been driving about a year; on that road it is wise to watch. We passed one big beautiful car lying over on its side, having rounded a curve too rapidly.

We drove in three states the first day—Nevada, Arizona and Utah.

My first trip into this reservation was made in '96. My fellow missionary and I were a day and a half driving in a stage (a covered spring wagon) from the railroad station, Price, to Fort Duchesne. I made the trip in three and three-quarter hours.

I spent a few days at Mayton with Miss Campfield, the missionary there. She is very happy in her work with the Indians, especially so now, with her adopted Indian boy back from school on a vacation.

Yesterday I drove up to Whiterocks, my second home, where I used to find and care for the motherless Indian babies. I am to be here through July. Mr. and Mrs. Talbot are the missionaries here; they are deeply interested, trying to help these Indians to find the true life. They are going to let me have the pleasure of helping them. The Indians give me a cordial and smiling welcome.

Setting Grasshoppers.

At a meeting of a Church Court a noble brother who has a reputation for splitting hairs had the floor. One of his auditors who has a keen sense of humor and no malice in his heart, dryly remarked: "If he were my setter dog I would shoot him for setting grasshoppers." Perhaps he ought not to have said it, but in saying it he uttered a wise bit of philosophy in an unforgettable way.

Any man who knows and loves a setter dog can see the picture. Here is the dog with a fine pedigree and almost human intelligence. The owner has taken great pains to raise and train him. At length he takes him out into the field to set birds, and he sets grasshoppers! And, what is worse, no amount of castigation will break him of the silly habit.

A father and mother take years to bring up and train a child. They do it at a cost that can never be set down in dollars and cents. The Church and State help in his education. At length he is ready for his life work. Great things are expected of him, and lo, he spends his time setting grasshoppers.

I shall not undertake to judge whether the homely bit of philosophy is applicable to any particular man or woman. In fact, I am thinking of its application to myself. It seems to me that the great majority of us spend much of our time in setting grasshoppers, in doing things that may be harmless enough, but that are hardly worth while, when we might be addressing ourselves to tasks that are infinitely worth while.

It is so easy to spend our time in busy idleness. We can get just as busy as bees doing things that matter very little one way or another. I have had occasion to serve some men of large affairs, who accomplish really great things. They seem unhurried. Their automobiles do not go speeding along the streets at a break-neck speed, endangering the lives of others. In fact, I have observed that those who are in such a hurry that they are always violating the speed laws are of no particular importance when they arrive at their destination in a state of hurried frenzy. The man who really accomplishes things has a sense of proportion. He seems to have an intuitive sense of what is worth while.

When we come to what is known as church work, it is possible to spend much of our time setting grasshoppers. We rush from one meeting and one conference to another, and then wonder when they are all over whether we did anything that really counted. Of course meetings and conferences can be made to count, but as a matter of fact we do not always make them worth while.

The Sunday-school teacher can so easily spend the hour Sunday after Sunday discussing questions that are heardly worth while, or that lead nowhere except into a blind alley. Thus a golden opportunity goes by. While we are busy here and there with things that have little real permanent value, the children entrusted to our care have grown up and gone, and we have missed an opportunity of doing something that might have counted for all time and eternity. Isn't this the very thing that Jesus had in mind when He told Martha that she was troubled about many things? It was necessary for the family to have dinner that day, but it was not necessary to have a banquet and to be troubled about so many things.

The elders and deacons of a local church meet in monthly session. They can so easily spend the whole evening discussing trivial and unimportant matters, when they might have been thinking in world-wide terms, as the Master commanded us to do, and might have been making plans for carrying the Gospel to the uttermost part of the earth.

At the meeting of our Church courts it is so easy to spend our time setting grasshoppers. It is so easy to spend the time discussing a point of order which makes no particular difference, when we might have been planning a great campaign for the evangelization of the world at home and abroad. Of course we ought to conduct our Church courts in decency and in order. Parliamentary law is all right, but it should be a servant and not a master, a means and not an end.

I have taken points of order as just one illustration. There are others which I might have taken. When I attend Church courts as an observer it always strikes me that we lack the sense of proportion. So often we fail to grasp the great things that are within our reach and spend the major portion of our time on things of no particular importance.

I thank my humorous friend for the philosophy contained in his homely illustration. He has made me face squarely again and again the question as to how much of time I spend in setting grasshoppers.—Rev. W. L. Lingle, in Presbyterian of the South.

Waiting on God.

Long ago it was written by one who knew, "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength", and the experience of the ages has confirmed this truth. That we need just such renewal in these busy days is a matter of common experience; that we find it hard to spare time for it seems to be also a matter of experience. Yet the renewal of strength depends upon this "waiting on God", and we cannot but feel that often the weaknesses of Christian men and women, which we so lament and which so seriously limit their influence for good, are attributable to the fact that they have failed to "wait upon the Lord".

The human soul is prone to magnify the importance of petty things. We worry over trifles; we get angry over infinitesimal slights; we waste our energy in chasing rainbows or swatting flies; we grow weak and petty in the pursuit of lesser things; and all too often our nerves are made ragged, our patience is worn out, and our tempers made irritable by the tyranny of unimportant things. We need to escape from the snare of small things, and we can do that most effectively by keeping in touch with the Infinite. The day's petty routine looms large to us because it is close at hand, but when we stand face to face with Jehovah we realize how small that routine is. In Jezreel, Jezebell looked like a mighty queen; in Horeb she was seen by Elijah to be but common clay.

There is marvelous tranquilizing power in the presence of the Lord. The earth-fevered soul becomes calm and strong when it faces the Eternal Father. The things that fret and gall us; the things that most mar our peace of mind; the things that cause us our greatest worry, seem to lose much, perhaps all, of their importance, when seen in the clearer light which we find in the immediate presence of the Most High. The air of the higher spiritual world seems singularly peaceful, and calms the troubled soul.

It is well to have special times and places in which to wait upon God, but these should not obscure the fact that wherever the soul of man is there is also the Eternal God, and the soul itself is a temple where God condescends to dwell, and always in crowded street or busy mart it is possible for the soul in deed and truth to wait upon God, and then and there to renew its strength. Such opportunities are always present. Let us use them!

But waiting implies patience, and this hustling, bustling world has little use for patience. Our motto is ever "get out and hustle", and we need to learn that patient waiting is often stronger than vigorous hustling. God moves too slowly for us, yet we cannot hurry Him; and we need to learn how to wait His time. And in the waiting there comes strength, the strength of the patient hills, the strength of the unhasting spheres, the strength of the Divine Son of Man. This waiting brings God's strength and patience into human life, and the busiest men, in his busiest days and his most strenuous struggles, may have this inestimable boon if only he will learn to wait upon his God.—Selected.

Twilight.

Calm was the sea, tonight, as if the sky
Had built his amber bower about the deep,
And wand'ring waves rocked gently as in sleep
Upon the tide full-bosomed drifted by:
And I remembered Him who heard the cry
Of mortal terror, where the billows leap
Like hungry scythes the helpless fields to reap,
And "Peace be still", again I heard Him sigh.

Nearby, pavilioned where the lights were dim
The gay crowd banqueted the night away
With dance and song, and then I thought of Him
Who broke the bread for mortal need that day.

Above the pines the hill stood lone and grey,
And in that hour I saw the Master pray.
—Selected.

Tales Out of School.

My little son, who is in his third year at school, usually begins an account of the day's happenings as soon as he bursts open the door on his return. I have encouraged him in this as I like to have him confide in me and hope to retain this confidence as the years pass. I am never too busy or too tired to be interested, and by questioning, I can usually bring out both sides of a story if it relates to an incident in which he himself is involved. So far, I have reason to believe that he has always given me an accurate account of events even if he himself is somewhat discredited by the recital. If he has been in the wrong I do not scold or punish but say to him, "Do you think you were in the right about that?" or "Couldn't you have avoided the trouble"?

During his first year at school, he came running in one afternoon with the eager exclamation, "Say, Mom, I got even with James today for some of the tricks he's played on me"!

Questioned, he explained, "Well, he said he'd give me a piece of candy for a piece of my cake, and I didn't say anything but just took the candy when he held it out to me, and then I laughed and told him my cake was all gone.

"But, Little Son," I said, "that wasn't fair play, was it?"

He protested that James had treated him in the same way a number of times, but I finally persuaded him that he must play fair regardless of the behavior of others, and I put an extra piece of cake in his lunch box the next day to be given to James.

A great many of the things he tells me do not concern him directly, but they give me an insight into the characters of his little playmates so that I can more easily help him choose his friends wisely. He is, in his childish way, learning to distinguish between characteristics that matter and those that do not. He was very much disturbed recently because he found that a little girl whom he admired very much was cheating in school.

I do not believe that the habit of confiding in Mother is conducive to tattling or talebearing. My son knows that I do not discuss with others the things that he tells me, and I frequently say to him, "Now we'll say nothing about this to any one, as you might be mistaken", or "Perhaps John will tell his mother all about it, and she will tell him that he was in the wrong". I certainly do not want him to be a talebearer, but how proud I shall be if in the years to come he can always come to me, unhesitatingly, to discuss with me the problems of his daily life. —Nellie H. Hammer.

The Men God Wants.

God never goes to the lazy or the idle when He needs men for His service. When God wants a worker He calls a worker. When He wants a work to be done He goes to those who are already at work. When God wants a great servant He calls the busy man. Scripture and history attest this truth.

Moses was busy with the flock at Horeb. Gideon was busy threshing wheat by the wine-press. Saul was busy searching for his father's lost beasts. David was busy caring for his father's sheep. Elisha was busy plowing with twelve yoke of oxen. Nehemiah was busy bearing the King's wine-cup. Amos was busy following the herds. Peter and Andrew were busy casting a net into the sea. Matthew was busy collecting customs. Saul was busy persecuting the friends of Jesus. William Carey was busy making shoes. John Milton was busy mastering classics. Martin Luther was busy performing penance. John Bunyan was busy tinkering pots and pans. Roger Williams was busy as a stenographer. Adoniraans Judson was busy investigating religious truth. Charles Spurgeon was busy as a teacher.

God never called an idler into His service. The indolent young man who looks longingly toward the gospel ministry will never get a call from God. The busy workers are the men God wants.—The Evangel.

The Wayside Cross.

A wayside cross at set of day
Unto my spirit thus did say:

"O soul, my branching arms you see
Point four ways to infinity.

"One points to infinite above,
To show the height of heavenly love.

"Two point to infinite width, which shows
That heavenly love no limit knows.

"One points to infinite beneath,
To show God's love is under death.

"The four arms join, an emblem sweet
That in God's heart all loves will meet."

I thanked the cross as I turned away
Sor such sweet thoughts in the twilight gray.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus and Two Young Men.

M. L. G.

A rich young man and a poor young man, both came to Jesus. The rich young man came not to give but to know "what lack I yet"?—for he was impatient with any lack, and he thought the Kingdom could be brought on the same terms on which he was accustomed to fill any lack of material things. He went away sorrowful, for Jesus had nothing to give him, except at a price he could not pay, the price of sacrifice.

The poor young man was a blind beggar. He had never seen the Temple shine in the sunlight nor the blue of the lake up there on Galilee, nor the red field lilies. There was not much a blind man could do but beg, and he must take the curses and kicks along with the scant charity. Perhaps we should not say this man came to Jesus. Rather Jesus, passing by, saw him and stopped, and gave him not a penny, but the gift of sight. And the first Face the blind man saw was the Face we all shall see, when our eyes open on Paradise.

But this young man had also to give up something, that may have meant more to him than the rich young man's money did to him. It was his membership in the Synagogue. Because he would not deny the divine power of Jesus "they cast him out". Then the Good Shepherd found him, and revealed Himself as He could only to a heart willing to believe.

It is not what we have that gives us worth in the sight of the Best Friend, but what we are. The rich young man goes away sorrowful. The poor young man falls at Jesus' feet in worship. He has found the pearl of great price, for which any man would wisely go and sell all that he has.

Spindle, Distaff and Flax.

The heads of a certain household were known to be fine managers. The husband's business ran like clockwork and the wife was equally efficient in her systematic and capable manner in looking after the home itself. It was not to be wondered at that the children were orderly, and that they were among the brightest pupils at school.

There came a time when this regular smoothness in the household met with a jolt. The cause was almost absurd. Margaret came home from high school one day, and announced that an essay must be handed in three weeks from that day, and she positively could not write one.

"What is your subject?" asked her father. "Is it so difficult that there are not enough books in the library to furnish you with material?"

"Books won't help this time," said Margaret gloomily. "We've got to choose our own subjects."

"Well," said father, "I should think that mighty fortunate, for it simplifies the whole matter. You can write of something that really interests you, and to be interested in a subject makes it easy to talk about it on paper. Surely you are interested in any number of things. What more can you ask "

"But it's not such an A B C affair as you think," complained the girl. "The essay's got to be upon a theme that will be worth something. It's got to be helpful to everybody, and it must show that we have thought about the subject ourselves, and found it worth while."

"Oho!' said her father. "Bright teacher! Shows he wants pupils to think! Good for him! Go ahead, Margaret, and show him you can think! You have three whole weeks. It is nothing to be discouraged about because you are not able to think out that essay this very minute. You may not be able to write it out, even at the end of a week, but think about it each day. Something will come."

But for two weeks the household was upset. Margaret's restlessness affected her usually good spirits. Father looked sober at times in his office. Mother, sighed occasionally—an unheard of thing for her to do. Brother remarked that Marge was no fun any more with such a grouch on all the time.

The third week was beginning in the same unhappy way for the household, when mother solved the trouble. She waylaid the daughter as Margaret was coming in from school, and took her into the morning room still sunny where a glass of milk and a tempting sandwich were ready.

"How about the essay, Margaret?" she asked. "Have you thought it out?"

"I've thought hard enough," replied Margaret, "but it's no use. I positively can't write it!" and she scowled over the delicious sandwich she was enjoying.

"The trouble," said her mother calmly, "and the only trouble is this: Your spindle and distaff are not ready. Your father was a poor man. If he had not used his spindle and distaff, he could not have afforded to marry. If I did not use my spindle and distaff, our home would be a failure. There is an old proverb that was worked out in cross-stitch on an old sampler that hung upon the wall at my grandmother's—your great-grandmother's. I first saw it when I much younger than you, but I never forgot the words, although I never knew their meaning until years later. The proverb is this: 'Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God will send thee flax.' Father's wits were his spindle and distaff that helped him earn his wealth, his flax. My spindle and distaff are my wits and whatever housekeeping tools I may employ, to acquire a clean, orderly, cozy home—the flax. Now, that you have finished the little lunch, cuddle up here for a half-hour nap, then go into the library where you will be alone, lay out your paper, pencils, or take the typewriter, if you prefer, and collect your wits. All these are your spindle and distaff. Then hurrah for your flax! It will come!"

That way of dealing with the problem proved a feather in the cap for the clever mother, though dinner was an hour late on purpose and no one grumbled, because it meant that the extra hour brought the triumphant finish of an essay that was the most worth while thing Margaret ever had written. The title was "An Old Sampler", but the theme had to do with the practical matters of spindle, distaff and flax. —Girls' World.

The Story of the Teeny Weeny Pig.

Once upon a time there was a tenny weeny pig that lived on a farm. One day he was in a hurry for his dinner, and he got caught under a gate. And he squealed and he squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

Along came Mr. Rabbit, and he said, "Oh, dear, this is terrible!" So he went and got from my garden a nice cabbage, and he brought it to the little pig. But he squealed and he squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

Just then Mrs. Hen came to see what was the matter. "Oh, dear, this is awful!" she said. So she went into my barn and found a nice bag of corn, which she brought to the little pig. But he squealed and he squealed, and wouldn't stop crying.

Old Mrs. Cow heard the noise and came to find out all about it. She said, "Oh, dear, this is dreadful!" So she went into my field and found some nice clover, which she brought to the little pig. But he squealed and he squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

Mrs. Duck waddled up to see what she could do. She quacked, "Oh, dear, this is horrible!" She hurried to my duck pond, where she found some nice juicy waterlily roots, which she brought for the little pig. But he squealed and he squealed, and wouldn't stop crying.

Hearing the noise, Mr. Robin Redbreast came flying up to see if he could help. "Oh, dear, this is unbelievable!" he said. So he flew away to my cherry tree and found some nice cherries, which he brought for the little pig. But he squealed and squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

About this time along came Little Boy. He said, "Oh, dear, this is frightful! What is the matter?"

Mr. Rabbit said, "I brought him a cabbage, but he won't stop!"

Mrs. Hen said, "I brought him a bag of corn, but he won't stop!"

Mrs. Cow said, "I brought him some nice clover, but he won't stop!"

Mrs. Duck said, "I brought him some nice waterlily roots, but he won't stop!"

Mr. Robin Redbreast said, "I brought him some nice cherries, but he won't stop!"

Then Little Boy reached up and unfastened the latch of the gate, so that the gate opened. And out came the little pig.

And then he ate all the cherries with much gladness and said, "Thank you!" to Mr. Robin Redbreast.

And next the pig ate the nice juicy waterlily roots and said, "Thank you!" to Mrs. Duck.

Next the pig ate the clover and said, "Thank you!" to Mrs. Cow.

After finishing these, the pig ate the corn and said, "Thank you!" to Mrs. Hen.

At last the pig ate the nice cabbage and said, "Thank you!" to Mr. Rabbit.

Then he made a nice bow to Little Boy, and all the others, and said, "I thank you one and all for your kindness!"

So saying he jumped through a hole in the hedge and he never came back any more.—Sherman Ripley, in The Word and The Way.

Forget Your Troubles.

Martha Shepard Lippincott.

When you forget your troubles
And help give others joy,
Life's sorrows soon will leave you
And cease to e'er annoy.
Your soul, that is uplifted
By happiness, you give
To other souls around you;
And joyously you'll live.

You'll cease to worry over
Small slights that no one meant,
But you will count the blessings
That God to you has sent:
Then joyous love will fill you
With happiness divine,
And how your eyes will sparkle
And how your face will shine!

But if you fret and worry
And do not do your best,
You then will soon be finding
You'll not with joy be blest.
So look to God and ask Him
To help you every day
To always just be living
In a cheerful, joyous way:

Then many friends will love you,
And happiness you'll find,
Because you're always trying
To be so good and kind.
You'll be a magnet, drawing
Good people's love to you:
And they'll delight in finding
Nice things for you to do.

Our Alarm Clocks.

Did you ever have an alarm-clock to wake you up in the morning? When it goes off with a loud ring, it warns you not to sleep any longer.

Did you ever stop to think that your body has many alarm-clocks? If you stay up late one night, the next morning you are tired, cross and sleepy. That is your alarm-clock telling you to get more sleep.

When you eat a piece of pie or cake just before going to bed, and all during the night you roll and toss and have bad dreams, that is your alarm-clock warning you not to do it again.

When you sit near an open window on a cool day, the wind blows against you, but you do not notice it. Before you realize it, you begin to sneeze. That sneeze is an alarm-clock telling you to either close the window or move out of the draft.

Do you ever have a toothache so much that it seems you cannot stand it much longer? That ache is an alarm-clock warning you to go to the dentist to have your teeth fixed and to take better care of your teeth after that.

Every pain hat you have is an alarm-clock warning you against something. If you want to be strong and healthy, you must listen to the warning of these alarm-clocks of your body.—Dew Drop.

A Friend In Need.

Many are the stories of a dog's devotion to his master, but more rare are the instances of devotion to a fellow dog.

An acquaintance of mine who lived in the country, writes a contributor, had two dogs, Shep and Curly, that were great friends. Shep had been in the family for several years, but Curly had come, a pup of six months, less than a year before.

One night at suppertime Shep was missing. The children called and called him, but in vain. Morning came and still he was absent, nor did he appear during the day. When another twenty-four hours had rolled round without his return he was given up for lost, and there was mourning in the house, for he had been a great favorite.

They expected to see Curly mope without his friend, but on the contrary Curly was in good spirits and had developed a most remarkable appetite. His dish was licked out clean, and the bones he was given disappeared; still he wanted more.

His mistress couldn't understand it. "No, no, Curly," she protested, "no more. Go dig up the bones you've buried." But, though Curly wagged an acquiescing tail, he still kept a hopeful eye upon her.

Then one of the boys noticed that the dog always disappeared shortly after he had been fed. "Must have a new place to bury his bones," they surmised, and they lay in wait to watch him.

As it happened, a steer was slaughtered on the farm the next morning, and at dinner-time Curly received a generous meal. He gulped down his dinner, seized a big bone in his mouth and trotted away toward the barnyard. The boys cautiously followed.

Through the barnyard he went, crawled through the fence and struck out across the field back of it. At the farther side of the field was a considerable eminence, one of the many rolling hills common to the lands along the Mississippi, all of them more or less pocked with "mineral holes", as the deserted lead mines are called.

Skirting the nearest hill, Curly proceeded up the ravine between that and the next hill and presently came to an old mineral hole. The boys, following him under cover of the bushes scattered about, saw him walk up to the rim of the hole and lay down the bone. Then he barked, and to their astonishment a faint bark answered. Curly immediately picked up the bone, advanced his head past the edge of the hole and dropped the bone in.

The boys rushed up to the hole and peered in. At the bottom, twenty feet down, they discerned a shaggy animal busy with the bone that Curly had dropped in. At their whistle the animal raised its head and whined. It was the missing Shep.

One of the boys made a quick trip to the barn for a coil of rope. Fastening one end securely to a near-by tree, he let himself down into the hole and tied the rope round old Shep's body back of his forelegs, and in a twinkling the dog was hoisted to the surface, followed a moment later by his rescuer.

Thanks to Curly's good offices, old Shep was not much the worse for his mishap; but it was hard to tell which was more delighted, the prisoner that had just been released or his devoted friend that, by his daily contributions of food, had kept him alive during his imprisonment.—Youth's Companion.

The Sand-Pile.

The sand-pile was a very popular spot. It drew all the children in the neighborhood. It was in the back yard of Dorothy's home, way back under a spreading leafy tree. It was indeed a nice place to play.

When Mary flew to the sandpit she brought her basket of building-blocks. Mary loved to build houses. John came laden with old scales and little boxes and paper sacks. John kept a store in his corner of the sand-pile. Harold was a road builder. His nice smooth roads went uphill and down dale, over bridges, past Mary's houses to John's store, and wound around to the garden planted fresh every day by Dorothy. Every day Mary built better houses. John added to his stock of groceries, Harold's roads were more perfect, and Dorothy's garden grew prettier.

Then Frederick moved into the neighborhood. Like a bee in search of sweets, Frederick found his way to the sand-pile. Frederick had never played in a sand-pile and for a while he just stood and watched the children at play. With the old scales hung on a bending branch of the tree, John was weighing out sacks of sandy sugar and boxes of gritty rice. With small shovel and pail, Harold was making a long trail through the sand. Mary was adding a kitchen to her latest house, and Dorothy was planting a hedge of oak leaves all around her garden plot.

"I am a road plow, I am, and I can make roads fast," suddenly boasted Frederick; and with trampling feet he plowed a rough way all through the sand-pile, upsetting Mary's house, scattering John's groceries about, and tangling Dorothy's garden until she could not tell whether the yellow dandelions were choice pretend roses or just common weeds. The play was ended for that day.

The next morning, just when the sand-pile was at its best, along came Frederick, shouting: "I am a wind, I am! a big blustery wind!" And in a twinkling of an eye, bridges, houses, and gardens were ruined. The children left the blustery wind to enjoy his work of destruction alone and went away to play by themselves.

So it went on. Every day Frederick was something destructive—a storm, a fire-engine, an automobile out on a wrecking tour. Finally Dorothy, as the real owner of the sand-pile, said to Frederick: "You go away from here, bad boy. You always upset things. We got along nicely until you came. Now you spoil our fun all the time."

"I never will go away," challenged Frederick.

"Well, why don't you make things then? It is lots more fun than just spoiling them," suggested Mary.

"Where can I play and what can I make?" Frederick scowled.

"You can have my corner," offered Harold. "A road can begin anywhere."

"You could build a barn," said Mary.

"And have a barnyard with animals," suggested Dorothy.

Frederick thought about it for a moment and then ran away home. Soon he returned with a brown horse, a red cow, a white sheep, and two black and white pigs, all that were left of the wonderful Noah's ark he had destroyed one day when he was a cyclone. Then he built a barn from blocks Mary lent him, planted shade trees from Dorothy's garden, and fed his animals corn from John's store that he drew in a little red wagon over Harold's smooth roads. Due to a mistake on the part of our advertising department, the advertisement of Gillmore Brothers was carried through the month of August, contrary to their instructions. This resulted in their receiving many orders they were not prepared to handle promptly.

It also transgressed on their plan of changing credit system, and the confusion that resulted was due entire to the mistake of our advertising department.

This situation is now entirely cleared up and interested parties are assured of satisfaction in ordering from Gillmore Brothers, whose advertisement appears in this issue.

Deaths

MRS. ARTHUR KIRKBY FENTON.

Died, in Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday, August 6, ELLA GIBBONS FENTON, widow of the late Rev. Arthur Kirkby Fenton and daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John A. Gibbons, of Point Pleasant, West Virginia. Funeral services were conducted in Christ Church, Point Pleasant, by Rev. Arthur Kirkby Fenton, eldest son of Mrs. Fenton, assisted by Rev. George Shirley and Rev. Howard Pullen.

Interment was made in Lone Oak Cemetery, where Mrs. Fenton's husband and parents also rest. She is survived by three children: Rev. Arthur Kirkby Fenton, of Pittsburgh, Pa., John Gibbons Fenton and Mrs. Mary C (Fenton) Keeney, of Columbus, Ohio.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

many years. Over a thousand visitors attended. After dinner Hon. Wirt Courtney, Bishop Gailor and others made reminiscent speeches, which were broadcasted over WBAW. All the churches of the city sent greetings by their pastors and other representatives. Mr. J. B. Briggs, President of the Wurson County Banking and Trust Company, was general chairman who arranged the details. It is a singular fact that many of the founders of the parish and its present members are descendants of the Huguenot refugees, and that the parish was actually organized on August 25, under the shadow of St. Bartholomew's Day. One of these folk, Mr. Claibourne Maury, is now its oldest living member, having been baptized by Dr. Royce in 1848. Mrs. McKellar, granddaughter of Bishop Otey, and other relatives and descendants of its well-known progenitors gave the occasion importance. Admiral Maury, famous in the annals of the State of Virginia and the nation, received his training here under Bishop Otey. The day was closed by episcopal visitations to St. John's Colored Chapel and Grace Chapel, Spring Hill.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., Bishop.

During this triennium Springfield has been entering whole-heartedly into the effort to have a worth-while Birthday Thank Offering to present at the General Convention in Washington, and Miss Nellie Smith, the Diocesan Director of Religious Education, reports that up to the first of September there is $136.41 in the fund, with still another year to go. Springfield was credited with giving but $5 for the Birthday Thank Offering at the General Convention in New Orleans. Nineteen hundred and eighty-two is going to show wonderful advance.

The Rev. Mart Gary Smith has recently assumed the rectorship of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Danville, and since his taking charge on June 1 the church and parish house have been completely renovated at an expense of nearly $1,000. The parish is awake to its responsibility as a part of the Diocesan life and of its obligations to play the game with the National Church. A comparatively large weekday Summer School has been held during July and August. A Young People's Association has been definitely organized and at work. Calls have been made by the rector and Mrs. Smith upon practically every family in any way connected with the church and the future is bright.

Bishop White has been spending his first vacation since his consecration in 1924. During the month of August he was at Annandale, Minn., where reports come that most of his time was spent in fishing and in most everything else excepting real hard work for the Church, and it is hoped that with his return to the Diocese the early part of September he will be greatly rested and ready for an aggressive fall and winter's work.

The Diocese of Springfield begins the fall and winter work with every parish having its rector, and with all but two or three of the missions of the Diocese under the pastoral care of a priest, all of which should have its effect in strengthening and extending the Church.

F. H. S.

The Church schools at Centralia, Nashville, Mt. Vernon, Carlyle and Salem, R. Y. Barber rector, held a teachers' and leaders' conference in Centralia August 28, at which the winter's work was discussed and plans made for a larger work and a better standard of methods so that all the schools would be working by the same rules and grading by the same points in the standard. Owing to the fact that the schools are small and the teacher staff difficult to secure, the standard could not be set too high the first year. The following standard, counting 100 points, was adopted:

Little Helpers' roll	5
Birthday Thank Offering	5
Christmas box	10
Return of Advent Offering boxes	10
Return of Lenten Offering boxes	10
Gifts in five fields	10
Work in five fields	10
Church school attendance	10
Church attendance (members of school ten years and over)	10
Teachers' attendance at Holy Communion once a month	10
Regular Workers' Conference	10

Miss Nellie Smith, the educational director, will not teach in any of the schools which will run on Sunday, and she hopes to move over the field and help direct the activities, but she will teach in the Church schools of Carlyle on Monday and Nashville on Wednesday and in that way she will have a regular contact with the whole field of five counties. Plans are being worked on to conduct a Teachers' Training class in Centralia.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

The Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, is bequeathed $15,000 for the purpose of establishing and maintaining forever three free beds by the terms of the will of Marion E. Stainbach, widow of John A. Stainbach, who died April 29 in Atlantic City, N. J. The beds to be endowed are to be known as the "Edward Bispham English Bed", in memory of the decedent's father; "Charlotte Biddle English Bed", in memory of her mother, and the "John A. Stainbach Bed", in memory of her husband. The testatrix directed her executor "to cause neat, suitable tablets to be prepared and erected "over each of the three hospital beds endowed by the will.

Mrs. Stainbach also bequeathed $1,000 to the trustees of Trinity Episcopal Church, Sharon Springs, N. Y., in memory of her mother. The residue after many legacies are paid is devised to the trustees of the Pension Fund of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

R. R. W.

Occasionally we read of a scientist who has unveiled another of Nature's secrets in the heavens or on the earth. We cast our eyes casually on the morning paper which announces one of these triumphs of organized learning. But do we reflect that they were won by those who have spent more years on the process than we spend minutes on the news about it? I challenge any man, believer or unbeliever, to watch Christ as closely and as long as the astronomer watches for a new star in space and not be a new man after the vigil. If you long for a more genuine Christian life strive for a more vivid and enduring conception of the Christ who is your life.

Personal Notes

Appointments Accepted.

Rev. Francis F. Lynch, rector of Rock Spring Parish, Harford County, Md., has accepted the rectorship of Trinity Church, Victoria, Texas (W. T.), October 15.

ORDINATION.

On Wednesday, August 24, being St. Bartholomew's Day, the Rev. Watkins Leigh Ribble was ordained priest at St. John's Church, Halifax, Va. The Bishop of Southern Virginia officiated. The Rev. Fred G. Ribble, D. D., uncle of Mr. Ribble, preached the sermon and presented the candidate. The Rev. Dr. Owens, of Shreveport, La.; the Rev. Mr. Wagner, the Rev. Mr. Floyd, the Rev. Mr. Sapp and the Rev. Myron B. Marshall, rector of St. John's, assisted in the services and the laying on of hands.

On Wednesday, August 24, being St. Bartholomew's Day, the Rev. Basil Kent was ordained priest in Grace Church, Norfolk. Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, assisted by Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, officiating. The candidate was presented by Archdeacon Russell and the Rev. E. E. Miller preached the sermon. Seevn priests, among them Rev. Dr. Bragg, former rector of Grace Church, joined in the laying on of hands.

DEATHS.

Youngstown, Ohio.—The Rev. Osee Celcus Fox, retired priest of the Diocese of West Virginia, suffered a stroke of paralysis on Saturday, August 13, 1927, and was called Home the following day. The funeral service was held at his late residence, Youngstown, Ohio, on Wednesday, August 17, 1927.

The Rev. Mr. Fox was ordained to the Diaconate in 1906, and to the Priesthood in 1907 by the Bishop of Ohio. He served the Church faithfully and well in the Dioceses of Ohio and West Virginia. Reluctantly he gave up his active ministry when illness made it necessary that he resign his parish at Parkersburg, West Virginia, and he left amid the protest of his people who would have him stay on as their shepherd, even though incapacitated.

The Unfairness of Adults.

The six children were sitting quietly in their seats near the front of the hall, chatting amiably and waiting for the concert to begin. They had been there almost half an hour when a woman came down the aisle and stopped at their row.

"Will you children please move over?" she said peremptorily.

The children looked up at her in surprise and then looked questioningly at one another.

"Move over so I can have this end seat," insisted the woman.

The children hesitated, but no one moved.

"Come. hurry! It is almost time for the concert to begin." urged the woman. "I always have the end seat when I go anywhere, and I like this row best, so please move over."

"Aw, come on, move over," a boy said, and he pushed the boy beside him. The other boys and girls followed his lead and reluctantly moved over so that the woman got the end seat.

There were three other end seats vacant across the aisle which the woman could have chosen. That row of boys and girls had come to the hall more than half an hour early to get settled in the seats they wanted, while the woman came in at the last minute.

It wasn't that the change of seats made any great difference to the children, but it must have increased their resentment at the unfairness of those adults who do as they please regardless of courtesy, and who take advantage of their years to usurp the rights of those younger. If the children had been saucy or disrespectful, the woman would have been highly indignant; if they had refused to move over she would probably have gone to some one in authority and made trouble; yet it is to be doubted if she would have dared to make her last minute request for a special seat to a row of adults.

Adults have an important responsibility toward children which many hardly seem to realize. The adults whom the children admire and respect, the ones to whom they apply "game", "fair", "square", and other adjectives of approbation, the adults according to whom they pattern their little lives are not the kind who treat children inconsiderately. The people who have the most influence over the little folks are the ones whose innate sense of justice and fairness causes them to treat the child of five or more with the same courtesy and kindness that they would another adult or that they expect and desire themselves. After all, the Bible verse does not say, "Do unto other ADULTS ONLY us ye would that they should do unto you".—Lydia Lion Roberts.

Gifts Differing.

One heaven, but many stars; one light, but many colors; one God, but many manifestations of his wisdom and work: this principle runs through the universe from center to circumference and through all our life. One human mind, but many types of temperaments; one field of work, but many trades and professions; thus the fundamental unity of our human world breaks into endless variety, and this makes the picturesqueness and ever-changing interest and beauty of the human scene. This also promotes the efficiency of our work, for it is only as we differ that we can have the division of labor that vastly increases production in all fields. It would be a monotonous and barren, dull and dreary world in which we were all alike. We would soon get tired of one another in the endless repetition of ourselves. But gifts differing make us ever interesting to one another and blend the diverse personalities into stronger and richer unity and harmony. Each should be content with his own gift and develop it into its fullest power and service. Even if he has only one talent and that a humble one, it has in it endless possibilities of usefulness and beauty.—Presbyterian Banner.

The Anger of Jesus.

The failing that evoked the strongest feeling in our Lord when on earth was hardness of heart towards suffering. When He challenged the people who were worshipping with Him in church as to whether they were on the side of redeeming life or of leaving it maimed, He was met by a dead silence. He looked round on the faces of those present and met hostility. There was no sympathy in their hearts towards a fellow-citizen, incapacitated by suffering from doing his share of manual work in the world, and seeing this a feeling of righteous anger flushed His face and a pang of grief shot through His soul at the hardness of their hearts. Perhaps He recognized that it was of no use to argue with them in that state of mind—no words are recorded—but the work of healing was wrought and perfect soundness restored.—Selected.

THE PRECIOUS BLOOD OF THE LAMB OF GOD.

Redemption—"God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4:4, 5. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them."

"But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident."—Gal. 3:10; "for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God."—Rom. 3:23.

"Almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission."—Heb. 9:22.

"For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh."—Rom. 8.

"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, having been made a curse for us."—Gal. 3:13; "that He might deliver us from this present evil world,"—Gal. 1:4; "purchased with His own blood."—Acts 20:28.

"For it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul."—Lev. 17:11.

"A mind at perfect peace with God,
O what a word is this!
A sinner reconciled through blood,
This, this indeed is peace."

Once, when building a Church in the mountains I had to be there quite often, and stayed at the house of a gentleman, who, by the way, was raised near Emmanuel Church, Brook Hill, and naturally I thought to presume on his hospitality. His wife, however, was a Dutch Valleyite. At supper one night a very deaf aunt of the wife, sitting in an adjoining room, said something which I did not understand. Their little daughter, to the consternation of the household, repeated to me what she said: "An' Jane says 'he's here agin!'" History repeats itself, "he's here agin".

When compelled to give up Missionary work in the mountains by bad health of myself and wife I sought out this near Colonial Church—it sent a delegate to Council in 1779—set off here in the country by itself and continued the Missionary work.

The Church and Rectory, after thirty years without a Rector, have been renovated and restored at a cost of $2,500, all paid—but it has about exhausted our resources.

The pressing need for Rural Work are Parish Houses or halls for conferences, lectures, recreation, etc.

Please help us to get one for St. Luke's. Send checks to me.

Yours still in the work,
JOSIAH R. ELLIS.

Pedlar Mills, Va., Sept. 2, 1927.

My Son.

"I climbed the hills with one I know,
Where soft the singing sea winds blow,
Afar life's fretting cares and ills—
With God and him upon the hills.

"I climbed the hills with one I love—
The stars were smothered out above,
And all the world seemed dark and drear,
But whispering winds said, 'God is near'.

"That one I love spoke sweet of God,
And knows his face on sea or sod;
For through the dark we saw Him still—
Out on the shadow-covered hill.

"I know my Lord will stay with him,
When all our earthly skies go dim,
Will sweeten every bitter thing,
And send his lights where shadows cling.

"And, folded down so soft and still,
The wings of God upon the hill
Will hover close about my son,
Till all these earthly nights are done."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Why missionaries in China? There are not many answers. Only one—Christ, Christ, Christ.—Bishop Grose.

Our hearts can be filled with joy only when we fully realize that God is love, and try ourselves to be like Him by loving one another.

Dr. Theodore Cuyler, when he was over eighty, said: "I do not know much about eternal life, but I believe that you will be yourselves and that I shall be myself, and that we shall know each other."

Heaven's view of us includes all the generations past, all the influence of heredity that have come down to us, all the acquaintances we have had, all the education we have secured. It knows us just as we are.—Russell Conwell.

Jesus Christ did not create the hope of immortality: that is stamped so deep in the instinct of man that nothing could ever quite crush it out. What Jesus did was to verify that hope with the authentic seal of actual demonstration.

Our Father, God, to Thee,
Draw guilty man;
From far and near to see
Thy gracious plan.
To own Thy holy Son,
Whom Thou hast sent!
To save in every zone
All who repent.

—Mary Weldon.

The really good things, the big things, are inside and not outside the man. The big thing is not luxury, but contentment; not a big house, but a big satisfaction; not accumulated art treasures, but a fine artistic appreciation; not a big library, but a serene studiousness; not a big estate, but a large vision.

In Pauline Smith's "The Beadle", Andrina had made her sacrifice with tears, for she had loved greatly. She told her struggle to Gom Hans. The old man, taking off his wide brimmed hat, peered into the crown of it as if he might find there an answer to her riddle. "Look, now," he said, "for every sin there is pain, and for every sin there is sorrow. But when one comes at last through the pain and the sorrow to peace, surely that peace is the peace of God." That was all his wisdom. That was all his comfort. But for Andrina it sufficed.

A man's faith is not what he holds, but rather what holds him; and if the truth that we hold mentally, to which we subscribe with all our hearts, and with the full consent of our minds, does not affect our lives, does not change us into the likeness of our Lord, does not make us better men and women, something is wrong either with the truth or with us. Truth is immutable—nothing is wrong there—then we have misconceived its meaning and we have not accurately and properly applied and related it to its duties, its imperatives.—Holden.

Lord, give me faith to leave it all with Thee;
With tranquil heart to do my simple part,
And with my hand in Thine just go Thy way!

Lord, give me faith to leave it all to Thee!
The future is Thy gift: I would not lift
The veil Thy love has hung 'twixt it and me.

—John Oxenham.

ICED

"Cold as charity" is a familiar comparison in our English speech, doubtless humorous in origin, but based on old and dismal truth. St. Paul poured out the fineness and beauty of his soul in a kind of rhapsody in the thirteenth chapter of Corinthians, telling of the charity that never faileth, that beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. A very fearful difference there is between the charity thus pictured and that from which splendidly proud and brave and miserably poor old Betty Higden in Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend" fled away afoot lest her self-respect be contaminated by it. Part of the chapter describing her flight, "The End of a Long Journey", should be printed and hung on the wall of every place where the needy must go for what is called "relief". That graphic fiction has been and yet is horrible fact. John Boyle O'Reilly wrote two stinging, fearful lines telling of the unfortunate and wretched shamed and iced by a coldly suspicious, statistical Christ.

Organization and system are required for orderly and efficient conduct of all human business, but far too often in the administration of charity, sometimes even in management of churches, they are made the end rather than the means. Organized charity provides for itself rules and equips itself with agents, and with lamentable frequency the rules are obeyed and enforced inflexibly and implacably, regardless of the infinite variations of human conditions, emotions, histories and perceptions. The life is more than meat, the Saviour tells us, as warning against taking too much thought for our physical comfort, but those of us who would do or administer charity may find profounder meaning in the words. When we satisfy craving for food and fail to consider the craving of hearts for sympathy, respect and kindliness, we may be doing more harm than good, sending forth sullen resentment and rage against the Church, society and mankind strengthened for evil work. Gift or dole or allowance, accompanied by insulting cross-questioning, stings far more bitterly than any lash, and it is the best who feel most kindly. Thought of the Saviour at a desk scanning with hard eyes a pitiful applicant for aid, or mechanically and indifferently noting down answers to an arranged series of enquiries, is so incongruous as to seem blasphemous. Yet many entrusted with distribution of bounty in His name use, daily and hourly, precisely those methods. They make the doing of Divine charity a business void of feeling as the sale of tickets at the box office add horror to the humiliation of dependence. The Pharisees regulated their morality, piety and charity by fixed rules. The Saviour, speaking on earth the judgments of the Almighty, told His scorn of such iced and moulded righteousness—tithes of mint, anise and cummin scrupulously paid, the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith, neglected; the number of times an offender may be forgiven specified carefully.

Rules for doing charity are necessary. Flexibility of rules and mercy, tolerance, loving and pitying thought in obeying them are commanded by God and demanded by real benevolence and widely differing characters and personalities. Credulity is mortifying and sometimes expensive, but cruelty, done wilfully, stupidly or negligently, must be answered for at the final judging. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to the least of these, my brethren." The sneaking sneer of the imposter may anger and dismay us; but new soreness and shame inflicted on a troubled heart invite the condemnation of Almighty Power. The maxim of the law is that it is better for ninety-nine guilty to escape punishment than for one innocent to suffer. Is not some of our charity bestowed on the theory that it is better to neglect or harry and torture with investigations and intrusions ninety-nine worthy and deserving than to risk imposition by one swindler?

We do not complete our duty to our neighbor nor to God when we contribute our tithes to public or general charity. It is part of our obligation to give careful, thoughtful attention to the manner and methods by which our gifts, great or small, are applied; at least, as much as we give to the use of what we pay for taxes. Personal interest in the bread we cast on the waters will more certainly assure its return. The root and meaning of the word "charity" is love; and love cannot be cold or mechanical. Gifts to reach hearts and real human needs must be from hearts and directed and bestowed by hearts, not from hands only. Most of our larger charities make periodical reports with statistics of one kind and another—so much received, so much paid, so many "cases". Few of us take trouble to realize that the figures mean dealings with immaterial and immortal things—emotions, fears and hopes, tragedies of disappointment and deprivation, souls that are to live and testify for or against us through eternity. Surely it behooves all of us to look behind the figures and statistics, to know whether what we contribute is placed with heart strengthening, kindly thought for all the needs of the poor and desolate and stricken, or iced with formalities and indifference, hardening hearts and chilling to death every impulse of gratitude.

ALFRED B. WILLIAMS.

CLERICAL VACATIONS

In Letters to the Editor in this paper the clergy have recently been criticized for taking a month's vacation every year. One of the clergy has asked that something be said in the editorial columns about the matter. Being a clergyman and therefore more or less biased in the matter, we feel disqualified to express an impartial verdict. The matter, we believe, however, is important as furnishing evidence of the growing line of cleavage which exists between the clergy and the laity.

The question as propounded is as follows: Is a month too long for a clerical vacation? The answer must be colored by the viewpoint, and the personal equation enters in here. There is a greater gap that exists between the clergymen and business walks and other professions than is to be found in any other calling. If the minister is consecrated, his whole being is a via media between God and a sin-cursed world—his whole being is in action—the whole world is his parish—every cry of woe and need must find an echo in his heart—all the drama of life with its joys and sorrows plays upon his heart-strings. As a co-worker with God, Who works continually, his is a constant outgoing in prayer and loving crusade for the souls of men. He is burdened with souls and with intercession. He is a bond servant and his heart is a radio kept busy by the S. O. S. calls through the Spirit to minister to a stricken world. He must watch and agonize in prayer to keep his life open to the source of power from above. He is taxed by the outgoing of his sympathies. He is often worn by the under-current of criticism. The scrutiny of the public eye produces a nervous strain. Business men who act as lay readers bear testimony to the strain of merely reading a service. He must originate and plan some fresh treatment of the old truth. Demosthenes made about six orations in a lifetime, but people expect one hundred and four per year from the clergy. Then the endless details of running a modern parish, with its multifold activities, presents a killing pace, and as a result breakdowns are frequent. We have only touched the fringe—we could go on ad infinitum, but enough has been said to show that no other business or calling demands so much. We are not complaining of hardship or boasting. We would speak as a fool to do so. But Paul well says, "Who is sufficient for these things"?

Many colleges are giving professors a year to travel. For men who must be fresh and interesting in the pulpit and giving out, always to be kept in the treadmill with not sufficient time to thoroughly relax, read, get toned up spiritually at a Bible conference, restore depleted energies, seems to us a mistake. The work will be benefitted through the year by a well-spent month's vacation. And while many of the laity do not appreciate the heavy tax on a minister's life, there are often extra demands on a minister by reason of work that properly belongs to the laity. Paul says Epaphroditus was sick because of supplying the Philippians' lack of service toward him.

But there is another side. We have spoken of the ministry from an ideal standpoint. He is largely his own boss and may and often does so abuse the comfortable gospel that he has not done enough work to entitle him to a vacation. The vacation principle is abused. Some rest after Easter and take two or three months in the summer. This is wrong. And even some who take a month might well have some searchings of heart by reason of this protest from the laity. In violent protest against the critics "methinks he doth protest too much"! The clergy are becoming too jealous of luxurious rights. There are many and growing perquisites to the office that are tending to produce a pampered pulpiteer caste. They are set up as little tin gods and seem to be above listening to the laity. They often make exacting demands for their comfort from vestries. Denied these, they climb the miff tree. Many, as an evangelist once said, have to have the seats of their chairs upholstered more often than the soles of their shoes half-soled. They have been called fudge-eating mollycoddles. This is the other extreme. But it is a dangerous possibility. As a whole, the clergy are hard-working, self-sacrificing men. But they should be open to warnings. May not the Lord be speaking through godly laymen, at least making us ask if we are justified in taking a month. After all, the whole matter is one that pertains to that blessed liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. But "happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which we alloweth". "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." So we may say to you, brother minister, if you are yielded to the will of God and the Holy Spirit leads you to come apart and rest for a month, provided your church is kept open and regular services maintained and provision made for pastor aloversight, then rejoice in the assured blessing of God, and as far as criticism goes, let the heathen rage. But only if we are in the will of God. Col. 3:17 settles all such questions: "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by Him." R.

DR. TORREY REPLIES TO AN OBJECTOR.

Why pray for revival? Some of God's people believe that in these days revival is impossible. They say that we are in the midst of the apostasy prophesied in the Bible, and that it is to be followed by the Lord's second coming.

Recently a letter was written to the editor of one of the magazines that published Dr. Torrey's article entitled, "A Powerful Plea for Prayer for Revival", and the writer apparently objected to the article on the ground that we are now passing through the period of apostasy which precedes the Lord's return, and that therefore revival cannot occur. Dr. Torrey replied, in part, as follows:

"You give no Scriptures for your apparent position that the present apostasy, to which I plainly refer in my article, is the final apostasy. It certainly looks as though it might be, but so in the days of Martin Luther it must have looked as if apostasy, so widespread, was the final one, and if Martin Luther and others had followed your line of reasoning, they would have been paralyzed, but, thank God, they did not.

"So also in the eighteenth century in the days of Wesley, the apostasy was more general than it is to-day, and if Wesley or Whitefield and others had followed your line of reasoning there would not have been the great revival which saved for the time civilization and the Church.

"Just so in a later part of the same century, if Jonathan Edwards had adopted your line of reasoning and your assumption without Bible warrant that the final apostasy had fully set in, and, therefore, there could not be any great ingathering of the unsaved, he would not have sent out his plea for prayer, and consequent results would have been appalling.

"Just so in the early years of the nineteenth century, conditions were far worse in our colleges than they are to-day, and so were also conditions in the Church, and in other matters, and if Timothy Dwight and others had followed out your line of reasoning, and your unwarranted assumption, the great revival that shook and transformed Yale College, Princeton, and swept over the country, would not have come to pass."

Let us be encouraged by the above reminder of God's gracious dealings in the past; let us lay hold upon His promise, "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not" (Jer. 33:3); and with increased faith let us continue to Pray for Revival!

The Federal Radio Commission has given permission to the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to remove its radio station, WMBI, a distance of about twenty miles outside of the city, and to increase its power from 500 to 5,000 watts, which will more than treble its range and enable WMBI programs to reach all sections of the United States and most of Canada and Mexico. The station will continue to divide time with station WJAZ of the Zenith Radio Corporation, on a wave length of 1,140 kilocycles, 263 meters.

THE WORLD CONFERENCE IN RETROSPECT

By Reverend Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

WE are still too close, in time, to the World Conference at Lausanne fully to grasp its true significance. We are also too close to it to be able properly to appraise it or to measure its effectiveness or its full value to Christendom and to the world. Before the Conference assembled I expressed the opinion that it would be the greatest and most significant ecclesiastical event since the Reformation. In retrospect I see no reason to change that opinion.

Some who viewed the Conference as a direct effort to unite the Churches or to set up a frame-work for the Temple of United Christendom have doubtless been disappointed. The Conference was not called for that purpose. If it had been so called, it would have been a failure. The time was not ripe for such an undertaking. If any persons questioned this want of opportuneness, the Conference must itself have set them right. In all probability, if effort had been made to commit the Churches to any kind of a compromise plan for unity of organization at this time, the Conference would have broken up within a week, in disorder and confusion—if, indeed, not in rebellion and un-Christian enmity and animus. Only those who followed the proceedings at close range know how futile such procedure would have proved to be. This movement cannot be forced. The infant, "Desired Unity", must learn to walk before it can run—and it must learn to crawl before it can walk! I think we may, with accuracy, say that the infant has learned to walk and that it has now taken its first step alone. God lead it on to maturity and to manhood!

It is a sad commentary on the High Church Episcopalian delegation from the United States that this group, of all others, should have created the one dramatic denouement of the entire three weeks' sessions—the near-disruption referred to in an earlier article in the Southern Churchman. When it is realized that the American Episcopal Church has been the leader in the world movement towards unity and that this Church was the most influential of all the Churches in planning for the Conference, this blocking of Sectional Report No. 7, on "The United Church in Its Relation to Existing Churches", by a little group of Episcopalians is inexplicable on any sane grounds. When it is remembered that Bishop Brent, admittedly the most powerful individual Churchman in the unity movement, is himself an Episcopalian, and chairman of the World Conference on Faith and Order, the action of his fellow-Churchmen is almost incredible. During the progress of this eleventh-hour episode a verse from David's ancient writings kept ringing in my ears: "He was wounded in the house of his friends." I could imagine Shakespeare's words (from Caesar when he fell at the sword-thrust of Brutus)—falling from the lips of the Bishop, "Et tu, Brute", as the editor of the Living Church launched his heated attack upon the committee's report and stabbed it to death. It was only the statesmanship and generosity of Dr. Brent that prevented impending disruption. The atmosphere was tense—the moment dramatic and the hour of final adjournment was at hand. Bishop Brent, like a brave man leaping into the water to save a drowning swimmer, immediately supported the motion not to "receive" (adopt) the report, but to refer it to the Continuation Committee. This prevented what looked like a deadlock and threw the majority at once to the other side and saved the report for future study and action. This was the only Sectional Report out of six such papers that was not unanimously received by the Conference for furthering later on to all the Christian Churches of the world.

The action is all the more singular in that it did not originate with the strict Eastern Orthodox or Greek or Anglicans (though some of them did not favor the report); or yet with the stiff, high Church wing of the German or Russian ecclesiastics who were present—nor with the High Swedish Lutherans—but its foremost agitators were three American Episcopal delegates. It is all the more singular that the chief objector, certainly the chief spokesman, was not a bishop or a priest pledged to "banish from the Church all erroneous and strange doctrine", but a layman from Milwaukee; conscientious, unquestionably, but tardy, stiff and without interdenominational charity or esprit. His action will very likely widen the gulf already existing between the Episcopal Church and her sister Churches of Protestants in America.

These High Church leaders seem to feel that the Church is castled in their own minds; that God is ensconsed in these citadels of the imagination; and that they must ever and anon fly to the defense of the Almighty, lest He be driven out into the world, or perchance stolen away while men sleep. It is a singular ecclesiastical complex. This leads me to say that the Conference was by and large in the hands of ecclesiastics of strong preconceived ideas of churchmanship; but with too little breadth of view and too little of the average bent of the common variety of humankind.

The Conference proved that men are what they are trained to be. It appears that Christendom must train up and foster more Christ-men and fewer Church-men; more men of brotherhood and of broad charity, and fewer men of "ecclesia-hood" and of narrow bigotry. Otherwise, we must continue to struggle along indefinitely in the quagmire of ecclesiastical conceit and phariseeism—which God forbid!

Lausanne Cathedral and Swiss University, Where World Conference Was Held.

Below is printed the text of Report No. 7, which was referred to the Continuation Committee, but not allowed to take its place along with other such reports for dissemination among the Churches of the world. The writer was told that the paper was defeated because of its "Protestant" nature and its reference to "inter-communion" as a feature of the United Church of the future. The report says:

The Unity of Christendom in Relation to Existing Churches.

"Christian Unity expresses itself in love, in faith and in the order of the Church.

"I. Fellowship in Life and Work: As the individual is tested by the Divine rule ("ye shall know them by their fruits"), so also the unity of the disciples is proved by their fellowship in the service of the Master.

"All Christians, in fulfilling the Master's law of love, should act together as if they were one body in one visible fellowship without any injury to theological principles. In 1920 the Ecumenical Patriarchate issued to Christendom an Encyclical letter proposing a koinonia ton ekklesion, a league of Churches for practical purposes, without authority to commit the Churches. It was followed up by the Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work (Stockholm, 1925). The task of that Conference should be continued and strengthened, and will surely prepare the way for fuller spiritual unity through faith in God and our Lord Jesus Christ, the faith underlying and inspiring all Christian life and work. A council of the Churches for practical purposes might be well evolved from the Continuation Committee on Life and Work, consisting of representatives officially appointed by almost all Christian communions, and from other organizations of a similar nature.

"II. Fellowship in Faith and Order: The present movement towards unity in Faith and Order, which has found expression at Lausanne, yields the idea of one Church united in the essentials of Faith and Order, and including diverse types of doctrinal statement and of the administration of Church Ordinances.

"Every existing Church has its own charisma, and its own historic tradition. It has therefore a contribution to make to the whole. The common historic tradition of Christianity has also to be considered. In the primitive Church the Body was one, yet there was variety in the expression of doctrine and also diversity of practice.

"In the United Church there must be: (1) A common Faith, a common Message to the World (Reports 2 and 4); (2) Baptism as the rite of incorporation into the one Church; (3) Holy Communion as expressing the corporate life of the Church and as its signal act of corporate worship (Report 6); (4) A ministry accepted throughout the Universal Church (Report 5); (5) Freedom of interpretation about Sacramental Grace and Ministerial Order and authority. There is a difference of view as to the extent of this freedom.

"Note.—Professor Balanos made the following statement: The Greek Church, which regards the Holy Tradition of the Church besides the Holy Scriptures as norma fida, cannot recognize liberty in regard to interpretation about Sacramental Grace and Ministerial Order and authority.

"6. Due provision for the exercise of the prophetic gift.

"III. Ways of Approach: In preparing for closer fellowship, each section of the Church should seek more intimate knowledge of Faith and Life, Worship and Order in other Communions. Differences founded in complicated historic developments may sometimes prove to be less important than they are supposed to be. As our several communions come to understand each other better, they will refrain from competitive propaganda to exalt the one by depreciating another.

"The unity of the Church is most effectively promoted by constant prayer for one another on the part of the various Communions: and such prayer is especially needed for all those who are passing through suffering.

"We would also stress the value of different Communions engaging in joint evangelistic work. There is abundant evidence that when Communions undertake together the Divine task of bringing the love of Christ to those who do not know Him, they find themselves in the closest spiritual unity.

"When different Christian denominations are represented in the same community, differences in creed, worship and practice should not prevent individuals and communions from working together in recognition of the principle of comity, mutual consideration and Christian courtesy.

"We note with gratitude to God the recent increase of effective cooperation on the mission field. The purpose of all missionary work is to carry the eternal gospel to the ends of the earth ,so that it may meet the spiritual needs of every nation and bring all men to their Saviour. The urgency and greatness of that task has led to the accomplishment of some unions, and to the proposal of plans which are attracting the attention of the older Communions and may prove to provide examples for them. We trust that the old long-standing divisions will not be permitted to frustrate such plans.

"IV. Completed Fellowship: Complete fellowship in the Church will not be realized until the way is opened for all God's children to join in Communion at the Lord's Table. Only through prayer and thoughtful deliberation can steps be taken towards full communion between the different sections of Christendom. Ambiguous statements and hasty measures may hinder the work of unification. Only when full mutual recognition has been obtained can the visible unity of the Church be effectively realized.

"Nor should we forget that, greatest of all, God's mercy and sonship in His family are granted to every faithful soul. God give us wisdom and courage to do His will!"

The blessed ministry of friendship:

(Jonathan) "strengthened his hand in God".—1 Samuel 23:16.

"They have refrshed my spirit."—1 Corinthians 16:18.

The highest privilege of friendship:

"God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you.'—1 Samuel 12:23.

The highest joy of friendship:

"I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, in every prayer of mine for you, making request with joy."—Philippians 1:3-4.

How such heights may be attained:

"Ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another."—1 Thessalonians 4:9.

HE WHOM A DREAM HATH POSSESSED.

He whom a dream hath possessed knoweth no more of doubting,
For mist and the blowing of winds and the mouthing of words he scorns;
Not the sinuous speech of school he hears, but a knightly shouting
And never comes darkness down, yet he greeteth a million morns.

He whom a dream hath possessed knoweth no more of roaming;
All roads and the flowing of waves and the speediest flight he knows,
But wherever his feet are set, his soul is forever homing,
And going, he comes, and coming he heareth a call and goes.

He whom a dream hath possessed knoweth no more of sorrow,
At death and the dropping of leaves and the fading of suns he smiles,
For a dream remembers no past and scorns the desire of a morrow,
And a dream in a sea of doom sets surely the ultimate isles.

He whom a dream hath possessed treads the impalpable marches,
From the dust of a day's long road he leads to a laughing star,
And the ruin of worlds that fall he views from eternal arches,
And rides God's battlefield in a flashing and golden car.

SAFETY, CERTAINTY AND ENJOYMENT

By George Cutting

THE JOY OF SALVATION.

YOU will find in the teaching of Scripture that while you are saved by Christ's work and assured by God's Word, you are maintained in comfort and joy by the Holy Ghost, who indwells every saved one's body.

Now, you must bear in mind that every saved one has still with him "the flesh"; i. e., the evil nature he was born with as a natural man, and which perhaps showed itself on his mother's lap. The Holy Ghost in the believer resists the flesh, and is grieved by every activity of it in motive, word, or deed. When he is walking "worthy of the Lord", the Holy Ghost will be producing in his soul His blessed fruits—"love, joy, peace", etc. (See Galatians 5:22.) When he is walking in a carnal, worldly way the Spirit is grieved, and these fruits are wanting in greater or less measure.

While Still a Helpless Infant

Let me put it thus for you who do believe on God's Son:

Christ's work and your salvation stand or fall together.

Your walk and your enjoyment stand or fall together.

When Christ's work breaks down (and, blessed be God, it never, never will), your salvation will break down with it. When your walk breaks down (and be watchful, for it may), your enjoyment will break down with it.

Thus it is said of the early disciples (Acts 9:31), that they "walked in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost".

And again in Acts 13:52: "The disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost."

My spiritual joy will be in proportion to the spiritual character of my walk after I am saved.

Now, do you see your mistake? You have been mixing up enjoyment with your safety, two widely-different things. When through self-indulgence, loss of temper, worldliness, etc., you grieved the Holy Spirit, and lost your joy, you thought your safety was undermined. But again I repeat it—

Your safety hangs upon Christ's work for you.

Your assurance upon God's Word to you.

Your enjoyment upon your not grieving the Holy Ghost in you.

When, as a child of God, you do anything to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, your communication with the Father and the Son is, for the time, practically suspended; and it is only when you judge yourself, and confess your sins, that the joy of communication is restored.

Your child has been guilty of some misdemeanor. He shows upon his countenance, the evident mark that something is wrong with him. Half an hour before this round the garden, admiring what you admired, enjoying what you enjoyed. In other words, he was in communion with you; his feelings and sympathies were in common with yours.

He Was Enjoying a Walk With You

But now all this is changed, and as a disobedient child he stands in the corner, the very picture of misery.

Upon penitent confession of his wrong doing you have assured him of forgiveness; but his pride and self-will keep him sobbing there.

Where is now the joy of half an hour ago? All gone. Why? Because communion between you and him has been interrupted.

What has become of the relationship that existed between you and your son half an hour ago? Has that gone, too? Is that severed or interrupted? Surely not.

His relationship depends upon his birth.

His communion upon his behavior.

But presently he comes out of the corner with broken will and broken heart, confessing the whole thing from first to last, so that you see that he hates the disobedience as much as you do, and you take him in your arms and cover him with kisses. His joy is restored, because communion is restored.

When David sinned so grievously in the matter of Uriah's wife, he did not say, "Restore unto me Thy salvation", but "Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation". (Psalm 51:12.)

But to carry our illustration a little further. Supposing while your child is in the corner there should be a cry of "fire" through your home, what would become of him then? Left in the corner to be consumed with the burning, falling house! Impossible!

Very probably he would be the very first person you would carry out. Ah, yes, you know right well that the love of relationship is one thing, and the joy of communion quite another.

Now, when the believer sins, communion is for the time interrupted, and joy is lost until, with a broken heart, he comes to the Father and confesses his sins.

Then, taking God at His word, he knows he is again forgiven; for His Word plainly declares that "if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness". (1 John 1:9.)

Oh, then, dear child of God, ever bear in mind these two things, that there is nothing so strong as the link of relationship; nothing so tender as the link of communion.

All the combined power and counsel of earth and hell cannot sever the former, while an impure motive or an idle word will snap the latter.

If you are troubled with a cloudy half-hour, get low before God, consider your ways. And when the thief that has robbed you of your joy has been detected, drag him at once to the light,

Confess Your Sin to God, your Father, and judge yourself most unsparingly for the unwatchful, careless state of soul that allowed the thief to enter unchallenged.

But never, never, never, confound your safety with your joy.

Don't imagine, however, that the judgment of God falls a whit more leniently on the believer's sin than on the unbeliever's. He has not two ways of dealing judicially with sin, and He could no more pass by the believer's sin without judging it, than He could pass by the sins of a rejecter of His precious Son. But there is this great difference between the two; viz., that the believer's sins were all known to God, and all laid upon His own provided Lamb when He suffered upon the cross at Calvary, and that there and then, once and forever, the great "criminal question" of his guilt was raised and settled, judgment falling upon the blessed Substitute in the believer's stead, "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree". (1 Peter 2:24.)

The Christ-rejecter must bear his own sins in his own person

In the Lake of Fire Forever.

Now, when a saved one fails, the "criminal question" of sin cannot be raised against him, the Judge Himself having settled that once for all on the cross; but the communion question is raised within him by the Holy Ghost as often as he grieves the Spirit.

Allow me, in conclusion, to give you another illustration. It is a beautiful moonlight night. The moon is at full, and shining in more than ordinary silver brightness. A man is gazing intently down a deep, still well, where he sees the moon reflected, and thus remarks to a friendly bystander: "How beautifully fair and round she is tonight! how quietly and majestically she rides along!" He has just finished speaking, when suddenly his friend drops a small pebble into the well, and he now exclaims, "Why, the moon is all broken to shivers, and the fragments are shaking together in the greatest disorder!"

"What gross absurdity," is the astonished rejoinder of his companion. "Look up, man! the moon hasn't changed one jot or tittle. It is the condition of the well that reflects her that has changed."

Now, believer, apply the simple figure. Your heart is the well. When there is no allowance of evil the blessed Spirit of God takes of the glories and preciousness of Christ, and reveals them to you for your comfort and joy. But the moment a wrong motive is cherished in the heart, or an idle word escapes the lips unjudged, the Holy Ghost begins to disturb the well, your happy experiences are smashed to pieces, and you are all restless and disturbed within, until in brokenness of spirit before God you confess your sin (the disturbing thing), and thus get restored once more to the calm, sweet joy of communion.

But when your heart is thus all unrest, need I ask, Has Christ's work changed? No, no. Then your salvation has not altered.

Has God's Word changed? Surely not. Then the certainty of your salvation has received no shock.

Then, what has changed? Why, the action of the Holy Ghost in you has changed, and instead of taking of the glories of Christ, and filling your heart with the sense of His worthiness, He is grieved at having to turn aside from this delightful office to fill you with the sense of your sin and unworthiness.

He takes from you your present comfort and joy until you judge and that He judges and resists. When this is done communion with God has again been restored.

The Lord make us to be increasingly jealous over ourselves, lest we grieve "the Holy Spirit of God, whereby we were sealed unto the day of redemption". (Ephesians 4:30.)

Dear reader, however weak your faith may be, rest assured of this, that the blessed One who has won your confidence will never change.

"Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." (Hebrews 13:8.)

The work He has accomplished will never change.

"Whatsoever God doeth it shall be forever; nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it." (Ecclesiastes 3:14.)

The word He has spoken will never change.

"The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: but the word of the Lord endureth forever." (1 Peter 1:24, 25.)

Thus the object of my trust, the foundation of my safety, the ground of my certainty, are alike eternally unalterable.

"My love is ofttimes low,
My joy still ebbs and flows;
But peace with Him remains the same,
No change Jehovah knows.

"I change, He changes not;
My Christ can never die;
His love, not mine, the resting-place;
His truth, not mine, the tie."

Once more let me ask, "What class are you travelling?" Turn your heart to God, I pray you, and answer that question to Him.

"Let God be true, but every man a liar." (Romans 3:4.)

"He that hath received His testimony has set to his seal that God is true." (John 3:33.)

May the joyful assurance of possessing this "great salvation" be yours, dear reader, now and "till He come".

HARMONY OF SCIENCE AND RELIGION

By Professor Francis H. Smith, D. C. L.

Part II.

AFTER all, is it not true that in many cases the criticism of truths heretofore regarded as fundamental is an attempt to pass behind them to simpler statements regarded as more admissable, and that however far the analysis goes, one must stop somewhere at a proposition of which we can give no account? All lines of reasoning begin with postulates. To replace our present assumptions with others considered better and simpler, leaves at last something to be taken for granted. It is so in the most perfect of the sciences. Euclid began with postulates which he could not prove, but only beg that they should be allowed. Had he been obliged to assume nothing he could never have advanced, because he could never have begun. The ladder by which he mounted must at the bottom rest upon something which is not ladder.

The point here will be more clear if we remember that our teachers have told us that the mind in reasoning is concerned with the relations of things and not otherwise with the things themselves. The things may be imaginary or even impossible, while their relations are real and simple. The most important things even in science are impossible of definition—space, time, matter, energy, life. Yet their ratios or other relations are not only definable, but so definite that the general statement of these are the Laws of Science.

As with these primary concepts, so it is with certain elementary statements, as, for instance, "like effects have like causes and like causes have like effects" (Elements of Logic, by Professor N. K. Davis); statements which we believe because they never lead us into error, but to conclusions which harmonize with experience. Our conclusions from these data form a mental picture which is for each of us the world. The progress of knowledge consists largely in improving the picture, as time goes on, by a correcter restatement of our data and by correcter reasoning from them, and so in bringing it more and more nearly into accord with the world of truth as we know it better and better.

We must, therefore, begin with postulates, however far back we may penetrate. If they lead us to truth, they are verified for us. If they thus safely lead us, not in one line of inference only, but in several different ones our confidence in them grows stronger. In any new field to which they apply, we use them, as we use the sunshine, in exploring a new territory. That they have done the same for many generations before us confirms our faith in them. In this regard we are heirs to the wealth of countless ancestors. To discard it and begin where they were first obliged to learn would be like expecting the heir of Astor to refuse his patrimony and become a dealer in furs.

Such a condition, if we do not err, confronts us in the highest sphere of human thought, where conscience sits on the throne and man meets his Maker. Many of our studies seem to begin and end in our existing relation to the present life and world. There are some studies which refuse to be so confined, and connect us with another world and with infinite time. We belong to a land called Christian, and we inherit, with or without our consent, the result of nineteen centuries of Christian thought and work. We have then come into the possession of certain fundamental statements which, we are taught, came in old times from a higher sphere and not from human reason. Though not the gift of science, they have given us sound scientific evidence of their truth in that many generations have been led by them to consistent conclusions. Being practical truths, they have been verified by trials in the conduct of life, and have been found by the noblest of men to be the only help to a higher life. These truths have changed the Saxon races from barbarians to men of culture. In the mutilated form in which they pervade the Oriental religions they have furnished to multitudes in those countries supports to virtue and alleviation of misfortune. Where they have been most honored and followed, the Church and her daughter, the schoolhouse, have led in social progress, and in these times of teeming wealth and its dangers they constitute our best security for the perpetuity of the Republic. They are for us more firmly settled than the foundations of great cathedrals which have for centuries withstood the storms. We deem it needless to be excavating about their bottom courses to verify their stability. That is proved by the permanence of the superstructure.

What are these statements? They are such as these: There is a God and He cares for man. He manifests Himself in His Word and in His works. He reveals Himself in the heart of man, and so in society and in history, and also in the physical universe. These are all partial mirrors of Him, without which no man has ever fully seen Him. If we seek to see Him in any one of these His partial mirrors, it would seem to be wise to come to the examination with some knowledge of what has been shown by the others. All together cannot complete the representation of Him, for He is infinite and they are finite. The study of the material world as revealing its Author may therefore be greatly aided by knowing something of the other and higher revelations. It is true that one may profit by examining a great picture without knowing its author or its theme. He may admire its wealth of color and harmony of tints, and dwell upon the grace and truth of the drawing, but he will feel that he has gotten but a little way beneath the surface. Very different would be his feelings if he came to the picture with a knowledge of its subject and a familiarity with other famous paintings by the same Artist. Then the canvas glows with new meaning, its finer touches are detected, and the painter stands revealed in his work. Somewhat so, I fancy, it is with the world picture about us. It is wonderful and beautiful, apart from any reference to its Maker. Men have spent their lives, with satisfaction, in the scrutiny of a small portion of it without ever thinking of Him. But how much fuller, deeper, richer is it in every part, as well as in the whole sweep of its amazing extent, when, as did Newton and Faraday, we view it as the handiwork of a Creator, known to us in the lineaments of His character by other ways of manifesting Himself. Surely the astronomer reaches a higher plane if he rises from the study of the starry host regarded as an intricate mechanism, straining and rewarding his mathematics, to the vision of the Almighty and the conviction that the heavens declare the glory of God. The undevout astronomer may not be mad. He is only unfortunate, playing with jewels, of whose real value he is ignorant. He knows as much of the heavens as a wingless bird knows of the air.

It is in this view that I seek in an humble and, at best, fragmentary way to contemplate the material world in some of its simpler aspects as being an expression of its Maker's character, limiting myself of necessity to such knowledge as pertains to my own studies in an elementary field. And even then I must beg the indulgence of those before me who are cultivators of that field. They will doubtless find much in my brief statements that is unsatisfactory. How sad I am to miss here the face of Joshua Walker Gore, Professor of Physics, University of North Carolina, from whose sympathy and advice I should have derived so much aid.

In these lectures I shall reverently attempt to follow the suggestion of St. Paul as to the highest lesson taught by the material world. He told the Romans that they might see there the Godhead and Power of their Maker, while to the Lystrians he spoke of the world as revealing His goodness. My three topics will be Unity, Power and Goodness of God, as plainly seen in his works.

THE STORY OF A LOST OPPORTUNITY

By the Reverend George F. Bragg, D. D., Baltimore, Md.

By the Rev. George F. Bragg, D. D., Baltimore, Md.

IT is interesting to reproduce here a portion of the report made to this convention, 1879, of Doctors Weddell and Dashiell, the special committee, who held a conference with these people during the spring of 1878. It says:

"We went to the place of meeting at half past ten o'clock Wednesday morning. There were upon the ground in waiting for us, fifteen of the ministers and a thousand or twelve hundred from their various congregations. It was arranged that the chairman of this commitee should meet in conference with the ministers and with as many of the Zion Union laity as the chapel could accommodate. At their religious exercises the congregation used the 'Third Service'. * * * Their result of the conference was that by an unanimous vote the organization puts itself into the care of the Protestant Episcopal Church, giving their assent to our doctrine, discipline and worship. * * * As your committee, we will briefly express our belief that with proper care we can reach and impress a very large colored population, and that we can rely upon many of them to be grateful and loyal children of our ecclesiastical household. We were deeply affected by our interviews with them. They appreciate the situation. They have been praying for help, the help has seemed to come * * * they want to go hand in hand with the people who have shown for them the feeling of brethren. The responsibility now upon our Church, we think, is a most serious one. It may be a crisis with these negroes. It is a crisis with us."

God has opened a door of opportunity. Good white men and women had been earnestly praying and working, amid discouragements, anticipating the answer to their prayers. It had arrived. Through the influence of this same Mrs. Buford, there was a young man, of the laity of this organization, an undergraduate of Hampton, who had definitely offered himself for the ministry of the Church. And, then, here was this entire body knocking at the door. The first step in answer to "this call", lead by Bishop Whittle and the Rev. Dr. Gibson, was the preparation of a place for the training of colored men for the ministry, as well as for other Christian workers. The Board of Trustees of the Virginia Theological Seminary authorized the establishment of a "branch" school of that institution to be located, for the present, on the premises of St. Stephen's Church, Petersburg. Dr. Gibson was made chairman of the local committee, and the Rev. Thomas Spencer, his assistant minister, was selected as the professor and instructor in charge, This institution opened during the fall 1878 for the primary and special benefit of James S. Russell. During the first year of the existence of this school, ending with the report made to the convenion of 1879, here were in attendance six students. The writer of the present article being the youngest in the group, the branches pursued by him were subjects not strictly ecclesiastical. Besides Mr. Russell, Mr. T. W. Cain, teaching then in St. Stephen's Normal School, and two Methodists and one Baptist clergymen. Mr. Cain, the first fruits of the Mission School, following the close of the war, had graduated from Lincoln University in 1871, and was really the first colored person in the diocese to become, regularly, a candidate for priests' orders. For certain reasons he had returned to the little town of his birth, in North Carolina, and taught school (and marrying a wife) for some years. While teaching in the Normal School he was being prepared for ordination to the diaconate by Bishop Whittle, which took place that very year, 1879. He was immediately sent to Richmond, and placed in charge of a group of colored communicants, who for some years had been ministered to by several of the white clergy, including Bishops Whittle, Winchester and Gibson and others. This was St. Philip's congregation. And Mr. Cain had no warmer supporters than the late Messrs. John L. Williams, Peter H. Mayo, the Stewarts and Joseph Bryan.

Bishop Whittle, in his address to the Council of 1879, said: "I am glad to be able to report a small increase in the number of colored persons confirmed. This portion of our population is becoming more and more accessible to the teaching and influence o four Church, and the time has arrived, it appears to me, when every minister who believes that they are included in the Saviour's redeeming work, should believe also that they are included in the commission which commands him to preach the gospel to every creature. It will be seen from the parochial reports that quite a number of the brethren of the clergy, and the laity, are laboring amongst the colored people, and when all things are considered, with as much encouragement and success as they have any right to expect, but as yet we have only made a beginning in the great field which God has opened everywhere around us. In Petersburg Rev. Mr. Cooke's work is constantly enlarging, and he deserves all the sympathy and needs all the pecuniary assistance that can possibly be given him. In Brunswick County a devoted lady, by simply manifesting the spirit and following the example of the blessed Saviour, has so gained the confidence of the colored people, by means of her influence, an organized body, composed of a number of preachers, and of several thousand members, has asked to be received into communion with our church."

During the decade following, the Episcopal Church in Virginia sustained the most remarkable growth of its work among the colored people ever chronicled in its entire history. In the spring of the year 1881, James S. Russell was ordained deacon and sent to begin operations in Brunswick county. Mr. Pollard had already been transferred from Alexandria to become the assistant to Mr. Cooke at Petersburg. During the latter portion of 1883 Mr. Pollard was sent to Norfolk to initiate a work with a neuclus of colored communicants from Christ Church that city. There were now three strong and able colored clergymen in the diocese, one priest and two deacons. Mr. Russell remained a deacon nearly five years, and his work during this period was something wonderful and amazing. The volume of work undertaken by him was almost inconceivable. Being thoroughly loved and admired throughout the regions of Brunswick and Mecklenburg counties, he created a tremendous rural work for the Church in the blackest part of the "black belt" of Virginia.

Any number of congregations, through his influence, were organized in that region, and altogether more than a half a score of former Zion Union preachers entered the Bishop Payne Divinity School in preparation for the diaconate.

This wonderful and amazing growth among the colored people, as well as the desire of the Zion Union people to enter the Church, eventuated in a serious reaction, which slackened the progress, and turned the current, and with the close of the decade, ushered in the policy of "restriction".

At the beginning of the decade there were those who scanned what was ahead, and then and there sought to provide a proper system which would allay the feelings of many and at the same time put the colored race in the Church, within the very best conditions for aggressive and successful work among their own brethren. The great man of "vision" in those days was Rev. J. S. Hanckell. The present writer honestly viewed Dr. Hanckell in the opposite light. But time has proven that Dr. Hanckell was right, and we were wrong.

In the memorable convention of 1879, the Rev. Dr. Hanckell presented a series of resolutions which were adopted. The principle point was the memoralizing the General Convention in favor of providing the necessary legislation whereby Missionary Districts for the colored race could be realized. In 1883 the "Sewanee" Conference, of white Southern clergy and laity, united upon the same idea. Vain were the many efforts to have the General Convention act in the matter. And when it became apparent that there was little chance of such action upon the part of the General Convention, Virginia, led by Dr. Hanckell, undertook to do for herself, in a diocesan way, what the General Convention had failed to do for the Church at large. After constituting the skeleton of the diocesan organization, before taking the final step, Virginia hesitated to see whether or not the General Church would thus complete the same, with an Episcopal head. Thus in the year 1888 the initial change in the "Constitution" was made, and the year 1889, the close of the second decade, the same body, twenty years before that had given the Rev. Joseph S. Atwell such a cordial and rousing welcome, restricted membership in the convention, after that date, to white men. It was a terrible setback to the work. And, strange as it was, the very first negro clergyman to be ecclesiastically "disfranchised" by the changed constitution was a native of Brunswick county, a native of the Church, and the first full graduate of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, the Rev. John Wesley Johnson. For it was that same year the new rules governing the Divinity School went into effect from that time on the conferring of diplomas of graduation.

At the close of the second decade, 1889, there were eleven colored clergy connected with the diocese, nine of whom were actually present in the council of 1889. That year 149 baptisms, 246 colored teachers, 2,261 colored Sunday-school scholars and 846 colored communicants were reported. This was the record of the old undivided diocese of Virginia.

Not having the machinery to handle a large proposition, Virginia, which started off so bravely and beautifully, lost a golden opportunity, not only to do a great work herself, but that of leading and inspiring others.

The Point of Contact Between the Races.

As far back as 1889, the General Convention, the Hon. Seth Low, of Long Island, pointed out the remedy, as well as a program of peace and racial co-operation. His proposal was most heartily endorsed by such an eminent Southerner as the Hon. Shipwith Wilmer, of Maryland. Here is what Mr. Low said, and proposal:

"I submit that the point at issue really is, Where shall the point of contact between the races be? As it stands at the present time it does not take place in the parishes. There are colored parishes and there are white parishs. There is no rule to prevent an intermingling, and there ought not to be. But as a matter of fact a division exists in the smallest unit, which is the parish. Now, we have attempted to bring about the union in the diocese, and that attempt is the cause of all this trouble. As a Northern man I believe it is the cause of all this trouble, because the question comes in the South in different proportions from what it comes in the North. I do not dare to say what would be the action of the North if the proportion of numbers were what it is in the South.

"Now, it seems to me perfectly consistent with the theory of equality that the point of contact between the races should take place in this Convention, and that apart from economical usage there is no reason at all why there should not be an organization of colored men with their Bishops as well as their own presbyters, the Bishops of which organizations should have a seat in the House of Bishops, and deputies from the congregations should have seats with equal rights in this house with deputies from the white congregations. The point which I wish to make is this: That it is not a question of principle, but a question of judgment to determine where the point of contact between the races shall take place."

Book Reviews

"THE DIVINE COMMISSION," "A SKETCH OF CHURCH HISTORY." By Rev. Frank E. Wilson, S. T. D.

This is a condensed and readable book on a subject of deep interest. It is published by the National Council of the Episcopal Church, which is a sufficient guarantee of its moderate character and value. A book of this kind is needed and this one will prove very useful to a growing number of Church members and others who desire a brief story of the Church.

The two-page preface explains how the book began and developed. It was a careful piece of work, tested and improved. It states that "Christ did not build an organization, but He did plant the seed of an organism. He did not leave the future to the vagaries of human judgment; neither did He cripple its normal development with an ecclesiastical strait-jacket. He did stamp a certain character upon His Gospel; placed it in the hands of a group of chosen men trained, authorized and commissioned by Himself to administer its principles; and then left it to grow to its natural fruitage."

The chapter on "Apostolic Beginnings" is excellent, although, perhaps, not "high" enough for some or "low" enough for others. Middle ground is usually nearer the truth than either extreme. This reviewer agrees with the author on "the apostles' doctrine". Christ is the only way to God. He is the "all in all". There is no life for the branch apart from the Vine. "Without Me ye can do nothing."

"Days of Persecution" is a well condensed and graphically written chapter. Some of the classical stories are told briefly and vividly. Our admired friend, Marcus Aurelius, suffers considerably. He first authorized torture for Christians. Justin Martyr, at St. Polycarp, suffered under his authority. Consistency is a rare jewel.

Arius, Constantine and the Creeds are well treated by the author in a way to be easily understood by those who have not the background of previous study. The story of the "Broken Empire" and the papacy contains all that a beginner needs and is good for the student by way of reminder.

The "Dark Ages" and the "Eastern Church" are interesting enough for any student of history or the general reader. But for the tragedy of it the controversy between the Eastern and Western Churches is an amusing comedy. The author does not overlook the humorous side of the story.

The rest of the book is in keeping with the early chapters. "The Crusades", "The Great Schism", "The Continental Reformation", "The Church of England", "The English Reformation", "The Colonial Church", "The Episcopal Church", are all well presented in a sincere and moderate way allowing the privilege to every reader to differ in opinion and to go further with each subject in a "Bibliography" printed at the close, containing the titles of a host of our old and reliable "book" friends.

All of this, three hundred pages of it, is for the unusual price of one dollar.

THE TABERNACLE: IT'S GOD-APPOINTED STRUCTURE AND SERVICE. By Iris Ileker McCord. The Bible Institute Colportage Association.

This little booklet of seventy-two pages is a veritable multum in parvo. In days when many are undervaluing the Old Testament, a Bible study such as is here given makes one realize that the Old Testament is latent in the New and the New latent in the Old. A wonderful picture gallery of the work and Person of our Blessed Lord is here presented in the well-authenticated typology of the Tabernacle and its structures and service. The teaching is very clear and simple and is a most thorough and complete exposition of what the Bible teaches concerning the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The reading of it will make Christ better known and prove a spiritual feast for the soul.

If, instead of much of the dilettante faddism that prompts study groups to take up the study of the birds, etc., they would take up the studies here given the gain both to their own spiritual life and to the world would be incalculable.

These, all deny the necessity of a blood atonement for sin: Eddyism, Spiritism, Theosophy, New Thought, Unitarianism.

Believers in these cults are snared by Satan, and must perish without hope.

Without the shedding of blood, there is no remission.—Heb. 9:22.

The Blood Beliefs.

The Bible is the blood Book.

From Genesis to Revelation, the whole Bible is bound by a crimson cord, and is red with the sacrificial blood.

When I see the blood, I will pass over you.—Ex. 12:13.

The Church of God, which He purchased with His own blood.—Acts 20:28.

Being now justified by His blood.—Rom. 5:9.

We have redemption through His blood.—Eph. 1:7.

We are made nigh by the blood of Christ.—Eph. 2:13.

Having made peace through the blood of His cross.—Col. 1:20.

The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John 1:7.

Unto Him that loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood.—Rev. 1:5.

How much more shall the blood of Christ purge your conscience.—Heb. 9:14.

The Precious Blood of Christ.—1 Peter 1:18-19.

Three great facts declared by Paul the Apostle form the Gospel of Christ and effectually save every one who believes—1, Christ died (for our sins); 2, Christ was buried; 3, Christ rose again (for our justification). Read 1 Cor. 15:1-4. Rom. 4:25. Rom. 1:16. Eph. 2:4-10.

Letters to the Editor

ON THE UNITY OF THE CHURCHES.

Mr. Editor:

Bishop Brent and Mr. Opie both write well and forcibly in the Southern Churchman (of September 3d) on unity, that unity of the churches, which we long and pray for, and which would surely bring on that "end" of St. Matthew 24:14—"and this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come".

But will the churches get together in the way they go now, and have been going ever since the Holy Ghost was poured out on us at that great Pentecost? Will we Protestants (for unity) confess to a priest, or the Catholic give up his confessional, or the Baptists immersion, or any other such, for unity? It is unthinkable from human view, and how does God regard it? Is that His plan for a millennium?

I think the Lausanne Conference is not working at the "great world crisis" in the right way—in man's plan, not God's, as outlined plainly, as quoted above, from St. Matthew 24. Missions is the great world issue now for all "God's people". Nota bene that our prayer in Prayer Book, on page 38, is not for unity of the churches, but for the unity of God's people, which is far from unity of the churches, as there are many in the churches not "born from above", and some outside are surely so born.

Am I presumptuous in criticising this large body of many good men—contra mundum, and by no means an Athanasius? But an humble Ananias, God guided, may help set right even a St. Paul.

A CORRECTION.

Mr. Editor:

In the issue of the paper for August 27th, page 3, second column, the poem, "The Streets of Nazareth" is credited to other than the original author, possibly by a printer's mistake, giving the name of the one who sent the poem to be reprinted. (I have known such mistakes to happen, having been an editor.)

The poem appeared originally, if I mistake not, in the English Treasury for August, 1904, Volume III, page 452 (of which I have a complete set).

MORE HELP NEEDED.

Every one has been appalled by the unprecedented floods in the Mississippi Valley, taking unknown toll of life and property and reducing to zero the possessions of thousands and thousands of people. American citizens have responded nobly to the need through the Red Cross.

A similar call comes to us as Churchmen. There are church buildings to be replaced or repaired; there are clergy—whose ministrations were never more needed than now—whose salaries have disappeared in whole or in part, because of destitution of their parishioners; there are Church folk—white and black—who will lack for warm clothes or a blanket when winter comes. The Red Cross cannot and is not supposed to meet needs like these. Then there are some Church people who will accept assistance through the Church who would never seek or accept it from the Red Cross or other agencies. It is the privilege of us Church people to share with them.

In much of the flooded area there is no chance for a crop this year. The second rise (about which you saw little or nothing in the newspapers) again inundated what little land had re-appeared. This means no income from the soil for these people in 1927. Some will not be able to buy a bed to replace the one which was washed away.

Bishop Bratton said that in his diocese alone there is an area one hundred and forty miles long and forty miles wide under water. One could take a boat at the top of that strip and sail across Mississippi and Louisiana and on to Europe without touching land.

The Bishops of Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas report that at least $30,000 will be needed to meet the situation. I have assured them that the Church will surely want to help them to the full. May I count on your cooperation in fulfilling that assurance?

Sincerely yours,

JOHN G. MURRAY,

Presiding Bishop.

P. S.—If in addition to your gift of money you have any clothes (winter as well as lighter weight clothing) to share with these people, they should be sent to Mr. Warren Kearny, 520 South Peters Street, New Orleans, Louisiana. He is acting as Chairman for the three Dioceses and a plan has been worked out for the proper distribution of supplies.

DEVOTION.

The Bible is a Book "of true knowledge and understanding" which will keep you from sin, or sin keep you from the Bible. It is filled with prayers and victories, the pathway of the saints are washed in their tears and perfumed with their prayers. No great victories were gained except by prayer. Daniel prayed looking toward Jerusalem three times daily and the chains of bondage fell from a captive nation and the people returned to the land of their fathers with a song of freedom on their lips.

Martin Luther prayed all night and when the break of day came he called his wife and said to her, "It has come". History records that on that very day King Charles granted religious toleration, a thing for which Luther had prayed.

The strenuous period of American history was between 1784 and 1789. There was no common coinage or defense. When the colonies sent men to a Constitutional Convention, Benjamin Franklin, rising with the weight of his four-score years, asked that the convention open with prayer, and George Washington there sealed the agreement with God. In the winter at Valley Forge, Washington led his men in prayer and he got down on his knees to do it. I have ever encouraged in every way people to pray; and I have put in form the following prayer, believing it will be useful and helpful to many people:

Blessed Saviour, Who didst hang upon the Cross stretching forth Thy loving arms in prayer and sacrifice for us: Grant that all mankind may look unto Thee and be saved.

Send Thy blessing upon all the Nations of the earth and endue them with Thy spirit.

Prosper the work of Thy kingdom in all lands and direct all in authority to walk in Thy way.

Comfort the sick and the dying; and support with Thy love and favor those who minister to them.

Succor the bereaved and all who are in want.

Bless the farms, the schools and industries of the world.

Restrain class hatred, oppression, and lawlessness everywhere.

Make us to bear one another's burdens, and to promote righteousness and true religion among all men.

Finally, we beseech Thee, forgive our sins; and forgive the sins of our enemies, and grant to the whole world salvation and peace, through Thy mercies and merits, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost ever one God, world without end. Amen.—John Linker Saunders.

Hateful to me as are the gates of hel,
Is he who hiding one thing in his heart,
Utters another.

—Homer's Iliad.

SEWANEE SUMMER TRAINING SCHOOL

1927 Session Most Successful in History of School.

The 1927 session of the Sewanee Summer Training School closed with a bit of ceremonial, which gave symbolic expression to the aim of the school. On the stage of the hall in which the closing meeting was held stood a white cross, a replica of the memorial cross on the brow of the mountain at Sewanee. Before the cross was set a lighted candle. Bishop Green, of Mississippi, Director of the Adult Division, wearing his Episcopal vestments, lit his candle from the light before the cross, and in turn the deans of the school's departments kindled their light from his. The members of the school, coming forward, lit their candles from those of the deans, and passed silently out of the hall. Before the kindling of the lights the Bishop had given his charge to the members of the school.

The closing ceremonial rang true to the spirit which manifested itself throughout the whole of the Sewanee Summer Training School this year. In earnestness of purpose, in faithfulness of work, in responsiveness to the call to service, in numbers, in the ability of the teaching staff, this school reached this year its high-water mark. This has come as the result of eighteen years of development, of careful planning, and of hard work on the part of the leaders of the school.

The school continued in session for four weeks, from July 26 to August 24. The Young People's Division opened July 26 and closed August 9. The Adult Division and the School of the Prophets, meeting simultaneously, opened on August 10 and closed on August 24. The total number of students, faculty and staff registered in the Young People's Division was one hundred and ninety-four; in the Adult Division and School of the Prophets was two hundred and eighty-three; a total of four hundred and seventy-seven. In addition there were seventy-five visitors, making a grand total of about five hundred and fifty-two.

There were offered fifty-five courses, of which forty-five led to credits in the official Teacher Training Series of the National Accredited Teachers' Association. The instructors numbered thirty-three, and included officers of the Departments of the National Council and of National Church organizations, the entire field staff of the Department of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee, together with Diocesan and parochial workers. In addition to this, a group of outstanding Bishops, presbyters, laymen and laywomen served as administrative officers, lecturers, conference leaders, speakers, preachers and leaders of devotion.

Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., who has been the head of the school during the eighteen years of its existence, continued as President. Bishop Juhan, of Florida, was director of the Young People's Division; Bishop Green, of Mississippi, was Dean of the Adult Division, and Bishop Penick, of North Carolina, was Director of the School of the Prophets. In the Adult Division the following were Deans of the several departments:

Religious Education, Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D.; Social Service, Rev. Homer W. Starr, Ph. D.; Missions, Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, D. D. Mrs. John R. Wheeler served as chairman of the Conference of Women's Organizations.

The faculty included, in addition to the workers of the Province of Sewanee, the following:

Rev. Charles H. Boynton, D. D., and Rev. B. S. Easton, D. D., of the General Theological Seminary, New York; Rev. Harold Holt and Miss Laura Boyer, of the National Headquarters Office; Miss Christine Boylston, National Organizing Secretary of the Church Mission of Help, New York; Mr. Leon C. Palmer, National Executive Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Philadelphia; Miss Jeannette Zeigler, Principal of St. Mary's College, Dallas, Texas; Rev. H. H. Lumpkin, Madison, Wis.; Miss Sallie Deane, Richmond, Va.; Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines, Bethlehem, Pa.

Miss Josephine Bumstead, Executive Secretary of the Wellesley Conference, was the guest of honor of the Sewanee Summer Training School.

As always, a large majority of the students in the school were educational workers, principally teachers in the Church schools. The report made by the Provincial Department of Religious Education, at one of the evening meetings, showed that interest in Teacher Training is very keen in the Province of Sewanee. Reports from the National Department of Religious Education, as of July 1, 1927, showed that the Province of Sewanee at that time led all the Provinces of the Church in the number of teachers holding N. A. T. A. diplomas, and in the number of persons holding credits in the Teacher Training Series. The Diocese of Tennessee leads the Province, and the Church as well, in this activity, and the city of Memphis leads in the Diocese of Tennessee. Reports showed that there have been held in the Province this summer ten Diocesan Camp Conferences for Young People, one Diocesan Teacher Training Conference (Mississippi), one inter-Diocesan Teacher Training School (Valle Crucis, N. C., maintained by the Carolina Dioceses), and the Sewanee Summer Training School. It is estimated that these summer conferences enrolled between 1,500 and 2,000, of whom a large majority were students in one or more classes leading to Teacher Training credits. It is expected that the result of this summer's work will show a great increase in the number of credits held in the Province of Sewanee.

An important change was made in the management of the Young People's Division this year, in that the students were housed and attended classes in the buildings of the University itself. In recent years the Young People's Division had been held in the buildings of the Sewanee Military Academy, in addition to the faculty and staff of the Young People's Division. Bishop Juhan called to his aid a large number of picked leaders among young people. These were placed in charge of groups comprising from eight to ten of the students and were held responsible for the discipline and work of their special groups.

A considerable number of the students in the Young People's Division enrolled also in the Adult Division, and made a distinct contribution of youthful spirit to the life of the older Conference.

One of the important gatherings of the Summer School is always the annual rally of the "Grand Confederated Fellowship of the Contributory Tribes of the Southland", of which the constituent units are composed of the people from the several Southern States, and each bears an equally grandiloquent title. That of South Carolina, for instance, is "The Grand Uncontaminated, Unconciliated and Unreconstructed Society of Secessionists of South Carolina".

This year the gifts offered by the Tribes were largely gifts of life. Louisiana offered a girl about to enter the Mountain Mission field, and a boy about to enter the Theological Seminary. Tennessee offered two of its girls who have given themselves to educational service. South Carolina offered a son and a daughter of that State, both of them missionaries on furlough from China. Three members of the faculty of the School of the Prophets—a Bishop, a Doctor of Divinity and a Doctor of Philosophy, enacted a pageant prophesying the reconciliation and the cooperation of Science and Religion.

Meetings.

Advantage was taken of the coming together at Sewanee of so many leaders in Church activities to hold a number of meetings in connection with the Sewanee Summer Training School.

The Southern Conference on Religious Education was held on August 9 and 10. The membership of the Conference included the directors and chairmen of Religious Education in a majority of the Dioceses of the Province.

The Provincial Department of Religious Education held a series of meetings on August 9, 15 and 22, at which plans for the work of the next year were carried out.

The Provincial Department of Social Service met on August 9. It was attended by the chairmen of the Social Service Departments in many of the Dioceses of the Province.

A conference of the Diocesan officers of the Church School Service Program was held on August 21.

The Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., President of the Province, paid an official visit to the Summer Training School and gave an address at one of the afternoon meetings, in which he traced the history of the development of the Province and suggested lines for future development.

In connection with the Young People's Division was held the annual Convention of the Young People's Service League of the Province of Sewanee. During the year an attractive badge had been adopted for the Provincial League, and were distributed just in time to be worn at this Convention.

The new Y. P. S. L. Handbook of the Province had been published during the year, and was put in the hands of the members for the first time at this meeting. The handbook is a most valuable addition to the literature of the Young People's Movement. The Convention officially recommended that every parish League provide a copy for every member and councillor. The leaders in the production of this handbook were Mrs. F. N. Challen, of North Carolina; Miss Emma Twiggs, of Alabama, and the Rev. W .A. Jonnard, of Georgia, who have done a really notable piece of work.

The Provincial Convention approved, as the corporate gift of the Provincial Y. P. S. L. this year, the "Young People's Offering for the Sewanee Expansion Fund", and undertook to raise the sum of $1,500 for this object. They intend to make this as their contribution toward the $2,000,000 which the University of the South at Sewanee is asking this year as an Expansion Fund. Rejoicing in their achievement of last year, when they undertook to raise $1,000 for the Provincial Department of Religious Education, and actually raised over $1,600, the young people without hesitation set their mark 50 per cent higher this year.—Publicity Department, New York.

Church Intelligence

Bishops' Conference on Rural Work.

A Conference of Bishops interested in the development of the Church's rural work will be held at Columbus, Ohio, September 20-23 inclusive. The Conference, unique in the annals of the Episcopal Church, is being organized under the leadership of the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., and the Secretary of the Division for Rural Work of the National Council.

As at present arranged, the program of the Conference includes the following subjects and leaders:

Tuesday, September 20—4 P. M., The Importance of Rural America, Dr. Vivian. 8 P. M., The Episcopal Church and Rural America, Rev. Dr. M. A. Dawber.

Wednesday, September 21—7:30 A. M., Holy Communion. 9-10:30, Conference by Dr. Dawber. 11, Educating and Arousing the Church to the Value of Rural Work, Bishop Rogers. 4, Enlisting and Training Men for the Rural Ministry, Bishop McDowell. 8, Increasing the Efficiency of the Clergy Now in Village and Country, Bishop Green.

Thursday, September 22—7:30, Holy Communion. 9-10:30, The Use of Laity in Country Work, Bishop Darst. 11, Methods of Carrying on Rural Work in Diocese, County and Parish, Bishop Ferris. 4, The Church and Country Life Movements, Mr. C. J. Galpin. 8, Conference by Mr. Galpin.

Friday, September 23—7:30, Holy Communion; 9-10:30, Social Service in Village and Country, Bishop Gray. 11, Religious Education in Village and Country, Bishop Strider.

The subjects for discussion cover some of the most important phases and problems of rural church work. The Bishops chosen to lead discussions represent practically every section of the United States east of the Mississippi and are particularly interested in the subjects assigned them. Dr. Vivian is head of the College of Agriculture of Ohio State University, a Churchman, a pleasing speaker, and vitally concerned with American rural life. The Rev. M. A. Dawber, D. D., is head of the Department for Rural Work of the Methodist Church and a regular and welcome lecturer at the summer schools for rural clergy. Mr. C. J. Galpin is a member of the United States Department of Agriculture, a Churchman and lecturer at the school for rural clergy. Mr. Galpin will discuss the Church and rural America from a national standpoint.

The Conference will be housed and the discussions held in the Athletic Club of Columbus, one of the finest clubs for men in the Middle West.

The Commission to China.

The Commission to visit China, in accordance with the request of the Bishops, expects to sail from Vancouver by the Empress of Asia on October 13.

Owing to the death of Bishop Brown and the additional responsibility suddenly thrust upon Bishop Tucker, it has been necessary for the latter to ask to be released from his agreement to serve on the Commission. Bishop Sanford, of San Joaquin, has kindly agreed to take his place.

The itinerary of the Commission so far as determined at present will be approximately as follows:

China—October 28 to December 10. Address, care Mr. M. P. Walker, 20 Minghong Road, Shanghai, China; cable address, Amchumiss, Shanghai.

Tokyo—December 15 to January 1. Address, St. Luke's Hospital, Tsukiji, Tokyo, Japan; cable address, St. Luke's, Tokyo.

Kyoto—January 2 to 12. Address, Karasumaru - Dori, Shimotachi - Uri, Kyoto, Japan; cable address, Amchumiss, Kyoto.

Philippine Islands—January 15 to February 15. Address, care Bishop Mosher, 567 Calle Isaac Peral, Manila, P. I.; cable address, Bishopstod, Manila.

Decision has not yet been made as to whether the Commission will travel westward across India to Jerusalem for the meeting of the International Missionary Council in March, or return eastward across the Pacific.

John W. Wood.

Service for Departing Missionaries.

There was a celebration of the Holy Communion in the Chapel of the Church Missions House on September 8, the Rev. A. B. Parson officiating, for the Rev. and Mrs. W. L. Ribble, newly appointed for Brazil, and Miss Emily Seaman, Miss Henrietta Barlow and Miss Mary Wood McKenzie, all returning to Liberia.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Conference of Mountain Workers.

The Annual Conference of the Workers in the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge was held at St. Anne's School, Charlottesville, September 7 to 9. The Conference this year was larger than ever and was useful and interesting. Bishop Tucker, who was present the whole time, stated that while he supposed he had attended more Conferences than any one else, he considered this the best he had ever attended.

Archdeacon Mason guided the Conference ably through its various sessions and contributed valuable and interesting advice in connection with the various discussions. Archdeacon Neve, who has handed over the administrative part of the work to his associate, gave spiritual council and advice to the workers, referring to his past eperience in the work.

Valuable addresses on Health and Welfare Work were given by Dr. Waddell, of the University of Virginia, and Dr. Brydon, of the State Health Department. The former told of the great work that was being done in the mountain and country districts of Albemarle and Greene Counties, under Dr. Royster, of the University Hospital. He said that they hoped to make Greene County the healthiest in the State, and that the special work they were doing was, he believed, unique in the United States. In the afternoon Deaconess James, of Holy Cross Mission, gave a demonstration of Home Nursing and First Aid by the children of her mission.

On the second day the important matter of education was discussed, and was introduced by the County Superintendent, Mr. A. L. Bennett, who spoke of the ways in which the missions could cooperate with the public schools. In referring to the Blue Ridge Industrial School he stated that if all the graduates were like the ones he had come across, that one institution was worth all the money which the Diocese had expended upon the Mountain Work.

The last session on Wednesday afternoon was given up to religious work in the mountains, and the workers contributed many interesting incidents in connection with this subject.

Bishop Tucker made a clear and interesting statement with regard to his relationship to the Mountain Work. He said that he would leave the management of the work entirely in the hands of the two Archdeacons and the Advisory Board, and that the Archdeaconry could count on his help in interesting the Diocese as a whole in the missionary work that it is doing.

Miss Dorsey, the principal of St. Anne's School, acted as hostess to the Conference, and her kindness and attention, as well as that of her assistants, did a great deal to make the Conference a success.

The Conference and Program were planned by Mr. H. L. Lyman, who also provided amusement and recreation on Monday and Tuesday nights by securing the services of Miss Evie Bowcock as an entertainer on the first night and the Charlottesville Municipal Band on the second, both of which were much enjoyed.

The Piedmont Convocation will meet at Haymarket, October 18, 19 and 20.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop.

The Field Department Organization.

With a view to efficient prosecution of the work of the Field Department and the preparation for and conduct of the Every-Member Canvass this fall, the Diocese has been divided into four districts, each of which will be under the charge of a chairman and one or more vice-chairmen, the chairman in each case being a member of the Field Department and of the Eecutive Board, and the vice-chairmen being associate members of the Field Department, selected from outside the Executive Board. Mr. R. L. Peirce is chairman of the Field Department. The four districts are as follows:

District No. 1—Rev. Thomas M Browne, Lynchburg, chairman; Mr. John A. Faulkner, Lynchburg, vice-chairman; the city of Lynchburg, and Campbell, Bedford, Amherst and Nelson Counties.

District No. 2—Rev. John J. Gravatt, Staunton, chairman; Colonel George L. Barton, Lexington, vice-chairman; the city of Staunton, and Augusta, Bath, Rockbridge, Alleghany and Botetourt Counties.

District No. 3—Mr. C. Edwin Michael, Roanoke, chairman; Mr. John M. Horton, Roanoke, vice-chairman; the city of Roanoke, and Roanoke, Franklin, Henry, Montgomery, Giles and Pulaski Counties.

District No. 4—Mr. R. L. Peirce, Wytheville, chairman; Rev. F. Ernest Warren, Bristol, vice-chairman; Mr. W. D. Tyler, Dante, vice-chairman; Wythe, Smith, Carroll, Tazewell, Russell, Buchanan Dickenson, Wise, Lee, Scott and Washington Counties.

Closely cooperating with the Field Department will be the Publicity Department composed as follows:

Rev. Thomas M. Browne, Lynchburg, chairman; Mr. W. C. Rierson, Altavista; Rev. Carleton Barnwell, Lynchburg!

Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, Staunton; Mr. Thomas A. Scott, Roanoke.

Plans for Entertainment of the Synod.

This Diocese is looking forward with pleasure to having as its guests the members of the Tenth Synod of the Province of Washington, which will be in session in St. John's Church, Roanoke, October 18, 19 and 20 next, opening with a devotional session at 4 P. M. on the 18th. A very complete organization has been effected for the entertainment of the Synod and is made up as follows (all of Roanoke, Va.):

Officers.

Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., general chairman (ex-officio); Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, chairman; Mr. C. Edwin Michael, vice-chairman; Mr. Thomas A. Scott, general secretary.

Executive Committee.

Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, Rev. G. Otis Mead, Rev. A. C. Bussingham, Mr. John B. Newton, Mr. C. Edwin Michael, Mr. L. H. Pedigo, Mr. A. D. W. Walton, Mr. D. W. Reed, Mrs. C. L. Palmer, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, Mrs. B. O. Grove, Mrs. W. D. Williamson.

(The following chairmen.)

Finance Committee, Mr. T. W. Goodwin; Hospitality Committee, Mr. William Mounfield; Program, Publicity and Printing, Mr. H. P. Chapman; Registration, Mr. J. M. Horton; Motor Corps, Mr. Joseph S. Walton; Reception, Mr. D. P. Sites; Luncheon, Mrs. R. S. Koehler.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

The Church Home.

The expansion of the Episcopal Church Home on Wisconsin Avenue, as seen in the acquisition recently of two more buildings, may be seen at close range by all friends and interested persons on Saturday afternoon, September 17, when a dedication service, reception and open house will be features of the afternoon. The dedication will take place at three o'clock and it is expected that the Bishop of Washington will conduct the service. This will be followed by a reception by the Board of Lady Managers with Mrs. William Channing Johnson as the head. A section of the Marine Band will play at intervals during the afternoon. The two new buildings now give the home a corner lot of one hundred and fifty feet square and provide accommodations for sixteen additional residents.

The growth and progress of this home has been unprecedented, having just been incorporated in 1924. The first impetus to continued success was felt in the gift of Mrs. Cornelia B. Jones of her own home at 3315 Wisconsin Avenue. Adjoining property on Macomb Street was added in 1926 and this, with the new buildings, will make a splendidly located and comfortable home for elderly people who are alone or without relatives or friends with whom they may spend their last days.

The Men's Club of St. Stephen's Church has already organized for the coming season and held its first meeting on September 8.

Plans for the coming season were discussed and entertainment and supper followed. St. Stephen's Men's Club is perhaps the most active club of its kind in the city, and has a very large membership and attendance at its meetings.

Washington Cathedral Choir returned to duty on the first Sunday in September, after a month's vacation, and with Mr. Edgar Priest as organist and choirmaster, is being heard at all the cathedral services.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., is expected to return to his Diocese on September 16.

Bishop and Mrs. Freeman, returning from a short trip abroad in the early summer, went to Sorrento, Me., where the Bishop for many years has had charge of the services at the Chapel of the Redeemer during the summer.

Huntington House.

In September Grace Church will open a residence for young business women and students at 94 Fourth Avenue, adjoining the church on the east. The opening of Huntington House, in memory of Dr. William Reed Huntington, marks a radical departure in the institutional work of Grace Church. For half a century the church has maintained Grace Memorial House with its ministry to children. The extent of its influence is measured by the hundreds of children who have been tended there, and whose lives have been enriched by daily contact with those who cared for them. Last spring the doors gradually closed on the nursery, to be opened now to a greater community service for young women.

Thirty-seven girls will be received at a moderate charge for single or double rooms. Breakfast and dinner will be served and three meals on Sunday. Business women not earning more than thirty dollars a week and students whose financial resources are limited may apply.

Huntington House has many attractive and home-like features. The building is a beautiful gothic one and is worthy of its place by the side of one of the most noble gothic churches in America. There is a roof garden which has always been a delight, light and airy bedrooms attractively furnished, pleasant and cheerful living and dining-rooms. All guarantee a pleasant home. But the house-mother, Miss Theodora Beard, is even a better guarantee, for she is a woman universally loved.

All the clubs and houses for girls in New York are sadly overcrowded and girls are turned away every day who have to find shelter in undesirable furnished rooms or boarding houses. There are 136,813 girls between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five years of age living in Manhattan and gainfully employed, and yet it is estimated that 20 per cent are without a permanent home.

Huntington House is primarily a home for Church girls. It is hoped that young women from many Dioceses may find this their first home in New York Preference will be given to members of the Episcopal Church, but other Protestant girls will be received. The services and social activities of the parish will be easily accessible to the Huntington House family. Should there not be room for all applicants the house-mother is in touch with other houses for girls and will gladly help newcomers to the city in any way possible. The nearness of this residence to the two subways makes it a very convenient locality for business girls or students. Application may be made to Miss Theodora Beard, Huntington House, 94 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D.,

Bishop Helfenstein has returned to the Diocese after a very pleasant summer in St. Andrews, New Brunswick and Heron Island, Me.

Bishop Murray is still in Chester, Nova Scotia, but will return about the middle of the month.

St. George's Church, Mt. Savage, is being renovated and improved. The interior walls are being painted, new coverings on the floor, new oak pews and choir stalls. The total cost for the work will be over $5,000 and is a gift from Mr. Charles Barth, as a memorial to his father and mother. The work will be completed about the middle of October.

Work Among Colored People.

The twenty-sixth annual Convocation of the Archdeaconry for Work Among Colored People in the Diocese was held in St. Luke's Church, Tarboro, September 3 to 5. Inspirational services were the feature of the meeting, and a number of addresses of a high order were made. The Rt. Rev. H. B. Delaney, Bishop-Suffragan, presided over the sessions. Dean Charles H. Boyer, of St. Augustine's, served as secretary. The threatened extinction of the colored parochial schools, due to withdrawal of funds for their support, and the great losses sustained by the churches, caused by emigration to Northern cities, were two of the problems that were discussed.

Two handsome parish houses have been completed in North Carolina this summer, and are now in use. The Edgar Haywood Memorial, a very handsome building given to St. Saviour's Church, Raleigh, by Mr. Ernest Haywood, of that city, was dedicated on Sunday, August 14. A parish house, the first unit in an elaborate plant being erected by St. Mary's, High Point, was dedicated on August 28.

Christ Church, Cleveland, celebrated its one hundredth anniversary this summer with an elaborate service that attracted a large number of visitors. This active rural parish is under the care of the Ven. William H. Hardin, Archdeacon of Charlotte.

Church Activities.

Very few churches within the Diocese were closed during the summer vacation. Calvary, Louisville, in the absence of the rector, maintained uninterruptedly the early celebration of the Holy Communion each Sunday. St. Paul's, awaiting its newly elected rector, will resume services October 1, when the Rev. Henry L. Durrant, late Collect for the Fourteenth Sunday After Trinity.

Almighty and everlasting God, give unto us the increase of faith, hope and charity; and, that we may obtain that which Thou dost promise, make us to love that which Thou dost command thro;ugh Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

St. Matthew, the Apostle.

O Almighty God, Who by Thy blessed Son didst call Matthew from the receipt of custom to be an Apostle and Evangelist; Grant us grace to forsake all covetous desires and inordinate love of riches, and to follow the same Thy Son Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Believe, O Friend.

Impossible, you say, that man survives
The grave—that there are other lives?
More strange, O friend, that we should ever rise
Out of the dark to walk below these skies.
Once having risen into life and light,
We need not wonder at our deathless flight.

Life is the unbelievable; but now
That this Incredible has taught us how,
We can believe the all-imagining Power
That breathed the Cosmos forth as a golden flower,
Had potence in his breath
To plan us new surprises beyond death—
New spaces and new goals
For the adventure of ascending souls.

Be brave, O heart, be brave:
It is not strange that man survives the grave:
'Twould be a stranger thing were he destroyed
Than that he ever vaulted from the void.

St. Paul's Prescription for Human Ills.

Wealthy sufferers are willing to travel far and wide in pursuit of health. They eagerly seek out any distinguished physician, and are glad to pay large fees for a really reliable prescription. But St. Paul, in the name of the Lord, offers to rich and poor, without distinction, a prescription for the ills of the whole man, spirit, soul and body. This prescription is of priceless value. All the money in the world cannot buy it. It is offered freely, without money and without price. It has stood the test of centuries of human experience, and has never been known to fail. St. Paul himself subjected it to the severest possible tests in his own experience before passing it on to us. It is a strong recommendation when a doctor "takes his own medicine".

The great apostle wrote his prescription in Greek. Let us read it as translated in the Revised Version. He is writing from a Roman prison, not very long before his martyrdom. He is addressing the members of the church at Philippi, who knew him well and dearly loved him. He writes towards the close of his letter:

"Rejoice in the Lord always; again I will say, 'Rejoice'. Let your gentleness be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand." Then comes the great prescription: "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the Peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus."

We are at once inclined to protest strongly. "In nothing be anxious!" Fine advice; but impossible to put in practice. But is it impossible? Let us see how it worked out in St. Paul's own experience. The Philippians were familiar with the great apostle's devoted and heroic life. They knew well that he was no arm-chair theorist. They could never forget the founding of the mission at Philippi by Paul and Silas. Some of them may very probably have been eye-witnesses, when the two brave missionaries were cruelly beaten with Roman rods and then thrown into prison, with their feet made fast in the stocks. Their hearts had been thrilled when the story spread, that at midnight Paul and Silas, in spite of their torturing wounds, had been praying and singing hymns unto God. They needed no stronger evidence that these two men, in utter physical misery, were yet free from anxiety, and rejoicing in the Lord. The mysterious Peace of God, like a heavenly Sentinel, had entered the prison and was standing on guard over the hearts and thoughts of the innocent sufferers.

And their wonderful experience is meant to be ours, if we are honestly willing to comply with the conditions. Amid all the changes and chances of this mortal life, there are no possible circumstances that can rob the wholehearted Christian of the Peace of God. The one thing that can rob us of it is want of faith in the Living God. His promise is sure. It cannot fail. But we must loyally accept the conditions. And why not? Of what possible use is a limited God? We may say with all reverence that God, of necessity, is good for everything or good for nothing. If He is worth trusting at all, He is worth trusting altogether. If He is worth trusting at any time, He is worth trusting now and for all eternity.

Let us face again the prescription, and not limit God by our unbelief. It means just what it says. It is uncompromising. We must cast our whole burden of sin and care on our reconciled Father in Christ Jesus, rejoicing that He is able, and willing, and waiting, to bear it all: to put away the sin, to relieve the anxiety, and to breathe into our innermost being His peace which passeth all understanding. He invites us to share our whole life with Him, in utter confidence in His perfect sympathy with its minutest detail. Through Isaiah He says to Israel and to us: "Even to your old age I am He, and to hoar hairs will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; yea, I will carry, and will deliver you." The words, "I have made, and I will bear", should have a specially sacred place in every Christian memory. They embrace everything.

The words of St. Paul in this great promise are an inspired echo of the calm, strong words of our Lord Himself on the eve of Gethsemane and Calvary: "Peace I leave with you; My peace I give unto you: Not as the world giveth, give I unto you: let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. . . . These things have I spoken unto you, that in Me ye may have peace. In the world ye have tribulation: but be of good cheer: I have overcome the world." Christ Himself is our peace. He has made peace through the Blood of His cross, and we have simply, by faith, to enter into that peace. It begins with peace of conscience through the full and free forgiveness of our sins, and it culminates in the peace that guards the fully surrendered life.

Neither Christ nor St. Paul would betray us into a fool's paradise. The stern realities of life remain as before. "In the world ye have tribulation," says our Lord. He faithfully warns us that tribulation is the normal condition of the Christian; but in the midst of tribulation we find in Him the peace which passeth all understanding. The world can neither give that peace nor take it away. The world has no real peace. "The wicked are like the troubled sea, which cannot rest. There is no peace, saith my God to the wicked." There is no parallel in human history to the Royal Invitation—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light." We should note carefully that there is a rest that is given, and a rest that is found. "I will give you rest . . . ye shall find rest unto your souls." One is the rest of forgiveness and the other is the rest found in obedience.

The writer of this article was preaching not very long ago in a church where there was a radio. Among the unseen listeners was a suffering woman, who expressed a wish to see the preacher. He called upon her, and found her lying helpless. She was able to move her head only, and moreover she was blind. Yet her mind was alert, and although deprived of all that most people would consider worth living for, she was wholly uncomplaining and full of dauntless faith and courage. Her heart was at rest, guarded by the Peace of God, which truly passeth all understanding. Her victorious patience was a living sermon to the preacher that he can never forget.—Rev. G. O. Troop in Canadian Churchman.

Neighbors.

A poor fisherman who had taken me across a bay to see a dying man apologized when at last I got to his house cold and wet, because the hot tea that he offered me had neither sugar nor milk. There were several children in the room, partly grown up and miserably clad. In the attic I found an old fisherman dying of cancer of the throat and his old wife, blind with cataract, crooning from her broken heart over the partner of her life. After doing what I could, I came down the ladder that served for the stairs and asked my friend whether this was his father. "Only a neighbor," he replied. "How long has he been in your house," I asked. He replied that the man had been there about a year. I said: "Do they pay anything for their food?" "They have nothing to pay." I then asked him: "Why do you do it, seeing that you and your children are so much in need?" The man looked into my face and said the same thing:

"What would you do, doctor?" Those are the preachers who appeal to the youth of all ages, but especially of today; viz, the men who do things.—Wilfred T. Grenfell.

Conscience.

Ruth Lindsay.

The sun stole o'er the river bank.
  Still eventide drew near.
The lingering notes, the whispering leaves
  Lent music to my ear.
I filled my cup with joy
  And spilled it o'er.
Drinking of Nature's gifts
  Upon that lovely shore.
And so the chill of night crept on.
  I feared the growing dark.
But lo! a flame, to light my way,
  My own Celestial Spark.
I arose—the evening sun was low.
The twilight shadows whispered, "Go".
And so I followed with the day,
The Celestial Spark to light my way.
And there, a traveler worn like me.
  I stooped and helped him bear his load.
And why did I the stranger see?
  Because that spark of light still glowed!

A Costly Adventure.

Faith is costly adventure, for once when it is launched it demands that men shall go to the uttermost limit of effort to make faith a reality in experience. Paul's faith cost him a tremendous sacrifice and tremendous suffering. He tells the story of his experience in the adventure of faith at length in his epistles. Prayer is an adventure of faith extremely costly. The milk and water sentimentality of many prayers costs us nothing; but the man who prays as the great saints have prayed, as the Lord Himself prayed in the Garden of Gethsemane, has found that it is a costly thing to adventure into the realm of prayer where the bloody sweat has bedewed the ground. Adventure in Christ's service is also a costly business. It cost the Son of God His life upon the cross. It has sent men into the wilderness to live with savage men in order that they may tell them the story of the cross and the Christ. It drove John Wesley up and down England trailed by mobs who beat and stoned him. It has sent tender maidens into the slums of great cities to be insulted and abused by beasts in the form of men. Adventure to these, all these, is costly business.

But the spirit of adventure is the source from which all great deeds have come. We emphasize very much the sober second thought, but the adventures of faith are largely the passionate first thought. The sober second thought gives a man a chance to think it over and listen to caution and discouragement. The passionate first thought drives him on, trusting in God, and accomplishes the deed while the cautious man is still counting the cost. Too much plan often ruins an enterprise. These are days of programs in the Church. We have programs for everything, and we leave nothing for the man or woman who dares to trust God, and who goes on expecting that in some way that cannot be anticipated God Almighty is going to show His power in giving success to those who are under His guidance. Just now the world is acclaiming a hero who won its applause by a daring deed of passionate adventure while other men were making preparations to go from New York to Paris. While other men were filling the papers with their preparations he got into a machine and went over. No doubt he did make preparations and did think out his adventure, but the launching without noise or tumult or boasting won the heart of the world. And that same spirit was in early Christianity, and it conquered nations before they awoke to the might of him who goes forth in the name of the Lord to do His will.—The Methodist Protestant.

Rekindling Altar Fires.

Dean Inge, in his very suggestive book on "Personal Religion and the Life of Devotion", makes it perfectly clear that the development of spiritual life is not a super-imposed gift from God, but something that calls for the most strenuous, cooperative effort. The vision of God must be sought with enthusiasm. It is only when we seek Him with our whole self that the quest succeeds. In these days of self-complacency it is well to remind ourselves that the flame of our soul may be extinguished. It is a sad sight to observe a man who was once a "burning and shining light" lying there a smouldering ember. Life was once enthusiastic and sacrificial, service was rendered with bounding joy, "but the cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches damped down the first, and they became commonplace and ineffective".

The tragedy is all the more pathetic as we observe the unawareness of the man. The change had come so gradually that he wist not God had departed. The influences which work in this direction are so insidious in the Church and the world that we should guard the holy fire with intense vigor and by private prayer and corporate worship renew our experience of the Unseen every day.

"O Thou, who camest from above
  The pure celestial fire to impart,
Kindle a flame of sacred love
  On the mean altar of my heart!

"There let it for Thy glory burn,
  An inextinguishable blaze,
And trembling to its source return,
  In humble love and fervent praise.

"Jesus, confirm my heart's desire,
  To work, and speak, and think, for Thee;
Still let me guard the holy fire,
  And still stir up Thy gift in me."

The cause of this lack of interest in religious exercises lies somewhere. It does not lie in the fact that we have substituted social service for individual devotion. These two are joined together. Out of the heart of fire will flow the life of zeal for others. Every bit of social service has its origin in the religious experience of ourselves or our fathers. When this service becomes attenuated, the indication is we are a long way from the source. In Charles Wesley's hymn, the desire to glorify God and save the soul is followed by service to the present age. We must search elsewhere for the decline of devotion. There is a record of the threatened removal of the lamp of the Church because of the dimness of its light. The condition that threatened the life of the Church was due to the members having lost their first love. The heart of religion is not intellectual assent to a creed formulated at a church council, but loving loyalty to the Person of our blessed Lord, who lived for our example, died for our sins, and arose for our justification. If the flame of passionate love continually burns in the heart, the dynamic for service will be sufficient, for the mightiest force that has ever moved in the hearts of men is the constraining love of Christ. As St. Augustine reminds us, "One loving heart sets another on fire". Is it not reasonably sure that the dimness of the flame is due to a loss of love?

The Christian pre-eminently is one who has responded to the love of God as revealed in the cross. This is the very center of the Christian's life. Dr. P. T. Forsyth, in his notable book on "The Cruciality of the Cross", says: "We speak of what is the life-power of the moral world and its historic crisis, the ground of the Church's existence, and the sole meaning of Christ Himself. Christ is to us just what His cross is. All that Christ was in heaven or on earth was put into what He did there. And all that man's moral soul needs doing for it eternally was done centrally there. Neither cross nor Christ is simply a historic fact by which we order our mental calendar; they make the sun in our heaven, the force in our world. They make our vital center, not as mere facts, but as sacraments; not for their occurrence, but for their significance; not because we reckon from them, but because we live from them." Christ is to us just what His cross is: the supreme revelation of the love of God to which we respond. It is this love for Christ, passionate and sustained, that will supply energy sufficient for the task to which we are called.—Presbyterian Banner.

A Love Letter Five Thousand Years Old.

Archaeologists are continually making surprising discoveries among the rubbish heaps that mark the sites of the vanished cities of Mesopotamia. It is not so long ago that this remarkable legal code of King Hammurabi was found among the ruins of Babylon inscribed on a large and irregular stele. That carries us back to two thousand years before Christ, but the recent discovery at Tello, Nippur and Ur in Chaldea of clay tablets nearly or quite a thousand years older carries us back to what we consider as the dawn of civilization.

We find that the people who dwelt along the Tigris and Euphrates so long ago were both civilized and cultivated and wrote letters much like those we write today. Among the discoveries is this delightful little letter scratched by a young man on a clay tablet and sent to his beloved:

"To Bibea, thus says Gimil Marduk: may the gods Shamash and Marduk permit thee to live forever for my sake. I write to inquire concerning thy health. Tell me how thou art. I went to Babylon, but did not see thee. I was greatly disappointed. Send the reason for thy leaving, that I may be happy. Do come in the month Marchesvan. Keep well always for my sake."

Does it not seem strange that this eager inquiry of a lover after the health of a girl who has been dead for fifty centuries perhaps should so long have survived both the man and the maid and come to be seen and read today by men who live thousands of miles beyond the limits of the little world they knew!—Youth's Companion.

Until Helen Keller was seven years old her teachers had given her no religious instruction. When she reached the age of twelve years Phillips Brooks began to tell her about God, and what He had done, how He had loved men and what He is to us. The deaf, dumb and blind child listened intently, as her teacher interpreted Mr. Brooks' words, when she said, "Mr. Brooks, I knew all this before, but I didn't know His name."

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus and the Sabbath.

M. L. G.

How should we keep Sunday? Is it right to go to church and Sunday school and then do for the rest of the day as we would any other day? Is it wrong to have the usual games? How shall we know what Jesus would have us do?

Our Best Friend seemed to have one rule about the Sabbath of His day—that it was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. It is not a burden, but a gift. So great a gift that the day should come as a special joy and blessing. He would heal, despite the cries of His enemies, that to do so much was Sabbath-breaking. And in healing He gave more reason than those poor crippled and paralytic ones had ever had, to praise God for the Sabbath.

But it was His custom to go to the synagogue to worship God. He who Himself shared the Divine nature went with the village folk of Nazareth to their Sabbath service. Could He have communed with the Father better among the hills, in the desert? Of all who trod their ways He most loved to go apart for rest and prayer. But He does not seem to have found in their quietness and beauty a reason for neglecting to gather with the neighbors in the little synagogue. We who are His friends have a greater reason than any could have had in those days, to rejoice in our rest-day. For it is not the old Sabbath, but the first day of the week, every one an Easter Day; and we who know Him risen, may learn each Sunday more of what His undying life can mean. Let us not feel it a burden, but a happy and eager quest to learn of Him. Do not be content with any Sunday, no, nor any service, of which you cannot feel that you have learned of Him.

I think, then, the question of how much church-going, how much amusement, will settle itself, when we purpose to use our rest-day for such a lesson. "Learn of Me," He said, "and ye shall find rest."

He means His friends to be happy. He did not come to restrict their lives, but to give them life more abundantly. Anyway, then, of learning of Him, of worshipping Him, of showing mercy to our brother, of being glad in a way He could share, is the right way to keep Sunday.

Princess Patty and Her Crown.

Princess Patty's father was the ruling king in the land where they lived, and Princess Patty was to be the queen when she grew up. She was a very beautiful child, but she thought because she was some day to be the queen that she should have everything she wished for, and it was the custom in that country to give the little princess everything that she expressed a wish for. When her father went away on a long journey he did not change this custom. The only thing he provided for in this matter was that only on certain conditions was the little princess to be allowed to wear her beautiful crown. Of course she wanted to know what these conditions were, but no one would tell her, because her father had thought best that she should not know. In the meantime the beautiful little Princess Patty went right on wishing for lovely things and getting all of them, except, of course, the crown. At first she was very angry about the crown, but she soon saw that it did no good to be angry; so she gave up thinking about it any more than she could help.

If she were driving along the road and saw beautiful flowers or lovely fruit in a garden, she asked for it, and no one ever denied her request. If she saw other children playing with something that she wanted, she asked for it, and they gave it to her as if they were pleased for her to have it.

Then one day, as she was driving along the highway, she saw Brownie and wanted him. Brownie was a dear little Shetland pony with his blue-eyed Mistress Jane riding happily on his back, and the two of them looked so gay and joyful that the princess asked for Brownie at once, hoping that she would soon feel as gay as little Jane looked. When the Princess Patty asked for Brownie, Jane climbed bravely down from his comfortable, shaggy back and, hugging him hard around the neck, she laid her cheek against his head and said good-bye to him. He had been just the gayest little pony in the world, jumping up and down on all four feet at once and running and jumping as a big shaggy dog might have done. With little Jane he lived in a tiny stall in a small stable on the edge of the woods, where Jane's father and mother had their home. At the king's palace he had a wide stall in a great white stable, but he was very homesick to go back to his Mistress Jane, and, try as she would to make him play, the Princess Patty could not seem to make him happy again. He was very good, though, and would try patiently to do her bidding when she rode him out on the highway or through the woods.

One day she rode him into the woods, and they came very near to where little Jane lived. It was too much for Brownie, and, while the old knight who was riding with the little princess got down to remove a stone from the shoe of his own horse, Brownie bolted down the path and brought the little princess up to the little white gate where Jane was watering the roses in her mother's flower garden.

"What beautiful roses you have!" said the little princess. And Jane at once cut some of the most beautiful of them and gave them to her.

"Why do they grow so beautiful here?" asked Princess Patty.

"I think it is because we love them," Jane replied.

"Have you bought you another pony?" asked Princess Patty, seeing how very happy Brownie and little Jane were to be together again.

"Oh, no!" said Jane, looking down to keep the tears from showing, "my father did not buy Brownie. A man gave him to us when he was very small, tnd we nursed him back to health until he grew quite big and strong."

"Was it because you loved him?" asked Princess Patty.

Jane smiled. "It may have been," she said slowly, "for I do—I did love him very much."

"I'm going to give you a new pony," said Princess Patty, but she couldn't help seeing how Jane's eyes rested longingly on Brownie, while the idea of a new pony didn't even bring a smile to her face. Then the princess did something very strange for her to do. She climbed down off of Brownie's back and said to Jane: "Here, Jane, take Brownie back for your very own horse. You love him, and he loves you."

"Don't you like him any more?" asked Jane in astonishment.

"Oh, yes," replied the princess; "but I want to do right, and I think you should have him."

Then the old knight rode him home to bring another pony for the princess, while she remained to play in the garden with Jane.

"Why did you give the pony back to the little girl?" asked the old knight gravely as they rode to the palace together.

"Because she loved him, and I wanted her to be happy. I should be ashamed to be always thinking of myself first instead of trying to make others happy."

When they reached the palace they found that the king had returned, and that night he said the princess should wear her lovely crown.

"Now that you can think of others," he told her, "and deny yourself for their happiness, you have earned the right to wear your golden crown."—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

The Jolt.

Part II.

All appearance and intentions to the contrary, Free was not studying. He was congratulating himself on being as good as elected to the treasurership and the position of cheer leader. Both offices called for a great deal of hard work, but that brought the good will of his classmates, and Freeman placed an enormous value on what folks thought of him.

Resolutely casting these thoughts aside, he dug the fingers of one hand into his hair and began to study. The result was that he passed three examinations, in which he felt sure he had done very creditably.

He was not so successful in geometry, for he steadily lost time by having to do some reasoning that should have been done long before. Some of the problems he worked out conclusively. Three of his proofs sounded very unconvincing, but when the professor called time he had entirely or partially proved eight.

Leaving the class-room, Freeman passed down the hall and sat on the window seat at the end, gloomily looking out. His chum came along and shook him.

"Wake up, old boy; it's a beautiful day. That's my last exam., and I'm as happy as a lark. Say, you aren't in the dumps sure enough, are you? What's the matter?"

"I'm afraid I flunked, Phil."

"Huh, I'm not afraid you did! You never came near flunking in your life. I guess you won't begin this late."

Free shook his head: "No use trying to cheer me up—I know! I didn't prove anything about three of them."

"Whew! You certainly did touch them lightly. But come home with me to lunch. It won't do any good to worry."

"I don't want any lunch."

Phil finally persuaded him to go and somewhat cheered Freeman by his theory that a good student always imagines he has failed if he hasn't made as brilliant a success as usual.

"Why, you're always fortunate!" comforted Phil. "Besides, I don't see why you should worry. You know Professor Carnes recommended you for that position in the lumber mills."

"That is what worries me," Free confessed. "If I have to take geometry again next year I'll have more than I can do."

"Don't try to make me believe you're overworked. We want you for our next student president. That's supposed to be a secret, but I believe the majority of the fellows will be in favor of you."

Freeman forgot his trouble at once in plans for the future. Nor did they return to him until the report of his grades was handed to him a few days later. Though he caught his breath as he saw how near he had come to failure in geometry, it did not really dampen his spirits. That he had passed at all was a miracle.

Phil looked over his shoulder. "Every one of us will be seniors next year. Boys, this calls for a celebration! We'll raid that 'weenie' stand on the corner."

Freeman separated himself from the group as Mr. Carnes beckoned to him. The older man put a letter into his hand. Free glanced at the letter-head of the Kewanee Lumber Mills and called to the boys that they were not to wait for him. He had pulled the letter out and begun reading even before he dropped into a seat.

A. N. Carnes,
Morello, Oklahoma.

Dear Carnes:

Thank you for replying so promptly to my request. I have investigated the record of the young man you recommended. It speaks for itself.

His grades for the first two years in high school show that he must be unusually brilliant and that his work was pretty steady as well. But this year his steadiness seems to have failed. Though some of his grades are high, others are very low. The average is good, but we fear the young man could not be trusted. I suspect you did not consult this record. I have found that it is not best to judge a man on personal acquaintance alone.

Respectfully,
J. C. MORRIS.

Freeman's spirits soared as he read the first few sentences, but then they sank so suddenly that he sat motionless. The sun still shone, but all the world was clouded. The boy shivered, then suddenly went hot with anger. He crumpled the letter and, throwing it down, stamped upon it. Not to be trusted, indeed! Did not his classmates trust him with any work that required energy and ability? His teachers had never hidden the fact that they had confidence in him.

The tempest raged within for a brief time. But Free knew Mr. Morris had been quite fair in his judgment. The man did not know Free's good qualities as the boy's friends knew them. He had consulted the record, the only fair course in business. The row of grades ranging from ninety-six to seventy-five, over which he had been so hilarious a few minutes before, shamed him now. Though he had passed with a good average, it was not a good record.

But while he sat here the Athletic Association was meeting to elect officers. On a sudden impulse Free sprang up and hurried to their room. As he opened the door he was met with a rush of cheers.

"Here's our little old cash handler," cried Phil, and the others cheered frantically. The chairman told Free he had just been elected to the treasurership. In the face of this the impulse on which he had come seemed very foolish. He would leave things as they were.

These boys would misunderstand, he thought, and yet he wanted their respect more than ever before. But something compelled him to carry out his hasty resolve, and he found himself telling them they must elect some one else. He would not have time for the office next year.

Then he caught Phil's eye, and together the boys left the room.

"I should have remembered how busy you were," Phil told him. "Of course it would be a good deal of work to be athletic treasurer and student president, too."

Free looked at him in dismay. "I'd forgotten that. You mustn't let that plan go any further, Phil."

"Say, what's the idea? You haven't gone and reformed or something, have you?"

Free pulled the letter from his pocket and handed it to Phil. "No. I just got a jolt that waked me up, that's all."—King's Treasury.

Sir Cooky Jar.

Sir Cooky Jar is fat and brown and rather plain and old,
And yet the children all declare he has a heart of gold!
And every evening after school they hurry out to see Their plump brown friend, whose welcome is as warm as warm can be!

"Just help yourselves," he seems to say. "Another, Ted? That's right!
There's nothing like a day at school to 'rouse the appetite!
And cookies mend the worries that those tiresome fractions cause;
Yes, children all like cookies. It is one of nature's laws."

Sir Cooky Jar is rather old; he's brown and fat and plain,
And yet the child who meets him once is sure to go again
To visit him! And all insist they'd have to travel far
To find another friend as kind as old Sir Cooky Jar.

Brownie Ben's Picnic.

Once upon a time there was a little wee brownie named Ben, who lived in the top of a big pine tree in the middle of a cool green forest. One day, as he sat at the door of his little house, sewing up a tear in his coat with a green pine needle, he heard some one singing and laughing. He looked down through the branches of the pine tree and saw coming along the path three children with a woman, who carried a big, big lunch basket. They were Mary and Billy and little Annette, with Sarah the Nurse.

"Oh, look!" cried Mary. "Here's a lovely place for the picnic, right under this tree."

"Fine!" cried Billy. "You can sit here, Sarah, and rest, while we go hunt for ferns down by the brook."

"Give us each an apple before we go, Sarah dear," Mary begged, and Sarah opened the big, big basket and took out three red apples.

"Goody, goody!" cried little Annette. "I'm so glad we're having a picnic!"

And off scampered the children, while Sarah sat down at the foot of the tree to take a nap, quite forgetting to put the cover back on the basket.

"Now, what in the world can a picnic be?" thought Brownie Ben, peeping down from the top of the tree. "Where do they keep it? I expect it must be in the basket with the apples, because I can't see it anywhere else."

He crept down the tree very carefully to the lowest branch, and then crawled out until he was right over the basket. "Now," he thought, "if I look very hard—"

"Bang! Bang!" went a sudden clap of thunder.

It startled Brownie Ben so that he lost his hold on the lowest branch and dropped—pop!—right into the basket.

It startled Nurse Sarah, too. She jumped up right away and called, "Come, come, children, quickly! There is going to be a storm. We must hurry home before it rains!"

The children came scampering. Nurse Sarah picked up the lunch basket, put on the cover, and, almost before Brownie Ben knew what had happened, they were all rushing down the path. The apples bumped up against him and bruised him a bit, while once he thought a big pile of sandwiches was going to tumble right on his head! He was glad when they reached the children's home and Nurse Sarah put the basket down in a corner of the porch. It took five and a half minutes to catch his breath, and by that time the rain had commenced to pour down.

"Oh, dear," wailed little Annette, "it will be so wet we can't go back to the woods today at all."

"But I've got to go back," thought Brownie Ben. "How shall I ever get out of this basket?"

He peeped through the holes in the basket work and saw something that almost made him forget his troubles. Billy had brought out his scooter and was running it up and down on the porch. Brownie Ben had never seen a scooter. He thought it was the most wonderful thing.

"When I get out of here," he thought, "I am going to get one just like it and go whizzing down the paths in the woods. But how am I ever going to get out?"

A little sparrow flew on the porch to pick up some crumbs. Brownie Ben called to him, "Mr. Sparrow, won't you please lift up the top of the basket and help me out?"

"Not I," called back the sparrow. "I'm too busy," and away he flew.

Then a fresh breeze came blowing against the basket, cool and pleasant after the rain. She whispered in to Brownie Ben, "Why don't you do something? Why don't you try to help yourself out? That's the best way."

"That's an idea!" said Brownie Ben. He looked around him in the basket. There were, oh, so many sandwiches! Why couldn't he pile them one on top of another, like steps, until he could reach the top of the basket! At least, he could try.

It was hard work because the sandwiches were nearly as big as Brownie Ben himself, but he pulled and tugged. Once the top of one of them came off, just as Brownie Ben stepped on it. He pulled and pulled, but he was stuck. It was a jelly sandwich, and his feet got stuck so fast he could hardly pull them out, and he had to try several times.

At last he got it all ready, a beautiful sandwich stairway! He climbed up, and pushed and pushed at the cover with his head until finally—pop!—off it came.

"Oh, look!" cried the children. "The top has come off the basket! Just look! Sarah, come, see!"

But Brownie Ben didn't wait for Sarah or for any one else to come and see. He jumped down from the basket and scampered off as fast as he could to the pine woods.

The rain had stopped now, and the sun was shining when he reached home. How happy he was to be back! With fern to steer with, he made a fine scooter like Billy's.

He tied a blue bell that grew by the brook on the front, to ring so that the wood folks would hurry up and get out of the way when they heard him come whizzing along the path.

All day long he raced happily up and down and up and down the paths of the cool green forest.

"I see you're safe back home," the breeze called to him, "and I see that you've made your own scooter, too!"

"Yes, indeed," Brownie Ben called back. "You were right, Miss Breeze. You can get things done as soon as you try to help yourself—and it is loads of fun, too!"

And Brownie Ben went whizzing away on his scooter.—Child Life.

"Good" and "Pleasant".

"Are you good now?" asked a mother of her little girl through the keyhole of the "naughty room". The answer came back in a tearful little voice from which the sulkiness had all vanished: "Yes, mamma; I's good, but I isn't pleasant."

"All right, darling," answered the mother, cheerfully. "I'll wait for you here; be real quick, won't you?"

In about two minutes the little girl pushed the door open (it was never locked) and came out with a radiant, tear-streaked face in which was no shadow of naughtiness. She was not only "good", but pleasant—a state of mind which both she and her mother thought was an essential part of goodness.

Alice Cary, who wrote so many beautiful poems for children, says that in her home it was ever the household rule and habit for each to quietly take herself out of the way whenever she felt the beginnings of naughty times coming on, to stay out of the way while they lasted.—Exchange.

IN MEMORIAM.

WILLIAM CABELL BROWN.

At the first meeting of the Richmond Clericus after the summer vacation the thoughts of all were turned to the sad loss of our Bishop. It was his custom frequently to visit the Clericus and oftentimes he had a message for us taking into his confidence those whom he knew were interested in the problems of the Diocese and General Church.

While we realize the great loss to the entire Church, we of the Richmond Clericus will miss keenly his counsel and splendid sympathy and friendship. Bishop Brown had a most unusual career. He seemed by the very circumstances and experiences of his life especially fitted and trained for the great work to which he was called and the high position of leadership which he assumed in the Church's work. His exact scholarship and long teaching experience, together with his undaunted missionary zeal, stood him well in laying deep and strong the foundation of the Church in far off Brazil. Perhaps no one man in the Church could have accomplished what he did here; and he brought back with him from the mission field that which fanned into even brighter living flame the spirit which has always characterized our diocese.

His position as teacher and master of the Episcopal High School was of great value when he undertook the establishment of the Church School system of five secondary schools in the Diocese. Notwithstanding the many difficulties that confronted him, and amid great discouragements he moved forward and accomplished the founding and carrying to great success our Church School system.

But Bishop Brown will be remembered not only as a great missionary Bishop and scholar, nor alone for his splendid Christian statesmanship. but he will live longest in the hearts of the many who knew him as a man of God who had caught the true spirit of the Church and moved among men as a gentle teacher and preacher of the love and power of his Master.

We of the Clericus will be among those who feel most deeply his loss, for he was one of us. It is pleasant to remember that the last act of his Diocese was to express its deep appreciation of his self-denying work and its love for him in granting him and urging him to take a long vacation and much needed rest and planning for him and Mrs. Brown a vacation in England.

Our hearts go out to his family in loving sympathy and many are the prayers that their courage and strength will not fail and that "as their days so shall their strength be".

THOMAS SHELTON WATSON.

Entered into rest, THOMAS SHELTON WATSON, at his residence in Charlottesville, August 27, 1927, son of Thomas Shelton Watson, Sr., and Elizabeth Shelton Morris, his wife. He was born at Bracketts in the beautiful Green Springs County, Louisa County, Va., on March 15, 1856, and reared in the atmosphere of a God-fearing Christian home, built by his great-grandfather, James Watson, of Fonia, for his son, Major David Watson, in 1777, where was also born his father who lived and died there; a home enriched by the traditions of the Morrises, the Watsons and the Taylors; families ardently Virginian, and who founded and supported St. John's Episcopal Church in that community. He was educated at the Virginia Military Institute and married Julia Leiper Taylor, daughter of Henry Taylor and Mary Watson, his wife, of West End, which adjoined Brackets, where lived her Uncle David Watson, Major First Regiment Virginia Artillery, mortally wounded at the Bloody Angle, Spotsylvania, May 10, 1864.

The life of Thomas and Julia was passed in the true happiness of an ideal devotion. They were blessed by a son, James, whose boyhood gave promise of an affectionate and brilliant career. Death claimed him as a youth. Truly it may be said of him "He never gave his parents pain, save when he died". Their lives were saddened, but God's mercy sustained them, and hand in hand this Virginia gentleman and his dear wife descended the hill of life till the parting came, leaving her the memory of a gallant gentleman and devoted husband.

JEANIE TURNER CARTER.

In, as it were, a peaceful sleep, entered into eternal life, at Carter Hall, Warrenton, Va., on June 23, 1927, JEANIE TURNER CARTER in her 82nd year. She was the wife of Edward Carter of Glen Welby, Captain of the Eighth Virginia Infantry, Pickett's Division.

She was the daughter of Edward C. Turner and Sarah Beverley, of Kinlock, Va. She is survived by her husband and four daughters: Rebecca Welby Carter, Sarah Beverley Stewart, Mary Carter Foster and Nina Carter Heineken, also six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Just budding into beautiful womanhood, as the horrors of the Civil War burst upon the country, she early in life enlisted as a follower of her Master and faithfully and brightly her light shone. A life so close to God that it attracted many others to enlist, and several were influenced by her to go to the Seminary and study for the ministry. No one knows the number of those whose lives she sweetened and influenced for good.

The writer, once her Sunday School scholar, being gratefully thankful for her guidance. Later in life, when a dark hour came, she came, as she probably did to many others, at such times, to bring a message from Him which is intended for us all, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee".

Should an account of Stewardship be called for "up yonder", she will be one of those who will be able to say "I have finished the work Thou gavest me to do", "I have fought a good fight". I have kept the faith, and the answer will be "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord".

of the Diocese of Washington, D. C., will enter upon his duties. Both St. Andrew's and the Church of the Advent have remained open, as usual, efficient substitutes, filling the place of the absent rectors in each. Within the Diocese the parishes have been equally well cared for, though Christ Church, Bowling Green, at present mourns the loss of its beloved rector, the Rev. W. W. Reese, called to the higher kingdom and its service August 17, following a stroke of paralysis a week previous.

With renewed energy the Church schools are rapidly resuming work, and Rally Day exercises will soon outline programs for the coming months.

Camp Woodcock for boys completed its second successful record, again combining with sport and recreation its helpful Conference for older members, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. In addition to the regular supervision and guidance of Canon Frank W. Hardy, as chaplain, the Conference on Missions was conducted by the Rev. T. S. Kell, of Anchorage, and Rev. Ben F. Roller, priest-in-charge of Emmanuel Mission; on Social Service, by Canon J. M. Nelson, and on Religious Education, by the Rev. C. A. Ross, late rector of St. Stephen's.

Committees in charge of various departments of Church work are already actively busy, notably the committee planning the Every-Member Canvass for the Church's Program. The dinner for associated vestries will precede, as for several years the work at large, and Mr. Lewis B. Franklin will on this occasion be the speaker. Two clerical members of the National Council are also promised as aids in awakening interest in the work, giving special attention to the smaller points in the interior of the Diocese. Mr. J. B. Alexander, Diocesan Executive Secretary, is planning an exceedingly busy campaign for the term of activities at hand.

Distressing News.

Word has just been received that the wife of the Rev. Clarence R. Wagner died in Scranton, Pa., from typhoid fever.

The Rev. and Mrs. Wagner went from Bound Brook, N. J., last spring to Haiti, where he was to direct the religious educational work of our Church. Mrs. Wagner, it seems, after a few months in Haiti, began to lose her strength and she came back to Scranton, her girlhood home, to recuperate. Instead, typhus, in her weakened condition, conquered the body.

The whole Diocese is grieved and shocked, as both Mr. and Mrs. Wagner are Bethlehemites. Mr. Wagner was born in Lebanon, educated at Leonard Hall and the General, and served in the Diocese. Mrs. Wagner was Miss Frances R. James, a member of St. Luke's Church, Scranton. Mr. Wagner is still in Haiti. Surely he will need the prayers of the Church.

The Rev. John W. Schmalstieg was married to Miss Dorothy Augusta Riegel, of Easton, Pa., on Labor Day, September 5, 1927, in Trinity Church, Easton. The rector, the Rev. Frederick O. Musser, assisted by the Dean of the Pro-Cathedral, performed the ceremony and celebrated the Holy Eucharist.

The Rev. Mr. Schmalstieg, for a while after his graduation, was Bishop Talbot's secretary. At present he is the curate at the Church of the Nativity, Pro-Cathedral, Bethlehem.

The Very Rev. D. Wilmot Gateson, who with his wife and four daughters spent the summer on the Isle of Guernsey, where he had charge of the old French Church Ste. Marie de Caspel, has returned. He held services in English and in French.

The Rev. S. E. Neikirk, editor of the Bethlehem Churchman, toured through Canada and returned home for September 4.

Service For Indians.

The seventh annual Bishop's Day for the Indians on the Uintah Indian Reservation in Utah was held on Sunday, August 7, at the Church of the Holy Spirit (Indian), Randlett, Utah. The Bishop, Archdeacon and clergy gathered at Randlett on the Thursday preceding to help in preparation, constructing an outdoor altar, rehearsing the choir, etc. Preparations were interrupted by a torrent of rain, almost unheard of at Randlett at this time of year. On Sunday the Rev. W. J. Howes, rector, and the Archdeacon began work at five A. M., and with the assistance of a young Indian and other clergy, laid the carpet and placed all the hangings. The Bishop was the preacher; the Rev. Mr. Howes, in charge of the Indian work centering at Randlett, was the celebrant. Others assisting or present were the Rev. Messrs. H. J. Johnson, of Roosevelt; Sterling Talbot, minister for the Indians centering around Whiterocks; E. D. Lewis, of Vernal; James Hayes, of Park City; Mr. Frank Connor, theological student and summer supply at Duchesne, and Mr. Frank Gregory, manager of the Emery Memorial House for students at the University of Utah, in Salt Lake City, who led the choir. Some hundreds of Indians and white people from all over the reservation composed the congregation.

It was a beautiful day. The colorful vestments and the decoration of the altar blended with the green of the lawn and the trees and made a wonderful setting for the hearty and dignified service. This annual outdoor service is one that is looked forward to by all the people living in the reservation country. More than fifty of our Indian and white communicants received. The Bishop's sermon was interpreted in Ute by Charlie Traverse, who is one of the leading Indians among the Utes, a communicant and active worker for the church, taking part in all the services at Randlett.

After the service, while the clergy and workers were meeting the Indians, the Archdeacon took charge of the Indian feast. With the assistance of Mr. Gregory and some of the young people, some seven hundred platefuls of good dinner were served.

About four the games, under the direction of the Archdeacon, began and for several hours Indian men and women and boys and girls had a joyous time with tugs of war, races and a game of shinny between two teams of Indian women.

As evening came near the Indians and visitors began to leave and the clergy, pretty well tired out, journeyed to Roosevelt for an evening service there in Trinity Church.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Aronah H. MacDonnell, minister in charge of the Chapel of the Incarnation, St. Helena, and Grace Chapel, Mt. Winans, Md., has resigned to become assistant to the Rev. S. Amore Caine, rector of St. Timothy's, Roxborough, Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. MacDonnell will enter upon his new duties on October 1 next.

The Rev. A. J. G. Dowie, missionary of St. Paul's Church, White Haven, and of St. David's, Sandy Valley, in the Diocese of Bethlehem, has resigned his charge, effective October 1.

On September 1 the Rev. Benjamin B. Lovett, D. D., assumed the rectorship of Memorial Church, Baltimore, succeeding the Rev. Page Dame.

The Rev. Frank B. Gaskill, missionary of St. George's Church, Olyphant, Pa., has resigned his cure and will leave October 1 to take work in the Diocese of New Jersey.

The Rev. Henry C. B. Thomas has entered upon his duties as rector of Sherwood Parish, Cockeysville, Md.

The Rev. J. A. Richardson, formerly rector of St. Mary's Church, Hamilton Village, Philadelphia, Pa., has accepted the position of lecturer in Church History and Polity at General Theological Seminary, New York City.

The Rev. C. Canterbury Corbin, formerly rector of St. Augustine's Church, Asbury Park, N. J., has accepted the call to be rector of St. Augustine's Church, Atlantic City, N. J.

Ordinations.

The Rev. W. A. Lillycrop, minister in charge of All Saints, Hamlet, N. C., was advanced to the priesthood in St. Martin's Church, Charlotte, on Sunday, September 4, by the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Bishop-Coadjutor of North Carolina. Mr. Lillycrop's work as a deacon has been of a high order.

In St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City, S. D., on Monday, August 29, the Rt. Rev. Eugene C. Seaman, D. D., Bishop in charge of Oklahoma, ordained William George Marricott perpetual deacon. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. John W. Day, former Dean of the Cathedral.

The candidate, who is seventy-five years old, was presented by the Rev. Eric Montizambert, rector of St. John's Church, Oklahoma. Mr. Marricott is to be assistant at St. John's Church.

Deaths.

The Rev. William A. Masker, assistant at St. Mark's Church, Washington, D. C., died of heart disease at his residence on Macomb Street, Sunday, September 4, and funeral services were conducted at St. Mark's Church on September 6 by the Rev. H. W. Stowell. Interment was in Rock Creek Cemetery. A number of the Episcopal clergy of the Diocese attended the funeral services.

Mr. Masker was born in Michigan in 1870. He was graduated from Racine College, Wisconsin, in 1890, and later received a degree from Columbia University. His theological training was received at the General Theological Seminary in New York, from which he graduated in 1893. In the same year he was ordained deacon, and was made priest the following year. During his career he was connected with Christ Church Cathedral in St. Louis; St. Mary's, Springfield Center, N. Y.; Trinity at Athens, N. Y.; St. James, Callicoon, N. Y., and also served as Dean of the Episcopal Cathedral at Salina, Kan. He came to Washington in 1915 to serve as curate of St. Paul's Church and two years later took the work at St. Mark's Church, which he held at the time of his death.

Mr. Masker was widely known as a competent linquist and was holding, besides his clerical duties, the position of chief librarian and translator in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Catherine Masker.

M. M. W.

The Rev. W. Stanley Emery, for the past nineteen years rector of St. Paul's Church, Concord, N. H., died suddenly at his summer home in Hopkinton, a suburb of Concord, Monday morning, August 29, at the age of sixty-nine years.

The funeral was held in St. Paul's Church Wednesday afternoon. The Rt. Rev. John T. Dallas, D. D., Bishop of New Hampshire, conducted the service, the Rev. Godfrey M. Brinley reading the lesson. The committal was read by the Rev. James P. Conover, of Newport, R. I., for more than fifty years an intimate friend of Mr. Emery's.

EVER BEEN SO DEEP IN DEBT THAT YOU COULDN'T SEE DAYLIGHT

No? Then you are either lucky or wise. Lucky because some one's saving made you independent, or wise because you have been taught the value of saving and practice it.

We would like you to learn the value of saving by our Income Building Plan. The plan is this: You deposit in a savings account any amount you can, or a part of each pay, regularly. When $100 is saved it is at once invested in first mortgage six per cent bonds. Interest on the bonds with your deposits and interest on them goes to make the next $100 to buy another bond, and so it grows.

WANTED

for St. Luke's, Pedlar Mills, a near Colonial Church and for the surrounding countryside, a

Balance needed	$2,040

Once, when building a Church in the mountains I had to be there quite often, and stayed at the house of a gentleman, who, by the way, was raised near Emmanuel Church, Brook Hill, and naturally I thought to presume on his hospitality. His wife, however, was a Dutch Valleyite. At supper one night a very deaf aunt of the wife, sitting in an adjoining room, said something which I did not understand. Their little daughter, to the consternation of the household, repeated to me what she said: "An' Jane says 'he's here agin!'" History repeats itself, "he's here agin".

When compelled to give up Missionary work in the mountains by bad health of myself and wife I sought out this near Colonial Church—it sent a delegate to Council in 1779—set off here in the country by itself and continued the Missionary work.

The Church and Rectory, after thirty years without a Rector, have been renovated and restored at a cost of $2,500, all paid—but it has about exhausted our resources.

The pressing need for Rural Work are Parish Houses or halls for conferences, lectures, recreation, etc.

Please help us to get one for St. Luke's. Send checks to me.

Yours still in the work,
JOSIAH R. ELLIS.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"If you happen to be beaten, return to the charge."

"We confess our sinfulness in pursuing little things."

To love man we must know him; to know God we must love Him."

Endurance is nobler than strength, as patience is than beauty.—Selected.

We call love by the name of wisdom when it acts; we call wisdom by the name of love when it thinks and feels.

All human love is a reflection of the divine in the life of the upward looking man.

Great things have never been accomplished by compromise, and never will. If need be, let us fight and die for our convictions.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

Where is your giving up point, your breaking point, your turning back point? This will determine everything in your career.—Marden.

We are approaching the end of an era. The Christian Church has reached a crisis in its career. It cannot go on as it has been doing. It has got to become more Christian or cease to claim to be the leader of the world.

Say not "I love the Lord" unless you find
Within you, welling up by day and night,
A love, strong, full, and deep for all mankind.
—Selected.

No labor can take the place of prayer. No learning can take the place of prayer. We are the followers, of One who prayed, and praying, won His triumph. In living in daily personal touch with God there is strength, as there is joy and peace, for the darkest mile of the untrodden way.—George H. Morrison.

To know Christ is the way to grow in holiness. Christianity is not a religion of rules. It is the religion of the divine example. Try to follow the blessed steps of the most holy life. Take His advice. Ask yourself in the moment of perplexity or temptation, what would He do if He were here? Nothing else will so surely lead us into the way of holy living.—George Hodges.

Take Joy home
And make a place in thy great heart for her;
Then will she come and oft will sing to thee,
When thou art working in the furrows; aye,
Or weeding in the sacred hour of dawn.
It is a comely fashion to be glad—
Joy is the grace we say to God.
—Jean Ingelow.

Shall I wear mourning for my beloved dead,
I—a believer? Give me red.
Or give me royal purple for the King
At whose high court my love is visiting.
Dress me in green for growth, for life made new;
For skies his dear feet march, dress me in blue;
In white for his white soul; robe me in gold
For all the pride that his new rank shall hold.
In earth's dim gardens blooms no hue too bright
To dress me for my love who walks in light.
—Gertrude Knexels.

To move among the people on the common street; to meet them in the market-place on equal terms; to live among them, not as saint or monk, but as brother-man with brother-man; to serve God, not with form or ritual, but in the free impulse of a soul; to bear the burdens of society and relieve its needs; to carry on the multitudinous activities of the city—social, commercial, political, philanthropic—in Christ's Spirit and for His ends; this is the religion of the Son of Man, and the only meetness for heaven which has much reality in it.—Henry Drummond.

SHRINES

Old St. James' Church in North Fifth Street, Richmond, 1874, 1875, along that time. A summer Sunday afternoon service. A small congregation, all its members neighbors and friends, most of them near or remote kin to each other; a choir of three or four. Soft fading of the daylight to the coming of the gloaming. Through the open windows glimpses of boughs and leaves of a venerable tree swaying gently, glints of waning sunlight on the Westernmost tips. The Rev. Joshua Peterkin, in his white surplice at the reading desk, magnificat being recited—"My soul doth magnify the Lord".

He sought no oratorical or dramatic effects, did not intone. Maybe he never had taken a lesson in rhetoric. Maybe he needed no teaching, but that of his own humble, beautiful, pure soul. He so spoke the words as to tell us that his deep reverence and awe were mingled with the strong love of a faithful son for an affectionate father, made us feel that Heaven and earth indeed were filled with the majesty of the glory. Almost invariably he made the hymn:

"Inspirer and Hearer of prayer, Thou shepherd and guardian of thine" and he would repeat all of it, as if each line was a separate luxury and happiness, as, doubtless, it was, and send the meaning of it into our hearts and memories as the organ and the singing voices could not. The peacefulness and restfulness, the quiet and quieting beauty and glory and loveliness of it all.

Perhaps I am the one person living who recalls those services in the tranquil hush of the Summer Sunday afternoons in a part of the city where then was no disturbing traffic. They have been part of me—the best part—through more than fifty changing, sometimes stormy, years and among widely varied scenes and conditions, making within me a serene, sequestered shrine from whence came sweetly soothing and cleansing influence and aspiration for higher and better life and thought. Many, many thousands of us of the laity have had like experience, have gathered from pulpit and reading desk, from the personalities and examples of our rectors and pastors such sacred, saving memories, to live with us, to help us in hard grapples with our evil inclinations and weaknesses, to go with us and comfort and bless us to the ending of our striving and toiling here.

Gratefully and tenderly understanding what these shrines of ours have been and are, have done and yet do, for us, it is not to be wondered at that we cannot become too old to feel our fight bristles rise when a coarse, sordid vulgarian like Sinclair Lewis, for instance, busily nosing for dollars, coarsely assails the Christian ministry. It is not to be wondered at that we are moved to contemptuous indignation and disgust when shallow scholars endeavor to instruct us that the ideal condition is to be attained by crushing and desecrating our shrines, by uprooting our souls and faith, casting them away as weeds, and existing with only the fragile, frequently rusted or worn out, always untrustworthy human intellect.

Nor is it cause for question of our loyalty or tempers when, however deep and deeply ingrained our respect for the clerical office, we resent, instinctively and irresistibly, every appearance or suggestion by any of the clergy of regarding their work as a mere business or trade. The countless thousands of us who have our hidden lovely shrines, created but yesterday or so long ago, from which we draw peace and strengthening in sorest troubles and temptations, are repelled and chilled when we hear a clergyman, of any faith or creed, gabble through his service and prayers and gallop through his sermon like a hired man hurrying to finish his job and be done with it. Earnest, devoted, faithful men of the clergy fall into such bad habits, as we of the faity fall into habits far worse. Some of them concentrate thought on personal service until they come to regard the public service as formal routine duty, incident, to be disposed of according to rule and ritual. Some may be nervously apprehensive of keeping congregations too long, others may yield to pressure from choir to allow more time for ornate music. They may be induced, one way or another, to forget the men and women in the pews and galleries before them, there with the sins and troubles of the past week, and many weeks, and the cares and dangers of the future heavy upon them, craving and yearning for rest and comfort, consolation and hope. They may forget sometimes to realize that intonations, expression of the countenance, conveyance of earnestness and belief and purpose, the many impressions that can be given from pulpit and desk, may live long after the preachers have finished their work and gone.

Mr. Peterkin—I believe he was made a Doctor of Divinity, but he was healer of souls by Divine appointment long before the earthly title was conferred—was simple and plain. Elaborate elocution, labor to win admiration, were as far from him as heresy or selfishness. He gave us in the pews what we longed for and needed, because his heart and soul were in every word of the service and hymns he read, with the same modest intensity of zeal to serve God and do good to man that directed his parochial work.

He was not unusual. He is named here only because of the individual recollection and experience. The great majority of the clergy of now have his spirit and intent, as we of the laity realize with gratitude to the Almighty and to them. May all of them keep always in mind our needs and their own opportunities, establish shrines of beautiful, comforting and purifying memories in the hearts of the present and on-coming generations as their saintly predecessors did for the generations now ready to depart and make way for the new, fresher and stronger.

ALFRED B. WILLIAMS.

IRREFUTABLE

"Irrefutable," that it seems, is the word in high science for infallible. That the Bible is infallible we are warned against saying, lest we fall into idolatry of a Book; but that evolution, according to Darwin, is "irrefutable", we should loudly acclaim, that we be not classed with obscurantists and enemies of "science".

Sir Arthur Keith, an outstanding man of science and justly distinguished for his scientific attainments, declares that Darwin was right when he taught that man has been raised by means of "biological forces that can be observed and measured from a place among the anthropoid apes to that which he now occupies.

In his address as President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, he is reported as saying that the evidence for this derivation of man from the ape is irrefutable. He further is quoted as saying that he speaks "as foreman of the jury—a jury which has been empanneled from men who have devoted a lifetime to weighing the evidence".

And so we have in due form an infallible dictum by an infallible authority.

The statement, "God made man in His image", may be freely regarded as a fallible declaration made by a fallible authority.

But the dictum, "Biological forces, which can be observed and measured, made men out of apes", is "irrefutable" truth, set forth by irrefutable authority.

It is well for us to know just what these distinguished scientists mean when they say "Evolution". The majority of writers and speakers use the term in the vaguist sort of way. In popular speech it is any sort of development, true or false, real or figurative, whether it be of the locomotive from the tea-kettle, or of an oak from an acorn, or of all living organisms from protoplasm.

But Dr. Keith in his address, as reported in the press, makes it clear what the scientific term, evolution, really means and implies. Its fundamental postulate is the transmutation of species, i. e., the making of the existing fixed species out of prior species, by means of forces that may be measured, and that are by consequence material. It proceeds on the assumption that, some millions of years ago, natural forces caused species of creatures of a lower order to become species of creatures of a higher order. The whole grandiose theory stands or falls on the truth or falsity of this dogma (for dogma it is in the opinion of many scientists) of transmutation of species by means of resident forces. Protoplasm, however it may have come into existence, has involved in it everything—life, capacity for growth, capabilities for evolving all creatures from the worm up to rational, self-conscious man. All that is needed is the all-sufficient germ and plenty of time—"biological forces" will do the rest!

Evolutionists take care in their addresses and other writings, not to mention, even under their breath, an intelligent and purposeful Creator. They do not need Him; all the creating they want, they get done by commeasurabie forces.

Sir Arthur Keith, on the great occasion of taking his seat as President of one of the most august scientific assemblies in the world, knowing that he is speaking to a world audience, lays down what evolutionists consider indisputable science—as certain as the centrality of the sun in our planetary system. He declares with solemn emphasis, that the following postulates are "irrefutable":

1. Man is the descendant, along with our present species of apes, of a creature somewhat like a Chimpanzee.

2. About a million years ago this chimpanzee ancestor produced the apes and men, and then disappeared.

3. This transmutation from animal to man was accomplished by biological forces capable of being measured.

4. The mentality of man, despite his marvelous capacities and intellectual achievements, differs from that of the ape in degree only, not in kind.

That amounts to saying that man is developed ape; and ape is undeveloped man.

Such appears to be in these matters according to this great scientist, the accepted creed of real evolutionists. It is a great gain to have this made very, very clear to all Christians, by one whose authority is undoubted. When we recall the mockery, the satyric scorn, the withering sarcasm, that were heaped upon those who opposed the teaching of evolution in state-paid schools, how they were held up to the contempt of the world's intellectual, as bigots, blindly intolerant toward scientific truth and enemies of scientific progress, it is well to have it made quite plain what this travesty of science wishes to teach our youth. Dr. Keith is our authority that evolution teaches that men are just animals, under the urge of necessary forces. Self-conscious personality and responsible freewill are in this scheme nothing more than highly developed instincts of the monkey—the same in kind with the necessity driven impulses of the beast. To call this by the fair name of science, is a wicked misuse of language. This thing is but one more phase of the old, outworn materialistic philosophy that obliterates moral distinctions, that puts virtue and vice in the same class, their differences being of degree and not of kind, and that makes man an irresponsible and irrational animal.

Why should we not insist, and that in the name and in defense of science, that this philosophy of the jungle and of the slime be banished from our tax-supported institutions? In schools in which the Bible is prohibited, shall this dogma of animalism be taught as "irrefutable" science? And shall those who stood against it be branded as obscurantists and religious bigots?

Dr. Keith knows quite "irrefutably" what natural forces were doing a million or so years ago. He is sure on irrefutable evidence that a creature like a chimpanzee, about a million years ago, was enabled by means of commeasurable forces to evolve apes and men. A million years is quite a lengthy bit of time, and yet Dr. Keith's jury can look far back there and see biological forces changing chimpanzees into men and monkeys. Great is this "science"!

The marvel is that those forces working such wonders a million years ago should, during the following millenniums, stop their activities—nay, should come to operate in just its opposite way. Instead of evolving more men out of the far more likely material found in the higher sort of monkeys, these forces no longer transmute creatures into men. Instead of working continuous changes in species, they work now, as far as we can see, to make species stable and fixed. Forces in nature do not behave thus. Gravity, electricity, chemical affinity keep right along now, as they did in the days of that mythical chimpanzee. Reason refuses to accept as "irrefutable" science the assertion that a million years ago, far out of the reach of scientific investigation, these natural forces worked wonders, which during the last million years they have been working not at all. Evolutionists have been challenged again and again to present one single instance in all the world of any species being formed out of some other species, or of any species so changing as to produce another species. They have failed to meet the challenge, and have declared that such a challenge is unreasonable. But if biological forces produced these changes millions of years ago, by all rules of science they should be doing so now. Even the intelligent manipulation and care of a Burbank and others have produced only varieties, which lose their characteristics, when the attention is withdrawn. Besides, if all creaturedom arose by such transmutations, brought about by minute variations under natural selection, the world would be littered up with countless missing links and unsuccessful or partial approaches to our present species.

Despite a few anomalies, the universal law prevailing today before our eyes in the animal world is fixity of species, however multiplied the varieties.

Everywhere biological forces are defensive of species, resisting rather than favoring change in the type. Even varieties developed by human cultivation and care, instead of being conserved by biological forces, must resist a constant pull backward to common forms.

Is it scientific to suppose that biological forces acted a million years ago in exactly the opposite way to that which they do now?

The only scientific, because the one adequate and sufficient explanation of species is given at Genesis 1:25, 27.

"God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind.

"God created man in His image."

CHURCHES NOT DECLINING IN MEMBERSHIP

STIRED by recent reports that the Churches are suffering severe losses in membership, officials of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America today issued a statement declaring that the real truth is precisely the opposite. Figures are presented for twenty-five leading denominations, showing that they have grown almost fifty per cent in the last twenty years.

This statement was made, according to the Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches, in response to many inquiries as to the validity and significance of the public announcement accredited to H. K. Carroll on July 30, that "the total yearly loss (of Protestant Churches) would approximate about half a million".

"This estimate," said Dr. Macfarland, "has been completely misunderstood, because it had to do only with one side of the picture. It made no reference to the additions of new members year by year. For example, the Rev. Frederick L. Fagley, of the Congregational Commission on Evangelism, was quoted as saying that about 30,000 members are lost from the rolls of that denomination annually, but no mention was made of the fact that some 75,000 are added to these rolls each year and that the percentage of increase in membership is greater than that of the population of the country. The fact is, that the net result for all Protestant denominations has been a gain in membership considerably in excess of the growth in population. No thoughtful person should overlook the disquieting drift from active to inactive membership, to which Dr. Carroll called attention, but any one who thinks this means that the Churches are decreasing in membership simply does not know what he is talking about."

The statement gives statistics from the U. S. Census Bureau and the Handbook of the Churches. It says:

"How utterly false are the impressions that the Churches are losing in membership is shown by the figures of the United States Government Census of Religious Bodies in 1906 and 1916, supplemented by the figures for 1926 in the latest Handbook of the Churches. The twenty-five principal denominations in the United States had a growth in total membership from 18,762,943 in 1906 to 23,638,597 in 1916 and to 27,466,470 in 1926.

"There was never a time in the history of the country when so many people belonged to the Churches, never a time when a larger percentage of the population were Church members. In the face of the cold figures, how ludicrous is the dolefal lament, recently heard in many quarters: 'How long can Protestantism stand such losses?'

"From 1906 to 1916, in twenty-five principal Protestant denominations, the net gain in membership was 4,875,654. From 1916 to 1926 the net gain was 3,827,873. This was a gain of 8,703,527 during the last twenty years. In addition to making up all their losses from death, removal and other causes, the Churches have made a net increase in membership of 46.4 per cent in twenty years.

"During these same twenty years, the increase in population of the country was 36.5. The Churches, in other words, gained in membership much faster than the population.

"It is true that when the so-called war decade (1916-1926) is taken alone the figures are not so encouraging. For these ten years, the gain in Church membership was 16.2 per cent, while the gain in population was 16.3 per cent. This condition may perhaps be explained by the diversion of the Church's energies during the war years. During the last half of the decade, however, a recovery has been taking place."

The detailed figures, as compiled by the Rev. Herbert D. Rugg, of the National Council of Congregational Churches, are as follows:

FAITH.

Give u great sdreams, oh God, while Thou art giving,
And keep the end; it is enough if we Live by the hope, nor falter in the living,
That lures us on from dust to dignity.

Give us the courage of the soul's high vision,
Though its fulfilment here we never see;
The heart to make and keep the brave decision,
And faith to leave the ultimate with Thee.

—Marie LeNart, in The Christian.

PUREST HEAVEN.

May I reach
That purest heaven, be to other souls
The cup of strenbth in some great agony.
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love,
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty—
Be the good presence of a good diffused.
And in diffusion ever more intense.
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world.

—George Eliot.

THE TRUE CHURCH OR THE CHURCH WHICH IS HIS BODY

By the Late J. C. Ryle, Lord Bishop of Liverpool

I WANT you to belong to the one true Church; to the Church outside of which there is no salvation. I do not ask where you go on a Sunday; I only ask, "Do you belong to the one true Church?"

Where is this one true Church? What is this one true Church like? What are the marks by which this one true Church may be known? You may well ask such questions. Give me your attention, and I will provide you with some answers.

The one true Church is composed of all believers in the Lord Jesus. It is made up of all God's elect—of all converted men and women—of all true Christians. In whomsoever we can discern the election of God the Father, the sprinkling of the blood of God the Son, the sanctifying work of God the Spirit, in that person we see a member of Christ's true Church.

It is a Church of which all the members have the same marks. They are all born again of the Spirit: they all possess "repentance towards God, faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ", and holiness of life and conversation. They all hate sin, and they all love Christ. They worship differently, and after various fashions; some worship with a form of prayer, and some with none; some worship kneeling and some standing; but they all worship with one heart. They are all led by one Spirit; they all build upon one foundation; they all draw their religion from one single book—that is the Bible. They are all joined to one great centre—that is Jesus Christ. They all even now can say with one heart, "Hallelujah"; and they can all respond with one heart and voice, Amen and Amen.

It is a Church which is dependent upon no ministers upon earth, however much it values those who preach the Gospel to its members. The life of its members does not hang upon Church-membership, and baptism, and the Lord's Supper—although they highly value these things, when they are to be had. But it has only one Great Head—one Shepherd, one chief Bishop—and that is Jesus Christ. He alone, by His Spirit, admits the members of this Church, though ministers may show the door. Till He opens the door no man on earth can open it—neither bishops, nor presbyters, nor convocations nor synods. Once let a man repent and believe the Gospel, and that moment he becomes a member of this Church. Like the penitent thief, he may have no opportunity of being baptized; but he has that which is far better than any water-baptism—the baptism of the Spirit. He may not be able to receive the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper; but he eats Christ's body and drinks Christ's blood by faith every day he lives, and no minister on earth can prevent him. He may be excommunicated by ordained men, and cut off from the outward ordinances of the professing Church; but all the ordained men in the world cannot shut him out of the true Church.

It is a Church whose existence does not depend on forms, ceremonies, cathedrals, churches, chapels, pulpits, fonts, vestments, organs, endowments, moneys, kings, governments, magistrates, or any act of favor whatsoever from the hand of man. It has often lived on and continued when all these things have been taken from it; it has often been driven into the wilderness or into dens and caves of the earth, by those who ought to have been its friends. Its existence depends on nothing but the presence of Christ and His Spirit; and they being ever with it, the Church cannot die.

This Church to which the Scriptural titles of present honor and privilege, and the promises of future glory especially belong; this is the body of Christ; this is the flock of Christ; this is the household of faith and the family of God; this is God's building, God's foundation, and the temple of the Holy Ghost. This is the Church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven; this is the royal priesthood, the chosen generation, the peculiar people, the purchased possession, the habitation of God, the light of the world; the salt and the wheat of the earth; this is the "Holy Catholic Church" of the Apostle's Creed; this is the "One Catholic and Apostolic Church" of the Nicene Creed; this is that Church to which the Lord Jesus promises "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it", and to which He says, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 16:18; 28:20).

This is the only Church which possesses true unity. Its members are entirely agreed on all the weightier matters of religion, for they are all taught by one spirit. About God, and Christ, and the Spirit, and sin, and their own hearts, and faith, and repentance, and necessity of holiness and the value of the Bible, and the importance of prayer, and the resurrection, and judgment to come—about all these points they are of one mind. Take three or four of them, strangers to one another, from the remotest corners of the earth; examine them separately on these points; you will find them all of one judgment.

This is the only Church which possesses true sanctity. Its members are all holy. They are not merely holy by profession, holy in name, and holy in the judgment of charity; they are all holy in act, and deed, and reality, and life, and truth. They are all more or less conformed to the image of Jesus Christ. No unholy man belongs to this Church.

This is the only Church which is truly catholic. It is not the Church of any one nation or people; its members are to be found in every part of the world where the Gospel is received and believed. It is not confined within the limits of any one country, or pent up within the pale of any particular forms of outward government. In it there is no difference between Jew and Greek, black man and white, Episcopalian and Presbyterian—but faith in Christ is all. Its members will be gathered from north, and south, and east and west, in the last day, and will be of every tongue—but all one in Jesus Christ.

This is the only Church which is truly apostolic. It is built on the foundation laid by the Apostles, and holds the doctrines which they preached. The two grand objects at which its members aim, are apostolic faith and apostolic practice; and they consider the man who talks of following the Apostles without possessing these two things to be no better than sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

This is the only Church which is certain to endure unto the end. Nothing can altogether overthrow and destroy it. Its members may be persecuted, oppressed, imprisoned, beaten, beheaded, burned; but the true Church is never altogether extinguished; it rises again from its afflictions; it lives on through fire and water. When crushed in one land it springs up in another. The Pharaohs, the Herods, the Neros, the Bloody Marys, have labored in vain to put down this Church; they slay their thousands, and then pass away and go to their own place. The true Church outlives them all and sees them buried each in his turn. It is an anvil that has broken many a hammer in this world, and will break many a hammer still; it is a bush which is often burning, and yet is not consumed.

This is the only Church of which no one member can perish. Once enrolled in the lists of this Church, sinners are safe for eternity they are never cast away. The election of God the Father, the continual intercessions of God the Son, the daily renewing and sanctifying power of God the Holy Ghost, surround and fence them in like a garden enclosed. Not one bone of Christ's mystical body shall ever be broken; not one lamb of Christ's flock shall ever be plucked out of His hand.

This is the Church which does the work of Christ upon earth. Its members are a little flock, and few in number, compared with the children of the world; one or two here, and two or three there—a few in this parish and a few in that. But these are they who shake the universe; these are they who change the fortunes of kingdoms by their prayers; these are they who are the active workers for spreading the knowledge of pure religion and undefiled; these are the life-blood of a country, the shield, the defense, the stay, and the support of any nation to which they belong.

This is the Church which shall be truly glorious at the end. When all earthly glory is passed away then shall this Church be presented without spot before God the Father's throne. Thrones, principalities, and powers upon earth shall come to nothing; dignitaries and offices, and endowments shall pass away; but the Church of the first-born shall shine as the stars at the last, and be presented with joy before the Father's throne, in the days of Christ's appearing. When the Lord's Jewels are made up, and the manifestation of the sons of God takes place, Episcopacy, and Presbyterianism, and Congregationalism will not be mentioned; one Church only will be named, and that is the Church of the elect.

Reader, this is the true Church to which a man must belong, if he would be saved. Till you belong to this, you are nothing better than a lost soul. You may have the form, the husk, the skin, and the shell of religion, but you have not got the substance and the life. Yes; you may have countless outward privileges; you may enjoy great light, and knowledge; but if you do not belong to the body of Christ, your light, and knowledge, and privileges, will not save your soul. Alas, for the ignorance that prevails on this point! Men fancy if they join this Church or that Church, and become communicants, and go through certain forms, that all must be right with their souls. It is an utter delusion; it is a gross mistake. All were not Israel who were called Israel, and all are not members of Christ's body who profess themselves Christians. Take notice, you may be a staunch Episcopalian, or Presbyterian, or Independent, or Baptist, or Wesleyan, or Plymouth Brother—and yet not belong to the true Church. And if you do not, it will be better at last if you had never been born.

THE CHRISTLESS CATASTROPHE!

A GLIMPSE OF THINGS ACROSS THE SEA

By the Reverend E. L. Langston, M. A.

Incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon.

THE COMMUNISTIC WAR ON GOD AND HIS CHURCH.

TWO alarming movements are in evidence throughout Christendom today, viz.:—Modernism in the realm of theology and agnostic socialism in the realm of politics.

The commission to every servant of God is, "Go ye, therefore make Disciples"—i. e., win souls for Christ. The whole object of the Church is, therefore, to make individual men better men and, incidentally, the world is made a better world.

Both these movements are spreading doctrines that must eventuate in a grave crisis both amongst the Churches and in the governments of the world. We do not need to be told that we are living in very strange times. The world is sick and tired and worn out, and red anarchy is already flying its torch over a third of Europe with disastrous results. Politicians seeing the trend of affairs are turning to the Church and seeking the aid of the Church to right that which is wrong. The League of Nations has come into being, and is seeking to cope with international unrest and discontent. Far-seeing thinkers, politicians, and pressmen are filled with grave anxiety for the immediate future.

Professor Sohn said: "The Society of our day is like the earth on which we live—a thin crust over a great volcanic seething revolutionary heart of liquid fire." "More and more clearly are shown the signs of the movement, the aim of which is to destroy the entire social order of the State, the Church, the Family. Unbelief has grown up amongst us, an unbelief which is kindling revolution."

Kidd in Social Evolution says: "We are rapidly approaching a time when we shall be face to face with social and political problems graver in character and more far reaching in extent than any which have been hitherto encountered."

In the Atlantic Monthly, an American paper, Mr. Sisley Huddleston says: "Standing as I do in the capital of Europe—Paris—I sweep my eyes round from this centre and I see about me a world which dances and makes merry in the midst of death and destruction and the menace of tomorrow."

Sir Philip Gibbs recently wrote: "The nations of Europe are sick, sick almost to death, and filled with a sense of impending ruin and a dreadful anxiety for the future. . . . Without some miraculous spiritual regeneration the civilization of the continent of Europe is doomed."

Mr. H. G. Wells says: "I want to say that this civilization in which we are living is tumbling down, and I think tumbling down very fast, and that I think rapid and enormous effort will be needed to save it, and that I see no such efforts being made at the present time," and he goes on to say "unless something radically happens Europe will, I am convinced, follow Russia and slide down beyond any hope of recovery into a process of social dissolution as profund and as disastrus as that which closed the career of the Western Roman Empire".

Faced with such statements as these, made by far seeing writers and thinkers we naturally ask—whither are we drifting? Has the Church anything to say concerning these terrible disasters with which we are confronted? The Church alas! is almost unconscious of the terrible issue at stake. One of two things must come, viz.: Revival or Red Revolution, which is it to be? Is Revival at all likely? Humanly speaking there is not the least likelihood of such a thing. Everywhere we find the Church stultified, disunited, suspicious one of another, honeycombed with modernistic thought, with little or no power to deal with its own internal affairs, much less with the far larger difficulties of the nation and empire.

Alas, we are ashamed to confess it our Churches are emptier than they were fourteen or fifteen years ago, fewer children are attending our Sunday Schools, and many of the larger Bible Classes now are on the wane. This is in itself truly an alarming situation. Apart from the Churches is there any hope for a great patriotic forward movement? Scarcely! Our working classes in whose hands now to a large extent the destiny of our Empire rests are becoming more and more socialistic. One of their leaders only the other day said: "Bolshevism is Socialism put into practice," and in our very midst as the result of Socialistic and Bolshevistic doctrines, books and booklets, we are fast approaching a terrible class war. It is true, Communism for a time has had a set back here in Great Britain, but for all that they are very determined, aggressive, strong and persistent. We must not forget that both Socialism and Communism not only declare themselves to be a panacea for all the ills of the State, but also are out to establish a religion to meet man's needs, with Sunday Schools, hymn books, and choirs, etc. Now, this new religion, one is convinced, has been devised in Hell, for the spirit that controls it is diabolical, e. g., in a Communistic Sunday School in the North of London, the following blasphemous hymn is being sung regularly:

"The whole world at last is beginning to see
The blight of the world is Jesus.
Like sunshine at noonday, free thought has shown me
The blight of the world is Jesus.
Keep off the blight or blighted you'll be,
Blighted for life by credulity.
Once I believed, but now I can see
The blight of the world is Jesus."!

Benjamin Kidd in his book "The Science of Power", says: "Any nation can be changed in a single generation, if we will go at the matter through the schools." The socialists are acting on this principle.

Such a state of affairs cannot go on interminably. "Shall I not visit for these things saith the Lord?" (Jer. 5:9).

The Agnostic Socialists are now looking upon the modernists in our Churches as their great allies in their fight against the Bible and spiritual authority, e. g.:

Robert Blatchford, in his book called "God and My Neighbor", says: "But—no Adam, no fall; no Fall, no Atonement; no Atonement, no Saviour. Accepting Evolution, how can we believe in a Fall? When did man Fall? Was it before he ceased to be a monkey or after? Was it when he was a tree-man or later? Was it in the stone age or the bronze age, or in the age of iron? and if there never was a Fall, why should there be any Atonement?"

Every true Socialist who follows Karl Marx and LaSalle teaches that marriage is only a matter of convenience to be entered upon and broken at will, and all children are the property of the State. The result of socialistic influences is an ever-increasing menace, and its tendencies and doctrines are inclining now to revolt against all restraint.

Anarchy and Atheism are twin brothers, always to be seen together. Atheism is revolt against God, and Anarchy is revolt against man.

There is a vast organization called "Independent World Workers' Union" (I. W. W.) comprised of anarchists and atheists. One of its pamphlets says: "Anarchists object to such institutions as the police and the criminal law, by the means of which the will of one part of the community is forced upon another part."

Another writes: "The beginning of lies that have ground down this poor world in slavery—is God. Tear out of your hearts the belief in the existence of God. Until this is done you will never know what freedom is. The first lie is God. The second lie is the idea of right. And when you have freed your minds from the fear of God and from the childish respect for right, then all the remaining charms that bind you—called civilization—property—marriage—morality—justice—will snap asunder like threads. Let your own happiness be your own law. You must accutom yourself to destroy everything—the so-called good with the bad. For if an atom of the old world remains, the new one will never be created. Take heed that no ark be allowed to rescue any atom of this old world which we consecrate to destruction."

Towards this end the I. W. W. at present have a great scheme, namely: "the complete surrender of all control of industry to the organized workers." "The workers of the world (must) organize as a class—(to) take possession of the earth and the machinery of production and abolish the wage system." To these ends a tremendous endeavor is now being made to unite all the world workers into one big union—with a master mind as its controller.

They assert that only one class of people should be allowed to live, viz.: "the Workers"—all other classes must be ruthlessly exterminated, for they are mere parasites on the laboring classes.

Says Karl Marx: "We make war against all prevailing ideas of religion, of the state, of country, of patriotism. The idea of God is the keystone of a perverted civilization. It must be destroyed. The true root of liberty, of equality, of culture is Atheism." Secret Societies in Switzerland.

Robert Blatchford writes: "I took my course years ago . . . foreseeing that a conflict between Socialism and Religion (so-called) was inevitable, I attacked the Christian religion.

"It had to be done, and it will have to be finished. No half-and-half measures will serve."—The Clarion, October 4, 1907.

H. Quelch writes: "We are prepared to use any means —any weapon from the ballot box to the bomb; from organized voting to organized revolt; from parliamentary contests to official assassinations—which opportunity offers, and which will help on the end we have in view. Let this be understood, we have absolutely no scruple as to the means to be employed."—Justice, October 21, 1893.

On May 27, 1918, the Daily Mail inserted a paragraph:

"Mr. Tom Mann at a Trafalgar Square demonstration of the Workers' Socialist Federation said: 'We must take our affairs into our own hands. I advocate revolution openly. I am confident revolution is coming. We hold Parliament and the Government in contempt. Parliament is the executive of the Master class.

" 'Get ready, I say, for common action to save ourselves. Workers' committees are being formed in every workshop, factory and mill. Prepare for action when the signal is given. I hope there will not be physical force. At any rate, I hope there will not be more than is necessary. But the job must be done; there must be no half-larks about it.' "

The well-known G. Bernard Shaw, a leader among intellectual socialists, gave an address to undergraduates, college dons, and Girton and Newnham lady undergraduates at Cambridge. Speaking on "The Future of Religion", he said:

"The mention of God has gone out of fashion. You never hear about God in Parliament, and only occasionally in the Law Courts. The people are governed by a system of idolatry. Clergymen, judges and kings are all idols, who generally have to be given sufficient money to dress better and live better than other people. When Charles Darwin came along with his theory of natural selection, people jumped at it and kicked God out of the window."

The following extract was taken out of a well-known London daily recently:

"The man who says Christ was the highest possible being is not worth working with. Christ was a failure."

Such socialism knows nothing of Christian morality or kindness founded on belief in God.

Nietzche says: "Such ideas as mercy and pity and charity are pernicious—since they mean a transference of power from the strong to the weak, whose proper business it is to serve the strong. Remember that self-sacrifice and brotherliness and love are not real moral instincts at all, but mere manufactured compunctions to keep you from being your true self. Remember that man is essentially selfish."

Such doctrines are taught to our children week by week, and open-air lectures on our Commons, Parks, and open spaces, etc., and lecture halls are crowded Sunday by Sunday with discontented, desperate men, who are determined to dreck society to gain their own ends. All the time theologians are telling us man is evolving and getter better and better.

Why are these theories spreading? What is wrong with our working classes? It is because the Bible now is not taught as the Word of God, and also because of the complete downfall of True Religion among the so-called intellectual classes and leaders of Europe. What is wrong is that leaders and teachers of Christianity are not really Christians.

Again, there is another cause: Vicious literature has been common in every age, but there has been none so immoral or which deliberately erases the "Not" from every law of God and Man, as the literature of today. What is wanted is a new sense of right and wrong, of sin and holiness. The Bible is looked upon as old and antiquated! The God of the Old Testament as almost heathen or pagan! The Ten Commandments are abrogated, and our Lord-not-God. To what are we drifting? The Bible tells us: "Shall I not visit for these things?" There will be a Judgment—a Divine Judgment. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."

This old world of ours is the Tomb of dead empires—of forgotten civilizations.

If cities and nations in times gone by have come to an untimely end—extinguished by the judgment of God, why not a world?

If we believe in God's Word, we cannot suppose that this monontonous rise and fall of nations and kings and crowns will be allowed to continue indefinitely in the future!

Book Reviews

YOUR THOUGHTS AND YOU: By Katherine R. Logan, Author of "The Call of the Upper Road". George H. Doran Company, New York.

This book is full of beautiful things. "Next to him who originates a great thought is he who quotes it," writes an author. Living in the thoughts of heavenly minds makes us like-minded. The author shows ample evidence of this, for she not only quotes wonderful thoughts, but writes lovely ones herself. In her brief "foreword" she says she presents from many sources "thoughts charged with cheer, with courage, with faith, with power. We cannot make them our own without becoming enriched and refreshed. They are to the life of the spirit what food is to the physical body. They are like stars that ride the storms and point the celestial highway of the soul's far journeying".

The book is divided into five parts:

"Our Daily Thought," "Inner Furnishings," "An Ordered Life," "Quotations for Thought Enrichment" and "Preserving the Best."

"Give us this day our daily bread, we pray,
And give us likewise, Lord, our daily thought,
That our poor souls may strengthen as they ought
And starve not on the husks of yesterday."
—Phillips Brooks.

"Thought," said Emerson, "is the property of those who can entertain it." The author writes: "The quality of thought that we entertain determines the quality of our life. 's a man thinketh in his heart so is he.' We are no greater than our thoughts."

"Dwell in thought upon the grandest,
And the grandest you shall see;
Dwell in thought upon the highest
And the highest you shall be."

"The King's daughter is all glorious within" (Ps. 45).

No one can use a book like this as an aid for meditation and not be helped.

"Why do I creep along the heavenly way
By inches in a garish way?
Last night when distant clouds did round me lower,
I strode whole leagues in one short hour."
—Mrs. W. F. Slocum.

"I will cry unto God most High; unto God that performeth all things for me "(Ps. 57).

"Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you" (James 4).

"A number of us creep
Into the world to eat and sleep,
And know no reason why we're born,
But only to consume the corn,
Devour the cattle, flesh and fish,
And leave behind an empty dish.

"And if our tombstone when we die
Be not taught to flatter and to lie,
There's nothing better can be said
Than he's e't up all his bread,
Drunk up his drink and gone to bed."
Isaac Watt.

If we let our souls starve with the King's banquet spread before us we are inexcusable.

"'Tis Heaven alone that is given way,
'Tis only God may be had for the asking."

"O Spirit whose name is the Saviour,
Come, enter this spirit of mine,
And make it forever Thy dwelling,
A home wherein all things are Thine."
—Lucy Larcom.

CHRIST AND MONEY: By Hugh Martin. George H. Doran Company, New York.

Mr. Martin is Literature Secretary of the Student Christian Movement, and author of several books. He presents here a very interesting book on a subject of vast importance to the Church, the Christian attitude towards money. The author realizes the difference of opinion among the leaders of Christian thought on the subject and attempts to disarm the critics in a few well written paragraphs. He says the book is not intended for the professional sociologist, but as a help to the average Christian.

He first deals with the value of money and quotes the matured judgment of many men competent to express an opinion—Shaftesbury, Charles Kingsley, Lord Beaverbrook, Ruskin, and others, who put money in its proper place in the economic and religious world. Money moves the world but its real value depends on its use. Men love it, covet it, battle for it, steal it and lose their souls in the struggle. The sin is not in the money.

The teaching of Jesus about it is fairly stated. There is a great deal said about it in the New Testament. Our Lord's teaching was thorough and consistent. He certainly put money in its proper sphere. Papini, in his violent way says: "Jesus was never willing to touch a coin, with His hands." This is probably not true, but Papini flamed out in a panegyric on Christ and poverty, which has not been equaled in literature:

"Jesus is the poor man, infinitely and rigorously poor. Poor with an absolute poverty! The Prince of poverty! The Lord of perfect destitution! The poor man who lives with the poor, who has come for the poor, who speaks to the poor, who gives to the poor, who works for the poor! Poor among the poor, destitute among the destitute, beggar among the beggars! The poor man of a great and eternal poverty! The happy and rich poor man, who accepts poverty, who desires poverty, who weds himself to poverty, who chants of poverty! The beggar who gives alms! The hungry man who feeds others, the miraculous and supernatural, who changes the men owning false riches into poor men, and poor men into those with real wealth."

The author has a good chapter on "The Rights of Property" and another on "The Acquisitive Motive", which is the key to the problem of acquisition. Our motives place us. They determine our character.

The last part is a discussion of vital things with us. "Personal expenditures," "Our Standard of Living," "Stewardship," "Savings and Giving."

The little book has only a hundred pages and will cost you a cent a page. It is worth the money. Buy it.

A BOOK OF OFFICES AND PRAYERS: For Priest and People." Compiled by two Presbyters of the Church. Edwin S. Gorham, Inc., New York.

"FAMILY DEVOTIONS," compiled by Howard Chandler Robins. The Century Company, New York.

The first of these useful books is an old friend in a new and revised edition made necessary by the revision of the Prayer Book. The Baptismal Office is the new one, designed to take the place of the Offices now in the Prayer Book. Of course, the marriage and burial services are the new permissions. The book is very complete and attractive and will prove of great value to the clergy and many of the communicants of the Church. It has two hundred and fifty pages, filled with prayers, choice selections of the Scriptures and many beautiful hymns.

The second book is a manual of devotions for the home by Dean Robbins of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. The arrangement is very simple and admirably carried out. A Scripture reading, a beautiful hymn and a brief prayer for each day of the month. To these are added, in Part Two, the same arrangement for all the great seasons of the Christian year, beginning with New Year's Day and, in addition, such special occasions as a wedding anniversary, Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Armistice and other national days.

Either or both of these books will prove a valuable possession of any home.

The Great Commission

THE REPLY TO ANVIK'S S. O. S.

By John W. Wood.

Late in June the Department of Missions received a telegram from the Rev. Dr. John W. Chapman, of Anvik telling of the severe epidemic of influenza that had visited that part of Alaska during the early spring. Many adults died, leaving a large number of orphan children. This meant increased responsibility for Christ Church Mission in caring for homeless and helpless young boys and girls.

Dr. Chapman, with the endorsement of Bishop Rowe, asked for $11,000 in order to meet the emergency. Part of this amount was needed for food and other supplies and for the support of additional workers; and part for a building to accommodate the forty children dependent upon the mission.

The facts were made known to some of the friends of Bishop Rowe and Dr. Chapman. They were published in the Spirit of Missions and general Church papers. The response has shown once again the generous spirit of people of the Church when they know of an urgent need.

On September 3 it was my great privilege to send a message to Dr. Chapman that $11,000 had been received. I was also able to tell him that the following arrangements had been made to reinforce the staff: His son, the Rev. Henry H. Chapman, of Fairbanks, will spend next winter at Anvik; Miss Adelaide Smith, teacher at St. Mark's Mission, Nenana, has been transferred to Anvik for the winter and her place at Nenana has been supplied by another teacher; Miss Amy Hill, one of the members of the nursing staff, who has served three years at St. John's in the Wilderness, Allakaket, has been assigned to Anvik; Miss Hazel Chandler, of Randlett, Utah, has volunteered to take the post of housemother made vacant by the necessary furlough of Miss Marguerite Bartberger Thus the needs of Anvik, both in money and personnel, have been met before Anvik is locked up from the outside world by the winter cold.

On September 8 a telegraphic message was received from Dr. Chapman acknowledging this information and asking that all friends in the United States should be told of the deep appreciation he and all the Anvik staff feel for their wonderful cooperation in meeting Anvik's needs so fully and so promptly. He asked that a special thanksgiving should be offered at the noon-day prayers at the Church Missions House chapel.

Another feature of this incident is worth recording. Anvik is fifty miles from the nearest telegraph station. That means serious delay in forwarding and receiving information. About three years ago Dr. Chapman began experimenting with radio. We are now able to communicate quickly with him by telegraphing Fairbanks and having the message broadcast from a station there. Dr. Chapman had no satisfactory sending equipment. He could listen, but he could not reply. In one of his letters he reported this fact and said that for $150 he could procure proper equipment. It seemed to me that good friends who were living in such isolation should not be deprived of a means of speedy communication for the sake of $150. I advised Dr. Chapman to secure equipment, confident that it would be possible for me to send him money to pay the bill. It is a satisfaction to know that my confidence was not misplaced.

A layman friend in Detroit wrote me of his desire to help provide for the additional personnel necessary to meet the Anvik situation. The outcome of our correspondence is that my friend and other members of his family have undertaken to support a trained nurse for a year and to provide for her supply outfit and her travel expenses. This gift of $1,300 is made as a memorial of a dearly loved mother who recently passed into Life eternal.

My hearty thanks are added to those of Dr. Chapman for the characteristic response of people of the Church to Anvik's needs. Bishop Rowe would want to express his thanks, too, if we knew just where to reach him. The last word we had from him was at Nome. He had just returned from an airplane visitation to Point Hope. It was the only way he could get there this year.

AN INTERESTING VISITOR FROM ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, TOKYO.

Miss Iyo Araki, famous throughout Japan as head nurse of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, a visitor in this country at the invitation of the Rockefeller Foundation, was formally welcomed by the staff of the Church Missions House, New York, on Tuesday, September 6, at a tea given under the auspices of the Department of Missions.

Araki San (San standing for Miss) is the nurse who during the earthquake of September 1, 1923, when St. Luke's Hospital was damaged by the quake and destroyed by fire, carried patients into the nearby excavation and, when trapped by the flames, covered her charges with blankets, while with a dishpan, she kept these wet with accumulated rain water through the terrific ordeal of five hours. Not a patient was lost and Araki San's uniform, scorched and burned in a score of places, is one of the treasured keepsakes in St. Luke's museum.

Araki San has been in the service of St. Luke's, the outstanding medical enterprise of the Church, for twenty-five years. She has participated in the development of the Nurses' Training School of the Hospital inaugurated by Dr. Rudolph Teusler, and for many years an effective unit not only in the field of nursing, but of missionary fervor. In the whole period of the school, no nurse ever has graduated who had not in the meantime become a Christian. To this school, the Rockefeller Foundation has recently made a grant of $10,000 a year to continue for a period of five years. Previously the school has been officially recognized by the Japanese Government and had been elevated to a ranking position among the educational institutions of Japan. St. Luke's will become a center for the promotion of Public Health work among the school children not only in Tokyo but throughout Japan.

Araki San, in connection with this grant, has been invited to America at the expense of the Rockefeller Foundation, for a year of study and observation in the leading hospitals of the country. She is accompanied by Mrs. St. John, Miss Kiku Arai, Miss Masao Ando and Miss Nasu Yumaki, who are also identified with St. Luke's Training School for Nurses.

The following news announcement of the visit of these nurses to America was made by Jiji Shimbun, of Tokyo, in its issue of August 3.

Though there have been a few Japanese scholars or investigators who were invited by the Rockefeller Foundation in America, Miss Lyo Araki is the very first woman who has received an invitation formally.

Not long after St. Luke's Hospital of Tsukiji, which has the oldest history among the hospitals organized by Europeans in Tokyo, had been established some thirty years ago at Akashioho, Miss Araki, who had just graduated from the Women's Department of Rikkyo College, applied as a nurse in order to sacrifice her life to the sick and suffering.

Since that time she has worked hard nursing the sick. The Medical Department of the Rockefeller Foundation decided to invite this painstaking, benevolent lady to visit America. She will sail on board the "Taiyo Mara" on the twentieth. Traveling and all the other expenses will be paid by the Foundation. She will remain about a year, observing nursing technic and inspecting the hospitals of the Foundation and various other institutions in relation to hospital administration.

Her adopted daughter, Miss Tamako Araki, who lives at ten Edogawa-cho Koishikawa, said: "My mother thinks of the Hospital as her own home. She does not speak much about her work to us, but at any rate after thirty long years of hospital life, it is no wonder she is so devoted to it. Besides my mother, three of the best nurses in the Hospital are going with her to study in America; they are Miss Kiku Arai (twenty-nine years of age), Miss Masao Ando (twenty-three years of age) and Miss Masa Yumaki (twenty-five years of age)."

BISHOP ROWE'S VISIT TO POINT HOPE.

Bishop Rowe expected to devote the entire summer to making his triennial visit to Point Hope. He planned to follow the usual route of steamer to Victoria, then U. S. revenue cutter, at the end of July, to Point Hope, returning to Nome early in September. On his arrival in Nome he found that it was impossible to get to Point Hope this year by water. The only other possibility was the air. He left for Point Hope August 3, by airplane, stayed over August 4, and returned to Nome on August 5. The distance was seven hundred miles each way. Speaking of his experience, the Bishop describes it as "great". "The Point Hope people were excited, it was their first view of an airplane." In spite of its brevity the Bishop had a fine and helpful visit and confirmed a class of thirty, prepared by the Ven. F. W. Goodman. From Point Hope the Bishop received and forwarded to the Church Missions House $50 as the gift of the Point Hope people on account of the Church's Program for 1927. The real significance of such a gift as that can only be understood by those who know something of the property of the Eskimo people and the precarious life they lead in their search for food and fuel. It is not too much to say that every one of those dollars represents at least the equivalent of $20 from the average member of the Church in the United States.

The Bishop says that this mode of Episcopal visitation is expensive, but does not tell the exact amount that he has had to pay for the journey. He does say: "As I have traveled over Alaska on foot, with dogs, canoes, small boats, gas boats, steamers, railroads, autos, etc., the airplane was the only method I had not used, so it was a fitting climax to use it at last."

The Bishop hoped to be able to make his way from Nome to the Yukon, and go up the river, visiting Anvik, Tenana, Rampart, Stephen's Village, Fort Yukon, Circle City and Eagle, coming out through Dawson and the White Pass.

INTERNATIONAL FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Very few people know of the practical service rendered by the International and Foreign Missionary Society. Through the gifts of many friends and the enterprise of its committee it has erected at Ventnor, just below Atlantic City, five cottages available for the use of missionary families on furlough. These accommodations have been a great blessing to scores of families, some of them members of our own mission staff. A new building known as Richards Cottage was dedicated on September 8. The cost of the building and furniture is approximately $24,000, of which about $20,000 has already been provided. The committee hopes that it may not be necessary to borrow the $4,000 in order to complete the project.

A MESSAGE FROM JAMESTOWN.

About three hundred twenty years ago
A band of loyal Churchmen crossed the sea
And stepped ashore, where Jamestown soon would rise,
And stand through years to come, with church and fort,
The first and oldest of the settlements,
Where England's love of liberty took root,
And whence has sprung our noblest heritage.
In winter had they left the other side;
The forty days of Lent and Easter, too,
Had kept upon their ships as best they could
With their good chaplain, Master Robert Hunt;
And now they stood beneath the lofty trees
Upon the virgin shore of a new world.
From water's edges to topmost bough above,
The tender green of spring was everywhere;
The God of Beauty and of Life was here
On distant shores as in the mother land.
Indeed He had been with them as they crossed,
And from their labors greater things will spring
Than they have ever known. . . . . .
And these things are for us an allegory,
Wherein this year of grace all men may read,
That those who pass unto the farther shore
Find there the God of Beauty and of Life
Indeed that He is with them as they pass;
And they in Him may sow and reap, and build,
And from their labors greater things will spring
Than they or we have ever known before,
As we ourselves with our own eyes shall see,
For He, Who on this Easter Day did bring
Both life and immortality to light,
Has said, Because I live, ye too shall live;
And, Where I am there ye may be.

THE ORDER OF JAMESTOWN.

Norfolk, Va.

A Friend writes as follows:

"Thank God for the revival in the Southern Churchman—a precursor of the Revival in the Body of Christ. He that runs may read on its cover that the Bible is the 'living Word of God' (by which Peter tells us we may be 'born again' (1 eter 1:23), and that Jesus Christ is the Way, the Truth and the Life; and the same yesterday today and for ever; and the poor, sin-sick sinner may be cleansed from all sin, in the blood of Jesus Christ (1 John 1:7). We pray that the orthodoxy of love may always be seen in its pages. 'He that loveth not knoweth not God.' 'If we love one another God dwelleth in us' (1 John 4:8-12)."

Church Intelligence

The Synod of Washington.

In accordance with the call recently issued by the Rev. Thomas J. Bigham, of Pittsburgh, Secretary of the Province, the Tenth Synod of the Province of Washington will meet in Roanoke, Virginia, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, October 18, 19 and 20, 1927. The opening service in St. John's Church, Roanoke, on Tuesday afternoon, will be conducted by the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware. The Rt. Rev. William Loyall Gravatt, D. D., Bishop of West Virginia, will preside at the sessions of the Synod.

The Synod can adopt ordinances for the government of the Church in the Province, provided these do not effect matters which are subject by the constitution to the control of the General Convention, such as matters of doctrine, of worship, or orders in the ministry and of the administration of the Church's missions.

In addition to the Bishops and the one hundred and four delegates, there will assemble in Roanoke three commissions which carry on the work of the Church in the Province during the recess of the Synod, namely the Commissions on Missions, Religious Education and Social Service. Each of these is composed of one representative from each Diocese. The various societies of women in the Episcopal Church hold provincial conventions at the time of the Synod, with varying numbers of diocesan representatives. Altogether, the Synod will bring to Roanoke about two hundred Church people.

The session of the Synod meeting in Roanoke will be largely devoted to a discussion of the Boarding and Day Schools under Church administration within the Province. The Association of Schools under Church Influence in the Province of Washington will hold its annual meeting at the same time. This is the first time in the history of the Province that the Church Boarding Schools have been featured at a Synod meeting and much good in the way of a better mutual understanding is expected to result.

The Synod will decide the place of its next meeting. Under the rules, the Synod meets annually except in the year of the triennial General Convention. The General Convention will meet in Washington, D. C., in October, 1928, and therefore the next session of the Synod will be delayed until 1928. The Synod of 1927 has the duty, however, of electing the three Standing Committees already referred to, whose terms of membership are for three years.

Dedication of St. Paul's Church, University, Virginia.

The opening service and dedication of the new St. Paul's Memorial Church at the University of Virginia took place Sunday morning, September 18.

The service was in charge of the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Virginia. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Bishop of Maryland and Presiding Bishop.

Others taking part in the service were the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, LL. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia; the Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Tomson, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia, and the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, and former rector of the church.

The new church is one of the handsomest buildings erected in the university community since the days of Mr. Jefferson. It is in thorough accord with the central unit of the University, designed and built by Jefferson. The building is of brick. At the front is a lofty portico which frames a massive tower which, in turn, is surmounted by a cupola. The walls of the nave are finished in buff plaster and the woodwork in old ivory. All of the furniture is of native walnut.

The building itself is a memorial to all those who have been students at the University of Virginia and the various articles of furniture are individual memorials. Many of the pews have thus been set aside and it is hoped that ultimately every pew in both the main nave and in the chapel will be set aside as a memorial.

The altar, altar rail and font are of Carara marble and each is a memorial. The altar is to the memory of John Dunn, of Richmond, Va., who gave his life in the Royal Canadian Air Service. The altar rail is a memorial to Archer Christian, who died from injuries received in a football game between Virginia and Georgetown, and the font to Misses Constance and Lelia Echels, daughters of Professor and Mrs. W. T. Echols. One of the most attractive features of the building is the chapel. This is a memorial to the late Bishop Gibson, of Virginia, the originator of the movement, which has developed into the present St. Paul's Memorial Church.

The Treasurer's Statement.

The statement of receipts from the dioceses to September 1 is fairly gratifying even though it shows a decrease from last year of $27,000. This decrease is, however, in line with the fact that the dioceses have told us to expect somewhat less this year on their budget quotas than was paid last year.

We have established a new record in that we have passed the first of September without borrowing any money from the banks. It must be remembered, however, that we are still using some $400,000 of the Reserve Deposit Accounts in our current business. This money, if not thus in use, would be drawing good interest.

Our cash account is now rather low and we need the help of all Treasurers during September to prevent any further borrowings at the end of the month.

Twenty-five dioceses have paid the minimum amount expected of them on their budget quota to September 1, five of whom have paid the full amount of the budget for the year.

LEWIS B. FRANKLIN,
Treasurer.

The Fall Conference of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The fall conference of the Brotherhood, to be held in Philadelphia October 15 and 16, will have its headquarters at Holy Trinity Parish House. The conference is open to all laymen and clergy, but especially those of the First, Second and Third Provinces.

The conference will open on Saturday afternoon with a joint session of men and older boys, continuing until Sunday night and concluding with a farewell meeting after the close of the public service.

This Saturday afternoon joint session will be devoted to welcoming addresses by President Bonsall, the Rev. Dr. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity, in whose parish house the headquarters are to be, and the Rt. Rev. Dr. Garland, Bishop of Pennsylvania. Dr. Tomkins will also make a devotional address and Professor Twitmyer, Department of Psychology of the University of Pennsylvania, will speak on "Adolescent Boyhood". Professor Twitmyer will present the latest scientific data upon his subject with practical suggestions for effective work with boys. Later in the afternoon Bishop and Mrs. Garland will open their home for a reception to the conference.

Immediately after supper (to be at a nearby restaurant), General Secretary Leon C. Palmer will address the conference on "The Brotherhood of Today and Tomorrow", speaking of its present encouraging condition and work and of the evangelistic and educational program outlined for the Brotherhood in the future. Then will come, in the Church of the Holy Trinity, the service of preparation for the Holy Communion, to be conducted by Bishop Cook of Delaware.

Bishop Garland will be the celebrant at the Corporate Communion at the same church early Sunday morning, and in Old Christ Church (the Church of the Patriots), downtown, the Conference will be addressed by Bishop Lloyd, for four decades a loyal and loving friend of the Brotherhood, on the theme, "The Layman of the Future".

Sunday afternoon in Holy Trinity Parish House, the conference headquarters, "Practical Plans for Personal Workers" will be discussed by three speakers: the Rev. John R. Hart, Jr., is Episcopal Chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania, and has gathered around him a cabinet of splendid young students, who are making the Church's influence felt among that great student body of 15,000 matriculates; the Rev. Frank Cox is rector of the Ascension Memorial Church in New York, in the very center of the great theatrical and retail business life, and where many souls are needing the reminder of God and their right attitude toward Him; Captain B. F. Mountford of the English Church Army is in this country with a band of workers and is making his headquarters at the Diocesan House in downtown New York; he, with the other two speakers will bring forceful messages on this Sunday afternoon that will be of untold help to potential personal workers.

The final public service will be held in the Church of the Holy Trinity Sunday night. The address will be made by the Hon. George Wharton Pepper, distinguished Churchman and former United States Senator, and for many years a member of the Brotherhood, serving for a considerable period on its National Council. His topic will be: "The World Awake to Evangelism."

The conference will close with a farewell meeting following this service, a feature of Brotherhood gatherings that is always looked forward to as a quiet and happy conclusion of the program.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Clergy Conference.

Seventy-five clergy of the Diocese assembled at the Mayo Memorial Church House, Richmond, September 14 and 15, for a conference on the Church's Program. This conference had been planned by Bishop Brown as the opening note of the fall campaign, and Bishop Tucker conducted it as it had been arranged.

The leaders of the conference were Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council, and the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., of Wilmington, N. C. The opening service of Holy Communion was held at All Saints' Church, celebrated by Bishop Tucker assisted by the Rev. J. Yates Downman, D. D., rector of the church.

The subjects included: "Preparation of the Congregation," "Preparation of the Vestry" and "The Actual Campaign"' The Rev. G. M. Brydon, Treasurer of the Diocese, outlined the diocesan budget, and much beneficial discussion and criticism resulted from the meeting.

On the last night, Mr. Franklin conducted a conference with the vestries of the various churches in Richmond, which was well attended. The clergy were entertained in the homes of Church members in the city.

Reopening of the Monumental Church, Richmond.

The Monumental Church, Richmond, the Rev. A. C. Tebeau, rector, has within the past year undergone a complete overhauling and renovation and extensive repairs, and was reopened for service on Sunday, September 11, after having been closed for six weeks.

The work has included a complete going over of the exterior walls of the church and special treatment of the stone which showed signs of deterioration. The mural paintings and frescoes have been cleaned and renovated and the whole building greatly beautified. A new organ has been installed.

The Monumental Church is the second oldest Church building in Richmond, having been erected by public subscription in 1813-14, upon the site of the Richmond Theatre, which was burned in 1811, with a loss of seventy-three lives.

Opening of a New Chapel in Suburbs of Richmond.

On Sunday, September 4, a chapel recently erected on the Mechanicsville Turnpike, just outside of Richmond, was opened for service, the sermon being preached by the Rev. Pembroke W. Reed, rector of Christ Church.

The new chapel is a Mission of Christ Church in a new and growing suburban development; the land and a great deal of the labor being given by members of that congregation. Addresses were made by the Rev. P. A. Arthur, rector of the Church of the Ascension; the Rev. Hugh W. Sublett, D. D., rector of old St. John's, and by members of the vestry of Christ Church.

B.

The Richmond Clericus held its first meeting for the fall, in the chapel of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Monday morning, September 19.

Following Holy Communion, which was celebrated by the President, the Rev. Philip A. Arthur, and secretary, the Rev. S. S. Spathey, there was a short business session, and plans for fall and winter work were discussed.

An inspirational address was made by the Rev. Pembroke W. Reed, rector of Christ Church, who spoke on "Spiritual Preaching Through Prayer".

The Rev. William E. Cox, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond, has resigned, and will take up missionary work in Arizona about December 1. His resignation has been accepted with many regrets by the vestry.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Educational Program.

The Department of Religious Education of the Diocese of Washington has issued a detailed announcement of its program for the coming year and requests parishes, congregations and Church organizations to bear the dates given in mind, when making other arrangements for meetings, services, etc., during the year.

Large headings of this program include coaching classes, annual convention of the Sunday-School Institute, Teacher Training Classes and monthly meetings of the Sunday-School Institute. Speakers, place and time of meetings and other details are given in full.

Coaching classes are the immediate interest at hand, and the first of the series was held Sunday, September 18, in St. John's Church. These classes are planned to aid the teacher in preparation of the lessons used for a month in advance, and each course of the Christian Nurture Series will be conducted by a competent leader. Such classes will be held on the third Sunday in each month. These classes are preceded by a light supper at six P. M. and are dismissed in time for the evening service at eight o'clock. Mrs. Mary C. D. Johnson is the general director of these classes.

The Night Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary of Ascension Church, a comparatively new organization, organized just a year ago, held a meeting at the rectory of Ascension Church on Tuesday evening, September 20, with a good attendance. The special speaker of the occasion was Mrs. Jewett, sister-in-law of the rector, who has recently returned from a trip around the world. She told of some of her experiences in traveling in Jerusalem and Egypt.

The Sunday Morning Bible Class, conducted with great success last year at Epiphany Church by the Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, will be resumed the first part of October, according to present plans and will be held as before in the main body of the Church. This class meets at 9:45 A. M., on Sundays and last year, the membership reached nearly one thousand people. This class was a conspicuous achievement of the year in the Diocese of Washington and promises to assume even larger proportions this year.

St. Alban's Church presents a new and interesting appearance to those who have not seen it recently, for considerable improvements and changes have been made during the summer. New floors, new pews and freshly decorated walls have replaced the old, and add much to the beauty of the interior of the church. It is expected, a little later, to install a new organ. A new parish house is also a goal toward which the church is working, for the accommodation, especially of an increasingly large Sunday School, which already overtaxes the space now available for its use.

Cooperation was Emphasized Sunday, September 18, when clergymen throughout the City of Washington responded to the request of the American Automobile Association to announce from their chancels the fact that public schools were opening the following day and, therefore, careful driving when children in numbers were on the street was urgent. Many ministers gladly complied with this request and shared thereby in the greater safety of the little children obliged to cross dangerous boulevards and corners.

Lay Cornerstone of St. Peter's Church, Talladega.

St. Peter's Church, Talladega (the Rev. Jos. H. Harvey, rector) with a history of more than three quarters of a century as a background, laid the cornerstone of its new building Sunday afternoon, September 11. Bishop McDowell officiated.

The first service in Talladega was held in 1850 in an upper room of an old store by the Rev. Thomas A. Cook. By degrees the number of communicants increased, and in 1869 the Rev. J. F. Smith came to Talladega and started the building of the church. Early in 1872 a lot was purchased and a building erected, the first service being held in it the latter part of the same year. In October of 1887 the mission became a self-supporting parish.

In 1898 a new church was built, the cornerstone of which is still on the ground. In November, 1924, St. Peter's Church was left a house and lot to be sold and the money obtained therefrom to be used to erect a new church. The house was sold a year later and, together with funds raised, a church was started in June, 1927. Ground was broken in June and work begun early in July.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Distinguished Visitors in the Diocese.

On Friday, September 16, the Rt. Rev. Frederick Llewellyn Deane, D. D., Lord Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney, and the Very Rev. H. Erskine Hill, M. A., Provost of St. Andrew's, Aberdeen, arrived in New York on the Volendam. They received a real American welcome from the Diocese of Long Island. In pursuance of their plan, in lectures and addresses to present to the Church in America, the wish to rebuild St. Andrew's Cathedral as a memorial of Bishop Seabury's consecration, they will start on their tour on Long Island, and will visit East Hampton, Southampton, Glen Cove, Oyster Bay, and the Cathedral of the Incarnation in Garden City, and then go on to many other places. Descendants of Bishop Seabury are living in Long Island, and in Brooklyn. A little boy whose first birthday was the last Fourth of July, has been named for his great, great, great granduncle, Samuel Seabury.

A Successful Vacation Bible School.

The Daily Vacation Bible School of St. George's Parish, Flushing, was held for six weeks. It opened the first day with an enrollment of sixty-five and reached the maximum attendance of one hundred and fifty-four during the first week. The rector, the Rev. George Larrand Taylor, was in charge of the entire school and more particularly leader of devotions, and guiding factor in the dramatizations. After one month he was relieved by his curate, the Rev. Roscoe T. Foust. There were four other assistants and later another had to be added for the boys' handwork. They had a D. V. B. S. newspaper, edited by two of the staff, which gave great joy. The hours spent in dramatization have been considered splendidly worth while, as they have given the children a knowledge of, and an interest in, Old and New Testament characters that they could hardly get so well in any other way.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Steinmetz Accepts Call to St. Mary's, Philadelphia.

The Rev. Francis Campbell Steinmetz, for nearly nineteen years rector of Christ Church, Norfolk, Va., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Mary's Church, West Philadelphia, and will assume charge on October 1.

Dr. Steinmetz will succeed at St. Mary's the Rev. John A. Richardson, who has resigned to become Professor of Ecclesiastical Polity and Church History in the General Theological Seminary in New York City.

St. Mary's Church is one of the oldest churches in West Philadelphia. It was established in 1824 on its present site when that part of what is now West Philadelphia was known as Hamilton Village. The land was the gift of William Hamilton, a prominent Episcopal Church layman of his day, whose home, "The Woodlands", now is part of Woodlands Cemetery.

Dr. Steinmetz is widely known throughout the Episcopal Church, and is a native of Philadelphia. He was ordained to the priesthood in Philadelphia in 1896 by the late Bishop Whitaker. He began his ministry here as an assistant at Old Christ Church. In 1898, he became rector of Christ Church, Ridley Park, in Delaware County, where he remained until he went to Norfolk in 1908. Dr. Steinmetz is a graduate of St. Stephen's College and the General Theological Seminary and studied at the University of Pennsylvania and Columbia University.

Dr. Richardson, who retires as rector of St. Mary's after serving there since 1919, is widely known as a scholar and is a graduate of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1913 by the Bishop of Montreal. Before going to St. Mary's, he was an assistant at St. James, Philadelphia. He is of Canadian birth and during the World War, after his brother had been killed in action, he enlisted as a private in a Canadian overseas tank command to take his brother's place and served overseas until after the Armistice, when he was appointed as a Chaplain.

Other Clerical Changes.

Several other clerical changes in this diocese go into effect at the end of the present month. The Rev. Charles Edward Spalding, who has been serving in the Bucks County Missions, becomes rector of St. Barnabas' Church, Sixty-fourth Street and Haverford Avenue, Philadelphia, succeeding the Rev. Joseph Manuel, appointed Chaplain of the Episcopal Hospital last winter.

The Rev. Francis Cope Hartshorne, rector of St. Peter's, Phoenixville, resigns his charge October, as does that of the Rev. John P. Bagley, as rector of Calvary Church, Rockdale.

KEEP THE STUDENT IN TOUCH WITH THE CHURCH.

With the opening of the Colleges and Universities in the autumn, many hundreds of young men and women of our Church are leaving their home parishes. Whether these students continue under religious influences depends sometimes upon their first contacts at college.

A letter to the student pastor or the rector of a church near the campus is one way of keeping students in touch with their Church. In the Living Church Annual there is a list of clergy ministering to college students. The clergymen whose names appear in this list will be glad to look up students. Rectors and parents are urged to send the names of students to the local clergyman, or if none appears in the list to write to the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, Secretary for College Work, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The foreign students in our American colleges present a challenge to all Christian students, especially those organized into Church clubs. What does the local Episcopal Club do for the foreigners in the student body? Here is an unique opportunity to uphold our missionaries by showing Christianity at first hand, and a chance to serve the Master in a way which He specifically pointed out, "I was a stranger and ye took Me in".

The Rev. John Lowry Hady, who in the early summer accepted a call to the rectorship of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes) Church, Swanson Street, below Christian, Philadelphia, preached his first sermon as rector of that historic parish, Sunday, September 18. Mr. Hady is now in residence in the historic rectory of the old church.

Clerical and Lay Conference at Linwood Park, Ohio.

The number present at the Clerical and Lay Conference, at Linwood Park, last year was twenty-five; this year it reached ninety-six clergy and forty-seven laity—a goodly advance.

The sessions opened after dinner, Wednesday evening, September 7, with a speech by Bishop Rogers on the Lausanne Conference. The Bishop's felicity of diction is well known. He had been in attendance as an observer from the beginning to the end; and gave a true picture of the inner workers of the whole procedure.

The Rev. W. M. Sidener, rector of St. Paul's, Steubenville, who had been present at the Anglo-Catholic Congress as chaplain for the United States clergy, was called upon and read a well-written paper, going over all the incidents of that gathering. Twenty thousand became members and the sum of $200,000 was given for propaganda.

Thursday morning the Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett, of the National Council, spoke on the Program of the Church. He opened the eyes of the clergy to both the advances and the reason for non-advancement of the work in the West.

The Every Member Canvass and the Round Table was in charge of Mr. George Benham, Secretary of the Nation-Wide Program for Ohio. He gave a lantern lecture, showing all the new churches throughout the diocese. Archdeacon Patterson spoke effectively on the Program of the Diocese, giving facts and figures interesting to the Ohioans.

The Foreign Field was the subject of the Rev. Hollis S. Smith, of China, who laid before us the true condition of China, which the newspapers did not give in the proper light.

Mr. Bartlett spoke again on Friday morning, on the Progress of the Church. The Rev. Messrs. C. L. Bilkey and Jas. R. Colby reported as delegates to the Rural Workers' Conference at Madison, Wisconsin, the latter by the way, referring to what he had discovered outside the boundaries of towns and villages near his own parish. The denominations had deserted their churches. The Rev. E. S. Keeler being absent, owing to the sickness of his child, the Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, though not of the Committee on Tvangelism, spoke extemporaneously on the subject in a satisfactory and complete way.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Planning the Fall Work.

The Diocese of Florida is entering upon its fall work, with the return of the Bishop to the Diocese. Bishop Juhan and his family have been spending the summer months at Sewanee, Tenn., where the Bishop, after his strenuous duties as conference director of the Young People, enjoyed a short vacation. The Bishop returned to Jacksonville on September 7. After a week in Jacksonville he left the city for appointments in the western part of the diocese. From there he expects to attend the special Commission on Rural Work, appointed by the House of Bishops, which will meet in Columbus, Ohio, on September 20, and is expected to reach Jacksonville again on September 24.

A meeting of the various Department Chairmen was held in the headquarters office in Jacksonville, on Monday, September 12. At this meeting plans for the fall work were discussed and the date of the Executive Council meeting set for Tuesday, October 4, in the headquarters, at 8 P. M.

A Doctor's Religion.

Sir Thomas Browne was born on October 19, 1605, and died on October 19, 1682—a remarkable coincidence, the possibility of which he had himself contemplated, when he wrote that, with three hundred and sixty-five days in every year, it would be strange for a man to die on his birthday.

Sir Thomas' birthday—double birthday as he would conceive it, for death to him was but the passing into a far bigger life—fell just one day after the festival of another beloved physician, who, like Sir Thomas, could build immortal prose. St. Luke is the historian both of the Church and of the soul. To his pen we owe the record, not only of our Lord's life and of the Apostolic Church, but also to the story of that soul-tragedy and recovery—the exquisite parable of the prodigal son. Sir Thomas is rather the philosopher, who probes into the mysteries of his own being—the miracle of his own life. Yet he looks outward too. "To thoughtful observers the whole world is one phylactery, and everything we see an item of the wisdom, and power, and goodness of God." For, as he says elsewhere, "there are two books from whence I collect my divinity; besides that written one of God, another of His servant, nature; that universal and public manuscript, that lies expanded unto the eyes of all. Those that never saw Him in the one, have discovered Him in the other".

As a physician Browne was, during his lifetime, famous in Norwich Today he is famous throughout the civilized world for the wonderful, almost fantastic, sweep of his imagination, his rare wisdom, his exquisite charity and quite immortal prose.

He was born in London, and his father died early. When the little son was asleep in his cradle, the old mercer would creep into the night nursery, uncover the child's breast and kiss it, and humbly pray that "the Holy Ghost would at once take possession there". The boy went to Winchester and later, as the tablet in St. Peter Mancroft narrates, graduated at Pembroke College, Oxford in 1626. At once he devoted himself to the study of medicine, and was a student in the most famous schools of France, Italy, and Holland. Finally he settled in Norwich, a stone's throw from his Parish Church of St. Peter Mancroft, where he lies buried. His tablet tells us that he "practis'd Physick in ys City 45 years".

A man's character can be well judged by letters which were never meant for the public eye. That is what makes Pepy's diary so fascinating—its transparent sincerity. Here is part of a letter written by Browne to his sailor son. The father thinks of his son's welfare in its entirety—spiritual, intellectual and physical.

Honest Tom, God bless thee and protect thee. Be diligent in going to church. Be constant, and not negligent in your daily private prayers. Be a good husband. Cast up your accounts with care. Be temperate in diet and be wary not to overheat yourself. Be courteous and civil to all. . . . Point your letters, and put periods at the end of your sentences. Have the love and fear of God ever before your eyes. And may God confirm your faith in Christ. Observe the manner of trade, how they make wine and vinegar. . . . When at sea read good books . . . Learn the stars also the particular coasts; the depths of the roadsteads; the rising and falling of the land. . . I hope you do not forget to carry a Greek Testament always to church: a man learns two things together and profiteth doubly, in the language and the subject. . . You shall never want my daily prayers and also frequent letters.

What a perfect father's letter! And there is a bundle of such written to his two sons.

When Browne was thirty years old, he looked back and, in gratitude to God, cried—"My life is a miracle of thirty years". He recalled his schooldays, his years at Oxford and in the foreign schools. He sees, shining through everything, God's providence and God's grace. "Surely," he writes, "there are in every man's life certain rubs and doublings, and wrenches, which, well examined, do prove the pure hand of God. . . . Those occurrences, which others term crosses, and afflictions, and judgments, and misfortunes, to me they both appear, and in event have ever proved, the secret and dissembled favours of His affection". With a flash of imagination, he refuses to date God's mercy from his nativity. He looks back and back—back to the first man—nay, further back, to the mind of God, before the foundations of the earth were laid.

Because Sir Thomas was so sure of God; because everywhere he saw signs of His mercy, he has a defiant faith. Death—and he lived and moved among dying people and knew the horror of the plague in Norwich—is for the beloved physician, as for the other who recorded Christ's Resurrection, swallowed up in victory. Sir Thomas has been well called, "The very prose laureate of Death".

In expectation of a better, I can with patience embrace this life, yet in my best meditations do often desire death. . . . For a pagan there may be some motives to be in love with life; but for a Christian to be amazed at death, I see not how he can escape this dilemma, that he is too sensible of this life or hopeless of the life to come. A wonderful letter has come down to us in which the doctor writes of a dying patient—a man of under thirty, struck down with galloping consumption. "Upon my first visit I was bold to tell them who had not let fall all hopes of his recovery, that in my sad opinion he was not like to behold a grasshopper, much less to pluck another fig". He speaks of the dying man: "He esteemed his thread long . . . esteeming it enough to approach the years of his Saviour." Then he philosophises thus —"Surely if we deduct all those days of our life, which we might wish unlived . . . If we reckon up only those days which God has accepted in our lives, a life of good years will hardly be a span long. . . He that hath early arrived into the measure of a perfect stature in Christ, hath already fulfilled the prime and longest intention of his being."

And the secret strength of the great man's life was his constant communion with God. Let me close this article, as Sir Thomas would assuredly desire, on that note.

"I cannot contentedly frame a prayer for myself in particular, without a catalogue for my friends; nor request a happiness wherein my sociable disposition doth not desire the fellowship of my neighbor. I never heard the toll of a passing bell, though in my mirth, without my prayers and best wishes for the departing spirit. I cannot go to cure the body of any patient, but I forget my profession, and call unto God for his soul. . . . To pray for enemies, that is, for their salvation, is no harsh precept, but the practice of our daily and ordinary devotions.

He ends one of the most beautiful books in the English languages with this glorious prayer:

"Bless me in this life with but peace of my conscience, command of my affections, the love of Thyself and my dearest friends, and I shall be happy enough to pity Caesar. These are, O Lord, the humble desires of my most reasonable ambition, and all I dare call happiness on earth; wherein I set no rule or limit to Thy hand of Providence; dispose of me according to the wisdom of Thy pleasure, Thy will be done, though in my own undoing."—Canon Meyrick, in The Guardian (English).

Meditations From a Pastor's Diary.

The person who has the disposition to rule or ruin should never be placed in position to rule. Such an attitude disqualifies any one for leadership.

People who will not work unless they are in the lead always make poor leaders. You can always tell how genuine a person's interest is by the way he works when some one else is leading. It is a serious reflection on a man's sincerity when he does less when out of office than when in office.

I have always noticed that when a disgruntled church member lets the devil make him think that if he withdraws from the church it will die, that instead of the church dying, he himself dies.

It is a mistake for any one to become so possessed with a sense of his importance that he goes off and pouts, fancying his church can't get along without him. Quitters never hurt anything but themselves by quitting. When a quitter quits, he simply makes room for a stand-patter to take his place.

I never could understand the attitude of some laymen who have never for a moment felt that God called them into the ministry, and yet who freely dictate to the man called of God as to what he should preach and what his program should be.

I have often noticed that the people who do the least for the church are the ones who have the most to say in criticising what is done by others.

It has often occurred to me that it is absolutely wrong for people, who at best only have a few years to live, to stand in the way of the younger generation who want to follow their vision for progress.

The person who always cries, "Charity should begin at home", is the person who nine times out of ten allows his charity to begin and end with himself.—The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Trust the Great Artist.

Trust the Great Artist. He
Who paints the sky and sea
With shadowed blue, who clothes the land
In garb of green, and in the spring
Sets all earth blossoming—
He guides your destiny.

The magic hand
That colors dawn with flaming rose,
That ere the falling night,
For every soul's delight,
Pours out the streaming gold—
That hand, too, holds your life.

His grasp, amid the strife,
Would shape you to His will:
Let Him His wish fulfill.
What though the testings irk,
Fret not; mar not His work.

Trust the Great Artist; He
Who made the earth and sea.
—Thomas Curtis Clark, in The Living Church.

Views on the Rural Church.

Two years ago a group of some forty rural clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church started something. I was innocently selected as one of the "faculty" of the Wisconsin Rural Church Summer School, and they were in that school. Those men were here for business. It did not take them long to make that fact clear to the faculty. They were after every practical suggestion that could enable them to be more efficient and more able ministers in the rural field. They were not concerned about the city church. They had caught the vision of the great opportunities for the Episcopal Church in the rural field. They saw what too many ministers fail to see—they saw the rural field as a specialized department for the Church to recognize, and not a mere stepping-stone to a city pastorate.

It was not until I fell among this group of rural clergy of the Episcopal Church that I really began to have any hope for the rural church. They were thinking along the same lines that I had been thinking. They were pondering over the same problems that I have been seeing in my community studies. They were working on programs for extending Christ's work, not short time, temporary programs, but the sort of programs a man maps out for himself when a man expects to live with his job.

Thus a movement has been launched in the Episcopal Church that is bound to have a far-reaching effect upon the religious life of the country. It is bound to extend the influence of the Church. I believe it will also tend to correct a tendency that is developing in many of the towns and city parishes, i. e., over emphasis on the preaching to the sacrifice of the personal work.

The rural pastors are studying their fields of service. They are exchanging experiences. They are adopting the slogan of the Canadian Mounted, "Get your man". This means a great deal of personal service.

Like health work, there is much that must be done group-wise; but no matter how efficient the public health regulation, folks get sick and need a physician. So it is in spiritual health. In these days of rush and push, of rapid changes and tense living the soul gets sick. Only a personal treatment will reach the ill. The Church cannot follow the example of large scale industry. It advertises to sell its sermons, but personal service seldom comes that way.

Here, then, in personal service, is where the country church is on its guard. Here is where it is holding a stronger foundation for the future. Here is where the country pastor is becoming specialist of a high order. There are many country churches that might well be taken as examples by the large city churches.—The Rural Messenger.

The Sensitive Child.

One thing that most people do to the super-sensitive child is to make him more sensitive. Some children are naturally self-conscious; others become sensitive through sickness or because of some physical deformity.

David, who was somewhat frail, was one of a family having three other boys, all very strong. David's mother wanted a little girl and so she proceeded to make one of David. She bought him little pink slippers instead of shoes, in defiance of the fact that he lived in the country; prohibited him from going anywhere alone and cautioned him so much that he became afraid of horses, cows and dogs; and she continued calling him baby names even after he started to school.

He was so babied by his probably well-meaning mother and so teased by his brothers that he grew super-sensitive and very unlike the other boys. He became self-conscious when looked at or spoken to and was frail and thin from too much confinement in the house. His mother should have allowed him to "run" as she did her other boys and then David would have been as normal and healthy a lad as each of them turned out to be.

I knew another child, Donald, who grew quiet and unconfiding when with his family because when he was very young no attention was paid to the little things that he talked about. When he would speak of the objects around him which he had observed—often for the first time—some member of the family would say, "Oh, that is nothing new. I knew that ages ago." They did not intend to be unkind, but they did discourage any attempt at conversation that he offered so that he finally came to the table, gulped down his food, asked to be excused and hastened away to play with outside companions. Donald is grown up now, but he still has the habit of eating dinner, at home, practically in silence; when he goes out, he proves excellent company. Every member of a family should have his "say" in the flow of family conversation.

If a child has any physical deformities, they should never be mentioned. Friends who call and offer pity should be told privately not to do so before the child, lest it cause him to seek seclusion, feeling strongly that somehow he is "different".

Jim had one leg left shorter than the other by infantiles paralysis. His family never mentioned it in public nor in any way alluded to the fact that he was "a little lame boy". They did, however, all they could to correct the deformity.

Jim became a leader with his "crowd". He danced, swam, played golf and tennis and could do most of the things that the others did just a little better than they. Probably not half of them ever noticed the slight limp that Jim had, because he was entirely unconscious of it himself. He would have been an entirely different fellow if the family had taught him that he was "different" and could not do what other children could do.—John Faux Douglas.

The Reality of the Love of Christ.

Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, writes of the perils and terrible trials of his struggles in Central Africa: "Those whose faith in God is strong feel a sense of security in the deepest wilds. An invisible Good Influence surrounds them, to whom they may appeal in distress, an Influence which inspires noble thoughts, comfort in grief, resolution when weakened by misfortune. I imperfectly understand this myself, but I know when I have called I have been answered, strengthened and assisted. It was of benefit to myself and to others." This experience might be confirmed in fuller expression from the testimony of many a saintly writer; but this from one not conscious of saintliness, or of having a message for others, has its peculiar value. It is the unconscious testimony of a strong man, living the most strenuous life, to the reality of the love of Christ as an abiding presence, as an atmosphere in which alone he found he could face the daily task and meet the constantly recurring peril.—Stimson.

One Sign of God's Love.

"God's friendliness to man and beast is expressed in common grass, whose color is so restful to the eye.

Sown by the winds and by wandering birds, it softens the rude outlines of the world. It invades the solitudes of the deserts, climbs the inaccessible slopes of mountains, modifies, climates, and determines the history and character and destiny of nations.

Fields trampled with battle, saturated with blood, torn with the ruts of cannon, grow green again with grass, and carnage is forgotten.

It yields no fruit in earth or air, and yet should its harvest fail for a single year famine would depopulate the earth."

No Distant Lord.

No distant Lord have I,
Loving afar to be;
Made flesh for me, He cannot rest
Until He rests in me.

Brother in joy and pain,
Bone of my bone was He,
Now—intimacy closer still,
He dwells Himself in me.

I need not journey far
This dearest Friend to see;
Companionship is always mine,
He makes His home with me.

The Touch of His Hand.

Ellen Stone, Age 12.

Around Him little children stand;
They push and pull and fight,
To feel the wonderful touch of His hand
Which makes them feel His might.

He patiently blesses each little child
And pats each tiny head,
A touch that stayed, though mild,
Through life as though it were lead.

The parents walk away
Full of happiness and joy,
For did they not that very day
See our Saviour bless their girl or boy?

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Call of Jesus.

M. L. G.

Two fishermen were mending their nets. Jesus called from the shore, and they left their nets and followed Him. Matthew sat at his counting table, and him, too, Jesus called, and he rose from his degrading task to become the apostle of the Master. One He saw under the fig tree, two as He passed along the Capernaum streets. They left their old life, and began another—so full, so absorbing, so far-reaching that if they had been spirits on another sphere there would have been little more of difference from the old.

They learned of Jesus, they saw the Life of lives; some saw Him transfigured, all but the one unfaithful saw Him risen. They became fishers of men, shepherds under the Chief Shepherd. They bore persecution, and counted it joy to suffer for His sake. Life, more abundant than ever they had dreamed, was theirs.

Jesus still calls "Follow Me"! And to all who hear that Voice He gives the same overflowing life and power. No one can know what great works He may have for some boy or girl of this time to do for Him. Only we know there are tasks still to be done, which call for all the best that is in any one of us, and that with the task will come the outpoured power, the more and yet more abundant Life!

The Tea Party.

"May I go?" pleaded Clarice as her mother came out of the house all dressed for a walk. "I'll be just as good as anything, an' I'll not bover a single little bit."

Mrs. Adams smiled lovingly at her small daughter.

"Indeed I know you wouldn't bother," she smiled, "and I should like to take you along, but it is not possible today, besides I want you to do something for me. Nora is busy in the kitchen, and so I cannot trouble her, but you are playing here on the lawn, and I wish you would watch for Mr. Jenks, the postman, and give him this letter, and ask him to take care of it for me as soon as he can, for it is very important."

"But, Mummy," pouted Clarice, "if I can't go with you, I want to go over and play with Janet Clark. She has a new doll's tea-set and we can have a make-believe party, she said."

"No, dear," Mrs. Adams replied, "not this morning. I happen to know that Mrs. Clark has a headache, and I'm afraid you children might disturb her. Remain here, watch for the postman, and do not go out of our yard."

Clarice couldn't see what harm it would do, just to run over to Janet's and tell her she couldn't come, so she went slowly down the walk which led from the front steps.

Then something inside of her seemed to say, "Oh, Clarice—Clarice", and the little girl turned and walked even more slowly back toward the porch steps. She sat down on the lowest one and began to think.

What was it, that her Daddy said just the other night, about it not being right to do things when we feel guilty and do not want to be caught. And there was something about God watching us especially, at such times, and feeling very, very sorry, if we keep on and do what we should not.

Clarice couldn't remember just what the rest of it was, but it was suddenly very clear. It would be wrong to go to Janet's even for just a few minutes.

It seemed as if the postman would never come, so Clarice thought she would take her own little broom and brush off the porch and straighten the rugs and make it very neat. That would help Nora and her mother, too.

Clarice began to feel happier—and why, what was this?

Something caught the light of the sun and sent out a little fan of golden rays.

Clarice moved the big chair, although it took all her strength, but there, back of it and caught in a wide crack, was her lovely little locket which she had lost some time ago and felt so badly about.

She worked the locket out of the crevice gently, so as not to mar it and was delighted to see it wasn't injured at all. And there was Mr. Jenks at last, and he took the letter and message and went on quickly.

Just then some one came through the hedge. It was Janet.

"I've come to play tea party," she cried. "Muvver said I could."

"And Nora is baking cookies," exclaimed Clarice, "and she'll give us some."

That night when Clarice went to bed, she was very thoughtful and quiet.

"A penny for your thoughts, daughter," laughed her mother.

"I thought I was having an awful hard time," dimpled Clarice, "when I couldn't go with you or to Janet's house either, but Mummy, I had the nicest time after all and found my locket, too."—Selected.

The Littlest Page.

Once upon a time there lived a little Princess named Veridian. Six pages always attended her. Every afternoon she read history from a big book. She read aloud for practice and to educate the pages. The Littlest Page always stood on guard at the door. He liked the parts about battles, but he did wish the Princess would skip the treaties: they always made him sleepy.

One day she came to one treaty after another. The Littlest Page didn't even listen. He was thinking that the afternoon was going very slowly.

"Oh, sugar! I skipped a line," said the Princess, and she went back two.

"Sugar!" thought the Littlest Page. "How I wish I had a sugar cookie! Or a raisin one! Or one with nuts!"

The more he thought about it the more he wanted one. Finally he got so hungry he opened the door very quietly and slipped out. He tiptoed down the stairs and went straight to the royal kitchen. There was no one there but the Assistant Soup Cook, and he was fast asleep.

Now the Littlest Page knew that if he woke him up an dasked ever so politely for a cookie he would be allowed to choose two, for the cooks were always kind to the pages. But the Littlest Page was greedy, and when he saw that no one was around he tiptoed across the big kitche nand gently turned the pantry door knob. The door was unlocked, but the hinges creaked dreadfully; so he opened it just wide enough for one small page.

There on the top shelf stood all the cookie jars neatly labeled, and the Littlest Page climbed right up to the top shelf—it's lucky they were good, strong shelves. I couldn't tell you how many cookies he ate, but he sampled them all. He didn't even stop to brush the crumbs off his face.

Suddenly he saw a strange sight. He saw the lids move off two of the big flour barrels in the kitchen and two strange men look carefully about over the tops of them. They were very rough-looking men. They stretched, and then they whispered together. And what do you think they whispered about? They were robbers, and they were planning to steal the royal jewels that very night. The Littlest Page was so scared that he couldn't move. Supposing they should look up and see him? He wished he'd closed the pantry door! He wished he'd never wanted a cookie! He wished they'd go away!

Presently the Assistant Soup Cook stirred in his sleep, and the robbers popped into their barrels again. For a while the Littlest Page was too frightened to think. But all was so still in the kitchen that he grew brave, scrambled down and, all in a tremble, crept very, very carefully on his tiptoes out of the kitchen. The Assistant Soup Cook was still fast asleep.

Once in the corridor the Littlest Page ran as fast as his legs would carry him straight to the King. The King was playing chess with the Prime Minister. They were astonished to see a pale little page standing in the doorway with ginger cookie crumbs on his face and a sugar cookie in his hand.

"Oh, Your Majesty!" cried the Littlest Page, completely forgetting to bok, "there are two robbers in the flour barrels, and they are going to steal the crown jewels tonight!"

"Dear me," said the King, "they'll get the flour all dirty."

"You've been eating cookies," said the Prime Minister.

"So you have," said the King, "and no one is supposed to eat cookies at this time in the afternoon. Supposing you finish that cookie and then tell us how you know there are robbers in the flour barrels."

The Littlest Page began to cry. "Please, Your Majesty, I don't want any more cookies—ever!" he said.

Then he told them the whole story from the very beginning, when he had tiptoed across the kitchen, opened the pantry door and climbed way up to the very top shelf, where all the cookie jars were neatly arranged. When he finished the King sent a dozen guardsmen t osearch the flour barrels. There they caught the two robbers. How excited everybody was! The Littlest Page was quite a hero.

But he didn't feel a bit like one. The Littlest Page had a pain. The Court Doctor gave him something from a big spoon that tasted very bad and put him to bed. He dreamt of pantries full of cookie jars that all had robbers in them.

And that is why the Littlest Page stays so still now every afternoon while the Princess reads history, and that is why he never wants cookies between meals.—Youth's Companion.

When the Maybes Swarm.

When the cold weather goes with its shivery snows
And the buds open wide to the spring,
Then the maybes fly free, and they call you and me
To the out-of-door pleasures they bring.

Maybe ball, maybe fishing or tennis you're wishing—
The maybes are all sorts and kinds;
Maybe skipping or racing, or butterfly-chasing
For those who have studious minds.

Maybe kites, maybe flowers, will please you for hours.
If, maybe, you tire of games,
There are thousands of maybes, besides busy play-bes.
That have no description or names.

—Youth's Companion.

When Herbert Filled the Wood Box.

Herbert went reluctantly about gathering up wood and cobs. "Oh, dear," he thought to himself, "if only I didn't always have so many chores to do! Seems as if the wood-box was always empty, though I know I fill it often enough."

In the wood-box went the wood and cobs, and Herbert turned about to face his mother.

"Just another arm-load, please," said mother gently. "I want a fire all day to make apple butter."

"All right," answered Herbert with a brave little smile. But underneath the smile there were cross, complaining thoughts, such as these: "I hate chores, and I hate filling the wood-box. And when winter comes, there will be more chores, and, O dear, I wish I could have a new sled for next winter!"

Out to the wood-pile he ran, and soon another arm-load was picked up. But listen! what was this? A faint, far-away sound seemed to come from the wood-pile. Herbert dropped the wood and knelt down, peering cautiously about. Then suddenly he arose and clasped his hands. "Turkeys!" he exclaimed in gleeful tones. "The turkey hen has hid her nest away and hatched some baby turkeys."

As fast as he could he ran to the house.

"Oh, come see the surprise!" he shouted. "I've found a nest of baby turkeys!"

Mother looked up from the apple she was peeling. "I knew the turkeys were there all the time—ten of them," she said, smiling, "and I've kept the secret because I meant to give them to you as a surprise. If you wish, you may sell them later and use the money to buy a new coaster. What does my son say to that?"

"Oh, mother, you are so good!" said Herbert joyously.

"You see," mother went on, "I appreciate how good my boy is to fill the wood-box so often without grumbling."

For a moment Herbert's face flushed with shame. Then two little arms went tight about mother's neck. "Oh, mother," he cried, "I did grumble 'bout filling the wood-box, not out loud so you could hear, but inside. But from now on there is not going to be any grumbling of any kind, because I'll be too busy filling the wood-box and tending the turkeys."—Word and Way.

Donkey Pictures.

When mother tucks me in my bed
And my ev'ning prayers have said,
She makes fine pictures on the wall,
And one I like the best of all,
I ask her for 'most ev'ry night—
A donkey picture that can't bite.

He opens wide his mouth, and I
Just push my finger in. And my!
He snaps his jaws just dreadfully
But doesn't hurt a bit, you see,
Then mother laughs and 'fore I know
That naughty donkey's grabbed my toe.

I pull my foot up under me
And right there on the wall I see
That self-same donkey laughing now,
Just 'cause I hollered, "Ow-oo-ow"!
Then mother kisses me good-night
And finally turns out the light.

The Runaway Feet.

Dorothy came running in from her play in the yard.

"Mother, where is Margaret going?" she asked.

"She is going over to play for an hour with Clara."

"May I go, too?" asked Dorothy. "Please, Mother, please say 'Yes'."

"You know, Dorothy," said Mother, "you are not allowed to go out on the street by yourself, and Margaret is there by this time. You will have to stay with Mother now. Margaret won't be gone long, anyway. Run back to your play in the yard."

After a little while, Mother looked out into the yard, but there was no Dorothy there. Then Mother looked all over the house, but could not find Dorothy any place.

Then she went over to Clara's house and rang the bell; and, when Clara's mother came to the door, Mother asked, "Have you a little girl that does not belong here?"

"Why, yes," said Clara's mother, "a little girl just came." Then she turned and called, "Dorothy, your mother wants you."

Dorothy came to the door, and said, "Why, Mother, what do you want"?

"I want you, Dorothy. Come home with me," said Mother, and took hold of Dorothy's hand, and they started home.

On the way home, Dorothy talked as fast as ever she could, and she said, "Mother, why don't you talk? Why don't you say something to me?"

"Mother feels too bad to talk, dear. She is feeling bad because you let your feet carry you away when Mother told you to stay at home."

When they got home, Mother said, "I'll have to fix those feet, Dorothy, so they can't take you away again. Sit down in your little chair."

So Dorothy sat down in her little chair, and Mother got a piece of strong cord, and tied Dorothy's feet tightly together.

At first, Dorothy thought it was a new game, and she laughed. After her feet were tied, and she tried to stand up, she found she could move them just a little, and she started to walk.

"Here, here, that will never do," said Mother. "Your feet could take you away, tied like that. We must tie them more tightly than that."

So Dorothy sat down again in her chair, and Mother tied the cord so tight this time that Dorothy nearly fell over on her nose when she tried to stand up again. And she did not laugh any more.

"How long will I have to stay here, Mother?" she asked.

"I don't know, dear. You have to stay until you are sure you can keep your feet from taking you away again when Mother tells you not to go."

After a little while, Margaret came home. "Why, Dorothy, what are you doing, sitting there with your feet tied like that?" she asked. But Dorothy did not say a word. "Mother, why are Dorothy's feet tied?" asked Margaret.

"Because they made her run away this afternoon," said Mother.

Then Aunt Mae came home. When Dorothy saw her coming, she tried to pull her dress over the cord, so Aunt Mae could not see that her feet were tied. "Baby girl, why are you sitting there so quiet?" asked Aunt Mae.

But Dorothy did not say a word; and Aunt Mae looked at Mother, and Mother said, "Dorothy's feet made her run away this afternoon, so they had to be tied together."

"Oh, I see," said Aunt Mae.

And then Daddy came home. "Hello, what does this mean?" he said, when he saw Dorothy sitting so quietly in her chair, with her feet tied together. But Dorothy did not say a word. "Mother, why are Dorothy's feet tied together?" asked Daddy.

"They had to be tied because they made her run away this afternoon," said Mother.

So Dorothy sat there a long, long time. Then she called, "Mother, please come here".

And, when Mother came, Dorothy reached up and pulled Mother's face down close to hers, and whispered, "Mother, I know I can keep my feet from taking me away again."

"Are you sure, Dorothy?" asked Mother.

"Yes, I know I can," said Dorothy.

So Mother untied Dorothy's feet, and they never made her run away again. —Bertha Baldwin Tralle, Stories New and Stories True.

Couldn't Take Them Back.

Molly had worn her little ruby ring to school and now it was gone.

"And I know it's that little new girl that's taken it. She looks as if she would do things like that!" So, she cast suspicious eyes at the poor little stranger, and the other girls did the same, and no one spoke to her or noticed her as she crept about the school or the playground alone. Then one day Molly opened a little compartment in her pencil box, and there lay her ruby ring. "Oh!" she cried, her cheeks flaming with shame, "I remember now, I put it there myself to keep it safe, and to think—"

Of course, they couldn't take back all the unkind glances and the cold words they had given the little stranger, but they did try so hard to make amends that she soon forgave them for their unjust suspicions.—Jewels.

No Loose Ends.

Louise was spending a week with her Great-Aunt Hilda, who weaves beautiful rag rugs. "You work every minute, auntie," she said.

"Not quite that, but I'm doing something most of the time. I don't like to leave anything at loose ends."

The words puzzled Louise a little, but watching the brisk old lady made them clear. Aunt Hilda had picked up the rug she just cut from the loom. At each end there was a fringe of warp about three inches long. Aunt Hilda made these ends even and began knotting the warp fringe in groups of six strands. When this was done she rolled the rug and laid it away.

"Suppose you brush up the litter and then we'll go in the other room," she said.

Louise likes to sweep, but sometimes she does not remember to put her broom and dustpan away! This time she did, because she knew just how auntie herself would have done. "I didn't have any loose ends," she told herself proudly as she went to sit beside Aunt Hilda, who had taken her mending basket now. That made Louise recall that she, too, had stockings to darn.

"It's good for me to visit Aunt Hilda," she thought, for she is wise enough to see that she has a habit of leaving many things unfinished. What trouble both she and brother Carl have because of the things they "leave at loose ends". Much of their work and even their play has to be done over because of being left like that scarf the kitten raveled so easily. Aunt Hilda knows better than to make herself so much extra work. Everything she does counts, because it is finished right.

Fretful hours, shame and danger still come from leaving things unfinished. Girls and boys are wise to train themselves to better ways. The difference will show quickly and will also be a help to them their whole lives long.—The Lutheran.

Deaths

BAGBY: Entered into eternal rest in Richmond Virginia, September 15, 1927, in the 86th year of her age, LUCY PARKE CHAMBERLAYNE, widow of Dr. George W. Bagby and daughter of Dr. Lewis Webb Chamberlayne and Martha Burwell Dabney. "Her children rise up and call her blessed."

WHITTLE: Entered into Life Eternal, on Septmber 13, 1927, LUCY WHITTLE, daughter of the late Francis M. Whittle and Caroline Walke Whittle, his wife, also deceased.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

FRANCIS LEE DAINGERFIELD.

FRANCIS LEE DAINGERFIELD, son of Edward Lonsdale Daingerfield and Sarah Vowell Smith, of Alexandria, Virginia, died suddenly of heart trouble at his home, "Malvern", in the 44th year of his age, on the 8th of August, 1927.

He was born in Alexandria July 16, 1883, a golden-haired, rosy-cheeked boy, the idol of his devoted parents who cherished and loved him from the earliest days of his infancy. From his childhood he showed marked talent for electricity, drawing and architecture. He manifested much taste in writing and literature from the days of his young manhood and began to compose poems which were published and admired and was a frequent contributor to magazines of the highest class. He was educated at the well-known Episcopal High School near Alexandria, and later he became an excellent linguist. During the days of the "Great War" he did splendid work in the Renconstruction Department in Washington, especially among those who were blinded in battle.

He came from a long and distinguished ancestry. On his father's side the Bathursts, Lousdales and Kays in England. On his mother's side, Francis Lightfoot Lee, Philip Ludwell Lee, Augustine Warner, Speaker of the House of Burgesses, the Jacquelines and Corbins, Jacob Fowle, of Boston, whose portrait, painted by Copley in 1757—his third great-grandfather—and Lettice Lee and Dr. William Henry Daingerfield, painted at Arlington by George Washington Parke Custis, his intimate friend.

No one was too humble to be his friend, both white and colored, and like his parents he gave lavishly, but only he and they knew it. He was elected, in his father's place as trustee of the Alexandria Hospital, which institution his father gave to the city of Alexandria, his old home and his grandfather, John Bathurst Daingerfield's, the humble gentleman, the poor mans' friend, donor of the City Town Clock and Belfry, and unnamed charities.

His friends said of him, "Frank can do anything, and has a heart of pure gold" I have seen him step around a wild flower—that he might not crush it As tender as a woman, with a splendid statue of a man, and strikingly handsome.

He was a Christian, a deep student of the Bible, broad minded and generous, a communicant of St. Paul's Church. I, his sister, though we were everything to each other, am content to have him on that other shore, where he has now passed to the service and sunlight of his God.

"Thanks be to God for His Unspeakable Gift."

"Because they live, though out of sight and reach,
I will, so help me God, live bravely, too,
Taking the Road with Laughter and gay Speech
Alert, intent to give Life all its due."

The solemn, uplifting service of the Church of his fathers and of his love was read over him by his friends, Bishop Tucker, of Virginia, and the Rev. S. A. Wallis, D. D. And then he was laid to rest on a beautiful and sacred summer day beside his dear father and mother, amidst the roses he loved so well.

MARY H. DAINGERFIELD.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

tel on October 5 and 6. This conference will open with a Corporate Communion service in the little Chapel of St. Paul's-by-the-Sea, at Jacksonville Beach, after which the clergy of the diocese will be taken to the Atlantic Beach Hotel for their two days' sessions.

Student Work.

The student work, now undertaken in the two state universities under the joint direction of the Diocese of Florida and South Florida, have already begun to function. The Rev. Melville E. Johnson, student pastor at the University of Florida, in Gainesville, and Miss Hope Baskette, student worker at the Florida State College for Women, in Tallahassee, were both in residence last week when the colleges opened up for their 1927-28 terms. Already there are student centers for the Episcopal workers in both Gainesville and Tallahassee, but these are not considered altogether adequate to meet the great opportunities presented by these institutions. A joint committee from both the Florida Dioceses has already been appointed and before long it is expected that this will be greatly enlarged.

For the second time in the current year the diocese announces the sending of one of her children to the far-away mission field. Through the Committee on the Gift of Life, of the Woman's Auxiliary, Miss Irene V. Gleaton went to the General Church Hospital in Wrangle, Alaska, last February, and is doing splendid work at that point under Bishop Rowe; and Miss Ava Hamilton Seabrook will commence her work as a teacher in the House of the Holy Child, Manila, Philippine Islands, on October 1. Both of these young women are communicants of St. John's Church, Jacksonville.

The Rev. Randolph F. Blackford, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Panama City, and other charges in Western Florida, is one of the party of the American Legion now visiting in Paris and attending the convention of that body. Mrs. Blackford accompanied him.

The Rev. Edgar L. Pennington, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jacksonville, has just returned to Florida from a delightful trip to Europe.

Miss Margaret G. Weed, the President of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council, has spent the last two months in Europe and is expected home in the near future.

J. O. M. C.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton. D. D., Bishop.

The Bishop Has a Busy Summer.

Since Easter the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, D. D., has made forty-three visitations within his diocese, conducting services, preaching, confirming and holding conferences. Besides these visitations he has kept a number of engagements outside the diocese.

With all of the extra work placed upon him, due to several circumstances, the Bishop is in the best of health, and as active as ever.

Being the President of the Fourth Province, he has recently been busy in preparation for the meeting of the Province, which takes place in Columbus, Georgia, October 25 to 27.

Resumes Services.

After an absence of seven months, due to a major operation, the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, resumed his labors on Sunday, September 3. He has also resumed the secretaryship of the diocese; the editorship of the Diocesan News and the diocesan correspondship for the general Church papers.

Fall Convocation.

The fall convocation of the diocese will meet in Calvary Church, Ashland, Ky., Tuesday and Wednesday, October 11 and 12.

The general theme or topic for this meeting will be: "The Church's Mission," the Rev. Karl Block, D. D., of St. Louis, as the leader and principal speaker.

There will also be conferences on missions, religious education and social service.

Mission Purchases a Lot.

The mission at Pikeville, under the leadership of the Rev. C. M. Lever, has secured a desirable lot and will begin to secure funds for a building.

The Pike County News has this to say about this mission: "Though the Episcopal Church here is only a few months' old and has but a small band of members, these members have an exceptionally loyal and ambitious spirit and are to be commended on reaching the point of having their own church building so early. At present they are using the band-stand for their services."

Will Occupy New G. F. S. Building.

When the Girls' Friendly Society of Trinity Church, Covington, resumes its work this fall it will use for the first time the new hall recently given to the society by Miss Mary Cabell Richardson. The new building is connected with the church on the north side.

Personal Notes

The Rev. J. S. Watt has resigned the charge of Cornwall Parish, Drakes Branch, Virginia, and accepted a call to Nottoway Parish, Southampton County, both in the Diocese of Southern Virginia. He will enter upon his new charge on October 2. His address will be Franklin, Virginia.

The Rev. Edward McCready Claytor, minister-in-charge of Trinity Church, Edgefield and adjacent stations in South Carolina, Diocese of Upper South Carolina, has accepted the call to become minister-in-charge of St. Paul's Church, Quincy, Florida, and will assume his new duties on October 15.

The Rev. Glen Beam Walter has resigned as rector of Christ Church, Springfield, Mo., and accepted a call to be the rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, Pa. He will take up his new work October 1. The Rev. Mr. Walter is a son of the Archdeacon of the Diocese of Bethlehem.

The Rev. J. Harry Chesley, of the Class of '78, Theological Seminary in Virginia, and now vicar of Christ Church, Cordele, Diocese of Georgia, will retire on November 1, 1927. After October 15, his address will be Newark, Delaware.

The Rev. T. N. Lawrence, rector of St. Mary's Church, Bellville, Texas, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Macon, Georgia, and expects to enter upon his duties there on the first Sunday in October.

The Rev. James Mills has resigned the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., and will become the Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City, Okla., on October 1. His address will be 127 West Seventh Street, Oklahoma City.

The Rev. J. Bleadon Meyer, D. D., has been appointed missionary in charge of the Kemmerer field, in the Missionary District of Wyoming.

The Rev. Basil M. Walton, rector of St. Paul's Church, Orange, Texas, Diocese of Texas, has accepted a call to become priest-in-charge of St. James' Church, Lake City, Florida, and will assume his new duties on October 1.

The Rev. William A. Thomas has been appointed missionary of the Jackson Hole Missions, in the Missionary District of Wyoming.

The Rev. Thomas E. Winecoff has resigned from St. James' Mission, Riverton, Wyoming, and accepted a call to the Church of the Good Shepherd, Scranton, Pa. He is to take up his work the second Sunday in October.

ORDINATIONS.

On Sunday morning, September 11, the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Florida, ordained to the diaconate Mr. Sidney M. Hopson, of Leesburg, Fla., in St. Mark's Church, Ortega. Mr. Hopson was presented by the rector of St. Mark's Church, the Rev. Douglas B. Leatherbury.

Mr. Hopson graduated last June from the Philadelphia Divinity School. He has already assumed charge of the work at Bethany Hall, Hilliard, Fla., and at St. George's, Fort George Island, both charges being adjacent to Jacksonville. He will reside at Hilliard.

On Wednesday, September 14, at St. Mary's Church, North East, Md., Diocese of Easton, the Rev. David L. Quinn was made deacon by the Rt. Rev. Geo. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. J. Frederic Virgin, rector of Trinity Church, Elkton, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Edmund H. Gibson, rector of Trinity Church, Baltimore. The Rev. Delber W. Clark, rector of St. John's Church, Crisfield, read the prayers, and the Rev. R. M. D. Adams, the Epistle. A large number of the clergy of the diocese was present. Mr. Quinn will continue to be in charge of North Elk Parish, where he has worked for the past two or three years.

A luncheon was served by the ladies of the parish to all visiting clergy and friends.

In St. George's Church, Passaic, N. J., on September 8, the Rev. Wesley H. Des Jardins was made deacon by Bishop Stearly. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Albert J. M. Wilson, rector of St. John's Parish, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Edgar L. Cook of St. Paul's, Jersey City, by whom Mr. Des Jardins, formerly a minister of the Baptist Church, was presented for Confirmation. The Rev. H. M. Ladd, Archdeacon of Paterson, said the Litany and the Epistle was read by the Rev. John E. Bailey. Mr. Des Jardins will continue to be in charge of St. George's Mission.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Charles F. Sweet, D. D., for twenty-six years one of the Church's missionaries in Japan, died in Peekskill, New York, September 10, at the age of seventy-two years.

Going to Japan in 1896, Dr. Sweet became a member of the staff of Trinity Catechetical School, which later developed into the Central Theological College of the Church in Japan. He therefore had an opportunity for sharing in the training of several generations of theological students.

Dr. Sweet worked on in Japan for several years beyond the retiring age and only gave up his work when seriously impaired health made it necessary for him to do so.

Born in Owego, New York, Dr. Sweet was educated in Ithaca Academy and Cornell College. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1881 by Bishop Seymour, of the Diocese of Springfield. He served at St. Thomas' Church, Methuen, Mass., and later was principal of the Diocesan School for Boys in Maine.

Among Dr. Sweet's important writtings were a biography of Dr. John Henry Hopkins, and a volume on Japan, entitled: "New Life in the Oldest Empire".

Mrs. William Lawrence, wife of the Rt. Rev. Wm. Lawrence, D. D., retired Bishop of Massachusetts, died at her home in Readville, on Wednesday, September 7, after an illness of some months.

The burial service took place on Friday, September 9, from the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. The services were conducted by the Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Samuel G. Babcock, D. D., and the Dean of the Cathedral, the Very Rev. P. F. Sturgis. Others assisting were the Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, and the Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, rector of Trinity Church, Boston. Interment took place immediately afterwards in Mt. Auburn Cemetery. The committal was said at the graveside by Mrs. Lawrence's own sons.

EVER BEEN SO DEEP IN DEBT THAT YOU COULDN'T SEE DAYLIGHT

No? Then you are either lucky or wise. Lucky because some one's saving made you independent, or wise because you have been taught the value of saving and practice it.

We would like you to learn the value of saving by our Income Building Plan. The plan is this: You deposit in a savings account any amount you can, or a part of each pay, regularly. When $100 is saved it is at once invested in first mortgage six per cent bonds. Interest on the bonds with your deposits and interest on them goes to make the next $100 to buy another bond, and so it grows.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

God never demands the impossible.

The only doubts to be ashamed of are those you are proud of.

Spiritual indifference is often only mental indolence.

The heart without the offering is better than the offering without the heart.

A man who knows how to forget, is never burdened with a grudge.

"Humility is not crouching in servility or cowardice, but being men after the pattern of our Master."

"Experience will decide
How blessed are they and only they,
Who in His truth confide."

Never be ashamed to own that you have been in the wrong, which is but saying that you are wiser today than you were yesterday.

Every stage in the life of a saint is of inestimable interest to God. None more so than when their road of life dips down in the dark ravine we call death.

He hath given us a changeless writing,
Royal decrees that light and gladness bring,
Signed with His Name in glorious writing,
Sealed on our hearts with His own signet ring.

We need not go to Nazareth, to Capernaum, or to Bethany, in order to walk in the steps of Jesus. We shall find His footsteps beside the sick bed, in the hovels of poverty, in the crowded alleys of the great city, and in every place where there are human hearts in need of consolation. In doing as Jesus did when on earth, we shall walk in His steps.—Selected.

"I never saw a moor,
I never saw the sea,
Yet know I what the heather is like
And what a wave must be.
I never talked with God,
Nor visited in heaven,
Yet certain am I of the spot,
As if the chart were given."

It tis no heroism to bear patiently where there is no provocation, bravely where there is no danger, calmly where there is nothing to perturb. Not the hermit's cave but the heart of busy life, tests as well as makes character. If we can live patiently, lovingly, cheerfully amid all our frets and irritations day after day, year after year, that is grander heroism than the greatest military exploits.—I. R. Miller.

As a subject petitioning a ruler, as a plaintiff pleading before a judge, as a friend making known his need to a friend, and a child crying to a father, every Christian has a right to pray. To pray in the name of Jesus Christ is to be indued with the power of the King of all the universe, to receive pardon from the "Judge of all the earth", to be supplied with the bounty of the richest friend in all the world, and to have the constant care of a loving Father.—A. C. Dixon.

THOUGHTS ON EVANGELISM

Evangelism is becoming a more popular word in our Church than formerly. There is much danger that some shall take it out in talking and be satisfied with good definitions and worthy intentions. They use such material for the paving stones of the broad way. A certain worker was attending a conference on The Way to Reach Individuals. One dinner period, while he was full of plans and suggestions, his father who did not seem to be paying much attention to them at all, said, "I have been speaking to the waiter and I believe that he is anxious to follow Christ".

We do not believe that it will win an easy popularity. If the word does win such superficial acceptance it will not be real Evangelism. The real thing requires searching personal preparation. We do not mean acquaintance with the facts about the Church and its history, and things of that sort. That may be very well in its place, but it is all dead if the worker has not been prepared in heart and life. He has to be thoroughly consecrated before he can set any one else on fire. Any sin persisted in will bar the way to effective service. No service without sacrifice. First be reconciled to thy brother. Sin acts as a barrier between us and the person we are touching. They sense the barrier and even though they should not, God cannot use an unconsecrated life. It is possible and we ought to hope that a great number of people shall catch this truth, but if they do it will be because they have been willing to pay the price. We can let down the bars and confirm people who have not the slightest idea what it is all about, but God is not impressed. He is not forced to use a person just because we have let him in, and He will not use them until they have surrendered.

The second reason why we do not believe that a superficial Evangelism will work is that any evangelistic movement will have to make headway against an enormous amount of spiritual inertia among us, and it will take some real steam to overcome this drag. Some one has divided Christians into three classes. Row boat Christians, who have to be rowed, and who can make little headway against the tide, sail boat Christians who go only when the wind is favorable, and steam boat Christians who go forward no matter what the wind and tide. The inertia is produced by the first two varieties who have to be towed along by some one else. One idea of pastoral visiting is generated by this type of Christian life. In it the pastor is supposed, by the influence of his personality, the persuasiveness of his speech, and the diplomacy of his actions, by these means he is supposed to keep the wheels of the parish organization functioning. He is expected to stir up those to whom the hot weather brings temptation to worship God in the great open spaces, to calm the ruffled feelings of the outraged pew holder who has been offended because a stranger has gotten into the wrong pew, and in fact to be the spiritual generator to supply the current by which the feebly lighted lamps of many are kept from going out. A parish like this resembles a great religious nursery in which a great many stunted babes are being fed with milk when long ago they should have been prepared to digest strong meat.

Let us call ushering, handing out notices, sewing shirts and the like, milk diet. Many have been brought up on this and have no picture of the full grown manhood of Christian experience in which they begin to touch other lives. The steam boat Christians, the ones with the power within, do not have to be coddled, and persuaded but are busy reaching others. From the others we can recruit this class of workers. The miracle-working, dynamite used by the Apostles with such success is the thing that will produce the change. The tame substitute that passes for it today, the "comfortable" Gospel is not enough.

The third reason why a superficial Evangelism will not do is that there is a lot of very real sin to be overcome. We mean sin that has fastened itself like an octopus upon the Church and that threatens to drag it down. While this sin remains unchallenged we can have no real spirit of Evangelism in any parish. It may take the form of satisfaction with success in the outward things, the well-fitted parish house, and the beautifully appointed Church, while the real needs of the people are forgotten. It may be that the congregation is split by division and that tempers have been displayed. Frequently it is the grosser sins that are to blame and outsiders sneer at the Church because of the glaring faults that mar the witness of her people to Christ.

These sins have to be met in a real fashion. We have a habit today, and the habit extends even to our Church lives, of covering up the sore spot. We are satisfied if only the more obvious aspects of a situation are remedied, and are willing to forget the real causes. It is a task too unsavory to dig into facts and to face consciences with the demands of Christ; so as long as the people preserve outward decency we are content. Sins can be cured only by confession, if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

It is an excellent foundation for any study of the subject of Evangelism to sit down with the New Testament before you and to visualize for one's self the Apostolic Church at work. We are struck by the absence of committee meetings and complicated machinery. They were so fired with their faith that they evidently discussed it from house to house (it had not yet become "bad form" to mention religion outside of church), and they added daily new converts to the faith. This stimulated them with renewed vigor for they saw results constantly and did not have to wait a whole year before others were added. The work of Evangelization was conducted along every member lines. The persecution that arose at the death of Stephen scattered the members abroad, but it served to scatter the flames, too, and they went everywhere preaching the Word.

The Apostles alone remained in Jerusalem. This information is, no doubt, given for the benefit of those who in later years would excuse themselves from personal work with the plea that it is the minister's business. The Holy Spirit has anticipated later objections with marvelous accuracy. The minister should surely be the leader in this enterprise, if not he is not worthy of the ministry, but the ministry of the laity is essential. No captain could do all of the fighting.

The fellowship into which they were received was whole souled. They had all things in common. The stranger who came into the service felt his heart strangely warmed by the atmosphere of love and devotion. The new converts were encouraged by the older ones. The budding faith of these babes in Christ was not blasted by the criticism of some cold semi-Christian who deplored such unseemly enthusiasm, nor were they offended and troubled by hypocritical professors; for the self-seekers were sharply rebuked. Love and holy living abounded and the Church found favor in the eyes of the discerning. The new converts did not have to battle for their souls against the indifference of the older Christians as well as the attacks of the enemy. They had come among those who had a sympathetic understanding of their problems.

The appeal to the unconverted was directed along fundamental lines. We have no doubt that the early Christians were sociable, but they did not degrade their gatherings into bait for some favored fish. They did not try to lure the unspiritual with pie and ice cream. The messages reached into the depths of the heart and forced the hearers to call out "What must we do"? Their point of attack was the heart rather than the head. The one place in which St. Paul began with the head his message was not so fruitful, and at his next appointment he determined to concentrate upon "Jesus Christ and Him crucified". His venture into apologetics made the Athenians sneer, but his attack upon the heart made the Corinthians mad, showing that he had reached a vital point and that they were stirred. Not that St. Paul was not competent to handle an argument, but he evidently felt that the real issues of life centered in the heart.

Is this not the real reason for most unbelief? They camouflage it under the name of intellectual difficulties, but the real causes are deeper. As some one said the other day, "It is so much more impressive to be known as a rationalist, that makes you appear to be a superior person, but to admit yourself a common, ordinary sinner . . . ."

Growth in Grace is often set over against conversion as though the one did away with the other. People assert that they do not believe in these sudden changes that they are impressed by the necessity for a gradual growth. Of course, there is growth in Grace, but it is not growth into Grace. You cannot grow from self into Grace. The two lives are contrary and one does not gradually blend into the other. You cannot take a spiritually lifeless person and by any process of growth bring life out of the not-living. There has to come the new birth. The ones who make so much of growth are always insisting that they win people by their unconscious influence. The writer remembers the time when he was much impressed by this reasoning and went about trying to influence people unconsciously. It was a trying experience. More than that it never does much good. The world's influence is not silent. So the approach of the Christian has to be definite, and his objective definite, namely to win the unconverted to Christ. After a man enters a state of Grace then he can grow. He does not enter this state until he acknowledges Christ as his Saviour.

That is the secret of the whole work. Influence does not change men, growth never changes the nature of anything, time will not change the heart, Christ alone can change men. The aim of Evangelism should be to bring men to Him. Everything that is in our life that would prevent men from seeing Him in us must be eliminated. All excuses with which they attempt to shield their souls from His power must be set aside. The indifference that creeps over many and deadens their spiritual perceptions must be broken through by our earnestness and by the strength of our love. The first faint signs of sorrow for the past or of uneasiness as to their present status must be stirred into active life, and finally when all excuses and all other things have failed and the person comes to realize his own need then we must gently and lovingly assist him to find the way to Christ.

A clear cut decision at the very beginning will result in a deeper life for the disciple, and will save him from many slips and falls later on. Many fall away several times before they surrender fully because their first decision was not sufficiently clean-cut. It is usually fear on the part of the Christian or self-consciousness which has in it the traces of sin, that prevents him from urging a thorough decision. He goes under the false assumption that the new convert does not depend upon man, and it is as easy for God to clean a man entirely as half way. Tapering off processes savor of men's efforts not God's power, they result in frequent slips. The man who says from the beginning that his dedication is to be complete will find that he has really chosen the easiest method.

There is a classic example of this. Jerry McAuley, who was used so wonderfully in his work at the Water Street Mission, at the beginning of his career, fell from Grace more than half a dozen times. Finally, he discovered that he was holding on to one habit, that he had not considered sinful. It proved a stumbling block in his life. After he made a clean sweep he never again fell.

I do not believe that it is a question of adding on one more committee to our parishes, but that Evangelism is an issue which raises the question of the whole outlook of our congregation. Are we there to minister to or to be ministered to? It is not to be undertaken as a method of bolstering up our failing membership, or as a happy resort by which to increase the attendance at an otherwise unspiritual church. It will never succeed if undertaken in this way. True, Evangelism seeks men to serve them. Churchianity seeks men to profit by them. The background of the two states of mind is entirely different. The ordinary point of view says, "We should persuade this man to come to church, he will be a strong accession". Evangelism says, "We have a message that this man needs and we feel moved to bring it to him". The one is content if it secures the man's presence, the other does not rest until it has secured the allegiance of his heart.

It is high time that the Church awoke from her sleep. It is a disgrace too great for words to see the churches half-filled while the amusement centers are crowded. Yet these same people who crowd the places of amusement are desperately in need of that which the Church is commissioned to give. The itch for a ceaseless whirl of amusement comes frequently because everything spiritual has faded out of the life. Hundreds of young and old, too, are being swept along, not knowing where they are going. Whole groups of people are living in a state as pagan as though they had never heard of Christ. They are utterly without God and without hope. Meanwhile many in the Church are in desperate straits. The ones who should be stemming this tide of worldliness are standing almost helpless, or are weakly floating with the tide. Some can do no more than pat people on the back and tell them that all will be well. When did anything ever become well except some one took a stand for the right! Some are like people in their dotage and can only blubber foolishly about "People are fundamentally sound, and we are getting better all the time", while hundreds are sowing their wild oats and are preparing a harvest of death. Many honest hearts are troubled and disheartened. They realize that they do not have the power that they need. They know that Christianity should have a message, but they fail to find it in too many of her representatives.

We need a band of chosen men whose hearts God has touched, filled with love and zeal; men who have thrown themselves in absolute reliance upon God, ready to suffer the loss of all things if they can but win Christ; men to whom the rewards that this world can give have become but dross, in whom self has died, having been conquered by the dynamic life of the risen Christ. We need to rouse against the spirit that lived in those pioneers of the cross, who counted peril and hardship, as small things compared to the joys of Christian service. We plead for a renewal of the devotion that lived in those who:

"—met the tyrants brandished steel,
The lion's gory mane,
They bowed their necks, the death to feel,
Who follows in their train?"

The battle is still on. The road to adventure is still open. The Master beckons—"Follow Me"! Not to ease, nor luxury, but to sacrifice, and a cross and glory. Who follows?

ABOUT CLERICAL VACATIONS

Peccavi! I have sinned. Gaudeo! I am glad of it. I am glad for two special reasons:

One is that an unconsidered remark of mine in The Southern Churchman of August 9, commenting on a letter of Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, of Washington, D. C., brought me a kindly, straightforward, convincing reproof and demonstration that I was wrong from the Rev. Charles L. Monroe, rector of St. Paul's Church, New Orleans. He gives me insight, such as few laymen get, into details of an average week of a rector's heart and soul and body trying work. I looked at the subject of vacations of rectors from the standpoint of an active business man, and thereby erred. Among other impressive suggestions in Mr. Monroe's letter he points out that we business men and our employees have, in addition to the standard two weeks' vacation, to which I referred, at the least, fifty-two Sundays in the year of holiday, days which give the rector some of his very hardest work.

My second reason for gladness is suggestion from this incident that The Southern Churchman may be made, perhaps, more than the average Church paper, the medium of frank, affectionate, heart-to-heart discussions and interchanges from the differing points of view of clergy and laity. Pulpit and pew sometimes, if not usually, are restrained by shyness, local conditions or other considerations from opening their hearts and minds to each other. Probably the average rector tells nobody on earth, except, maybe, his wife, how he really thinks and feels about all his vestry and choir members; and members of vestry and congregation may carry within themselves suggestions and criticisms which would be helpful to their own rectors and all rectors, or which would be modified or removed by the daylight of an open forum. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." The Southern Churchman will be glad to receive and publish constructive, kindly, respectful criticisms from each element of the Church militant on the other and on itself and may be trusted to respect confidences.

So completely am I convinced that the rector earns, deserves and should have a reasonable vacation that I was tempted to go to the opposite extreme and suggest even longer holidays; but that would hardly be complimentary to the rectors. Indeed, those gentlemen might feel now that objection to their prolonged absences from parishes is the highest possible evidence of appreciation of their value and of devotion to them; but I fear few of them will view it that way.

Speaking generally, it seems to me the matter of vacations is one that safely may be left to the real rector's own conscience and his knowledge of his own spiritual, mental and physical condition and of conditions in his parish, provided he does not prefer his pleasure to his duty. The closed church, however, too often remains a dismal and sometimes disastrous fact and it is a question for us laymen to consider seriously whether we are remiss. in failing to prevent that. Dr. Glazebrook, in his letter to The Southern Churchman, on which I commented, told us something of what had been done in the Diocese of Washington toward providing regular lay readers, and urged general adoption of the slogan: "Our Churches must be kept open." That should be inspiring. Nearly every congregation has at least one man capable of being a good, efficient lay reader, or of being made capable. Let us of the laity take our part in keeping the churches open and helping the rectors enjoy and profit by their rest by enabling them to feel that loyal laymen are doing something toward filling their places.

I hope my confession of some error may tend to some good and be somewhere near as frank, generous and sensible as the rebuke that suggested and justified it.

LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS.

A FORGOTTEN VOICE

By the Reverend Canon G. Osborne Troop

Rector Emeritus, St. Martin's Church, Montreal.

THERE is much discussion in these momentous days of what is commonly called "Religion". In the restless sphere of Christian controversy a fair hearing is given to the Modernist and the Conservative, the Protestant and the Roman Catholic; but there is one voice for which we seem for the most part to listen in vain, and that is the voice of the old-fashioned Evangelical Christian, who stakes his all for time and for eternity upon Jesus Christ and Him crucified. It is an inexpressible joy to hear that voice now sounding afresh through the columns of the Southern Churchman. It is on behalf of that voice that this brief article is hopefully seeking publicity.

First. To plunge at once then into our subject, our Blessed Lord distinguishes His Own as those who Hear His Voice. "My sheep hear My Voice," He says; and also, "A stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers". The genuine Evangelical Christian echoes the Voice of Christ. He is not a party man, nor is he seeking victory for any section of the Christian Church. There is the widest possible distinction between his position and that of the man unhappily known as the "Low" Churchman. The Evangelical Churchman is never a politician: he stands simply and solely for the spiritual life of the Church. To make my meaning clear, let me quote a remarkable saying attributed to the late Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Fond du Lac, who was a pronounced "High" Churchman. He said: "In my opinion, the Church in the United States is dying for lack of Evangelicalism." Moreover, a Canadian Bishop, who heard the words which I have just quoted, said to me: "I think the same is true of the Church in Canada." Just here, it is well to add the tremendous sentence of that most distinguished scholar and Christian gentleman, known as Paul the Apostle: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His."

Second. The Evangelical Christian stands between the Modernist and the Catholic, whether Anglo-Catholic or Roman, and pleads with them, as the Lord Jesus Christ pleaded of old with the Sadducees on the one hand and the Scribes and Pharisees on the other. The Sadducees were the Modernists of Christ's day upon earth. They said that there was "no Resurrection, neither Angel nor spirit"; and the Saviour, in rebuking them, used words as applicable now as then:

"Ye do err—ye do greatly err—not knowing the Scriptures, neither the power of God."

On the other hand, when the Pharisees and Scribes urged the authority of Jewish Tradition, just as the authority of Catholic Tradition is urged now, Christ rebuked them also, saying:

"Ye have made the Word of God of none effect by your tradition": and He went on to quote the solemn words of their own prophet Isaiah: "This people honoreth Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me. But in vain do they worship Me, teaching as their doctrine the commandments of men."

It is surely obvious that our Lord belonged to no party, but He unquestionably stood for the supremacy of the Scriptures, as against those of any age who would undermine the Word of God by Rationalism, or make it of none effect by human Tradition. And in this controversy the Evangelical Christian stands heart and soul with Christ.

Third. A recent article in the Atlantic Monthly on "The New Prayer Book" affords a striking illustration of the Evangelical position. The objection of Evangelical Churchmen to the Revised Prayer Book arises solely from their loyalty to Christ and the Scriptures. We search the Life and Teaching of Christ in vain for the spirit of compromise. In strict adherence to the truth of God, Christ never compromised. It is notorious that the Revised Prayer Book is a compromise; and this fact is urged by its advocates as a powerful reason for its acceptance. The Bishop of Gloucester is reported in the London Times as commending the new Book because it is "thoroughly Catholic, really Evangelical, and makes more concessions to Modernists than any book yet published: "Which is equivalent to recommending an article as thoroughly black, really white, and yet entirely green." It is difficult to regard such a commendation of the Prayer Book as gravely meant.

Fourth. Above all else, the old-fashioned Evangelical Christian glories in the Atonement made by Christ upon the Cross, when by the Sacrifice of Himself He forever put away sin. The Evangelical Christian knows and feels himself a lost sinner, absolutely dependent upon the Death and Resurrection of Christ for his cleansing and deliverance from the guilt and power of sin. He firmly believes this atoning sacrifice to have been offered once for all, and that it can never in any sense be repeated by any human priest, nor even by Christ Himself. It is to proclaim the atoning Christ that the Evangelical Christian would fain "go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature". The so-called "world-religions" have in them much to command our deepest sympathy, but they differ from Christianity in this vital respect, that they confessedly have no Saviour. All men are sinners, and hopelessly unable to free themselves from sin. The highest ethical teaching—even that of the Sermon on the Mount—can never be a substitute for the Atoning Saviour. "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is no other Name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved"—except the Name of Jesus Christ. Both as Teacher and Saviour He stands majestically unique. In wisdom, as in power to save, He is absolutely supreme and unapproachable. The proudest philosophers of our own, or of any other period, are only seekers after Truth: but Christ never gives the slightest hint that He is a seeker after truth. On His trial before Pilate He fearlessly declares: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I might bear witness unto the truth." He then appeals to every sincere heart in the world by adding the memorable words: "Every one that is of the truth, heareth My Voice." On a previous occasion He had declared in unparalleled majesty: "I am the Truth." These words proclaim their own heavenly origin. In Christ are hidden, as St. Paul says, "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge". When a man reverently listens to the Voice of Christ, he knows that he has found the Truth that he is looking for.

Fifth. It is commonly alleged that Evangelical Christians are selfishly occupied with the salvation of their own souls, to the neglect of social service. We confidently affirm that our history proves that this objection is based on misconception. The genuine Evangelical sincerely desires to spend and be spent in the unsearchable riches of Christ, that he may be the means of making many rich. His supreme ambition is to "owe no man anything but love". This desire is well expressed in the simple lines:

"I would not work my soul to save,
For that my Lord hath done:
But I would work like any slave
From love to God's dear Son."

Christ laid down His life for us, that He might set us free to live not to ourselves, but to Him. His service is the only perfect freedom. St. Paul sums it all up when he grandly says: "To me to live is Christ." How grotesquely impossible to substitute for this: "To me to live is Religion!" No! the Personal Christ was His all in all. Christ and the genuine Christian are knit together in eternal friendship. No man, moreover, can sincerely love Christ without also loving and serving his fellow-men. Well was this understood by John Keble when he wrote:

"Would'st thou the life of souls discern
Nor human wisdom, nor Divine,
Help thee by aught beside to learn,
Love is life's only sign:
The spring of the regenerate heart,
The pulse, the glow of every part,
Is the true love of Christ our Lord,
As Man embraced, as God adored."

Sixth. Finally, it is extremely significant that although Christ is the Prince of Peace, yet during His earthly ministry, He was a very storm centre of controversy. The controversy ended, however, in no man being able "to answer Him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask Him any more questions". Christ is now on the Throne of the universe; and we believe that He is coming again, to gather in His own, and to establish His Kingdom upon earth, through the long-promised conversion and restoration of Israel, as "life from the dead" to the world. Is it any wonder that the Evangelical Christian is thankful to stand or fall with Him who said:

"Heaven and earth shall pass away: but My Words shall not pass away?"

He who testifieth these things saith:

"Behold, I come quickly." May we answer with eager heart and voice: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

(Note: In this series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.)

Lesson No. 1.—Topic: What the Bible Says About Itself.

(Read carefully all of the One Hundred and Nineteenth Psalm, which teaches us the place God's Word should have in our estimation.)

1. Not man's wisdom, but the wisdom of God.—1 Cor. 2:13; Heb. 1:1; 2 Peter 1:21.
2. All Scripture is inspired of God and is profitable.—2 Tim. 3:16, 17.
3. God's Word is imperishable.—1 Peter 1:25; Psalm 119:89.
4. It is absolutely true.—Psalm 119:160; John 17:17.
5. It is quick and powerful.—Heb. 4:12.
6. Has great cleansing power.—Psalm 119:9.
7. A mirror to show us ourselves.—James 1:23-25.
8. A sword to use.—Eph. 6:17.
9. A laver to wash away our sins.—Eph. 5:26.
10. Bread for spiritual growth.—John 6:32.
11. As living water.—John 4:14.
12. Gold for heavenly treasure.—Psalm 19:10.
13. Precious seed for the sower.—Matt. 13:3.
14. As a fire, and as a hammer.—Jer. 23:29.
15. A lamp to guide us.—Psalm 119:105.
16. Written that we may know.—1 John 5:13.
17. Must be used faithfully.—Jer. 23:28.
18. To be used sincerely.—2 Cor. 2:17.
19. Penalty for adding thereto.—Rev. 22:18; Prov. 30:15.
20. Penalty for taking away.—Rev. 22:19; Jer. 26:2.
21. Penalty for substitution.—Gal. 1:9.
22. Penalty for perversion.—Jude 1:4, 13.

"If they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8:20.

"Therefore lay up My Word in your heart."—Deut. 11:18.

(Note: An excellent and simple rule in the study of the Bible is to "Admit", "Submit", "Commit", "Transmit". Admit it as God's Word to you; Submit to its teachings; Commit it to memory; Transmit it to others, and its wondrous power and marvelous depth will soon be manifest.)

WHAT DO BIBLE WRITERS SAY ABOUT INSPIRATION?

Moses—"And God spake all these words, and said." "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord."—Ex. 20:1; 24:4.

Joshua—"The Lord spake unto Joshua, the son of Nun, saying."—Josh. 1:1.

In Judges—"Israel asked of the Lord, saying, Who shall go up for us?" "And the Lord said."—Judges 1:1, 2.

Samuel—"The Lord revealed Himself to Samuel by the word of the Lord." "And Samuel told all the words of the Lord unto the people."—1 Sam. 3:21 and 8:10.

David—"The Spirit of the Lord spake b y me."—2 Sam. 23:2.

Solomon—"And the word of the Lord came unto Solomon, saying."—1 Kings 6:11.

Job—"Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind and said."—1 Job 38:1.

Isaiah—"Hear the word of the Lord." "Therefore saith the Lord."—Isa. 1:10, 24.

Jeremiah—"The word of the Lord came unto me, saying." "The Lord said unto me."—Jer. 1:4, 7.

Ezekiel—"The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel, the priest."—Ezek. 1:3.

St. Paul—"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." 2 Tim. 3:16; also, Acts 28:25.

St. John—"The Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him."—Rev. 1:1.

St. Peter—"Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Pet. 1:21.

Christ's Attitude—"The Scripture cannot be broken."—John 10:36. "All things must be fulfilled which are written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me."—Luke 24:44.

THE PEACE OF GOD.

Walk quietly before the Lord, let Him direct thy way.
Seek not to pierce the mystic veil beyond the great Today!

With happy heart assume each care encircled in the—Now!
And other burdens ease with faith, and question not the How.
Or Why or When! but joying in thy work with willing hands
And deep humility hold fast, and know God understands.
That Compensation's unremitting Law can now atone.
The Peace that passeth knowledge shall at last become thine own.

Walk quietly before the Lord, let Him direct thy way.
And realize the dawning of a new and glorious Day!

WHAT FUTURE HAS CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN CHINA?

By the Reverend F. L. Hawks Pott, D. D

President of St. John's University, Shanghai.

IT has been my custom in previous reports to outline our plan for the future and to point out in what ways St. John's might be further developed. In place of the optimistic forecast which I have usually given, I must write this time in a much more sober mood.

We are now forced to ask the questions:

1. Has the development of the Christian College as a branch of Mission work been a mistake?

2. Has the day arrived when it should be discontinued?

In regard to the first question, we need only say that with all our shortcomings, we have accomplished something of value to the Church in China.

The second question is the more important. Has our day of opportunity passed, and considering the present attitude of the Nationalist Government in China, would it be wise to withdraw from the educational field and leave the future development of education in this country entirely to the Chinese themselves?

As to the future, as I see it, there are three possible courses of notice.

(1) There is the policy of compliance with all government regulations, turning over the administrations and control of the college to the Chinese. The plan most generally favored is the one that has been adopted by the Canton Christian College (Lingnan University). The following is a general outline of the new agreement:

> (a) A Board of Directors has been appointed, the majority of which are Chinese. There are six foreign members, three nominated by the Board of Trustees in New York (hereafter to be referred to as "the Founders"), and three nominated by the Board of Directors, and confirmed by "The Founders".
> (b) The property and buildings have been leased to the Board of Directors for a term of five years at a nominal rent of $1 Mex. per annum.
> (c) A Chinese President has been elected, and two vice-presidents, one Chinese and one foreign.
> (d) The New York Trustees (now known as "the "Founders") undertake to continue the support of the American teachers whose contracts extend beyond July 1, 1927, and as their contracts expire will reappoint them or secure suitable substitutes. The persons selected by the American Founders shall not be reappointed without the written consent and approval of the Board of Directors.

This plan is advocated on the grounds:

(a) That it is a friendly policy manifesting the desire on the part of American Christians to help China in the educational field, where the necessity of assistance is still so great.

(b) That it will advance the cause of Christianity in China, inasmuch as the foreign staff will have the opportunity of exerting a Christian influence on the lives of the students.

(c) That it will in course of time develop into an institution that will derive its entire support from Chinese sources.

It is certainly an interesting experiment and one that should be watched carefully. The principal difficulty in connection with it is that its control may pass in course of time largely into the hands of non-Christian directors and government officials, and that its Christian character may become merely nominal.

(2) The second possible course of action is that of permanently closing our Christian Colleges and abandoning the attempt to provide higher education under Christian influence. There is much in the present situation that is so discouraging that we are tempted to think this is the only wise policy. The attitude of the government towards Christian institutions is definitely unfriendly, and the avowed purpose is to bring them under complete control of the educational authorities. There is danger of the schools being converted into agencies for political propaganda, and of their being deprived of all religious and academic freedom. According to the statements that have been issued the only real difference between the private Christian College and the government College would be that the former would largely derive its financial support from the Christian Church in America.

Furthermore, it is pointed out that there are many difficulties in handing over our larger institutions to Chinese administration. The number of Christian men of sufficient educational experience to act as presidents of Christian colleges is small, and even when such men are found, it would be difficult for them during these abnormal times to resist the outside pressure brought to bear upon them by the government authorities or by the student union, to use the institution for political purposes.

Before advocating a drastic policy of this nature there are certain things to be considered. The closing of all Christian colleges in China might have disastrous results on the future of the Chinese Church. One of the great needs of this critical time is for well-educated Christian men who can be leaders in thought as well as in action. Will such men be produced if we close the doors of our Christian colleges?

In Japan the lack of the Christian university has been greatly felt and much effort has been expended in providing institutions of higher learning, where students may obtain their education in a Christian atmosphere.

The Christian community at the present time would be placed at a great disadvantage if there are no schools and colleges where their children can be educated. It is generally confessed that the intellectual and moral influences of the government institutions are very pernicious. There is danger that the Christian youths who study in them may be lost to the Church.

We should hesitate, therefore, to advocate permanent withdrawal.

(3) The third and last course of action is that of temporary suspension of our educational work.

A revolution is in progress. No one can see what the ultimate results will be. Everything is in flux and nothing is permanent. The government educational policy adopted today may be changed tomorrow. The moderates and extremists in education are in conflict with one another. Some want education to be founded on a materialistic philosophy of life. Others would leave some place for a religious philosophy of life. Until a stable government has been established, and a definite policy of education has been finally adopted, it would seem to be wise to wait on the course of events.

We are sometimes told that the government may confiscate the educational plants that remain idle. This would seem to be an idle threat, and it is not likely that it will be put into execution. There is more likelihood that institutions which attempt to carry on during these troublous times and which hand over their control and administration will be practically absorbed by the government.

Some are apprehensive lest this policy of watchful waiting may be regarded as unfriendly to the nationalist movement in China. Doubtless the enemies of Christian education will raise this cry, and we shall be charged with being imperialists, but those who really understand our aim will see that our policy of suspension is not dictated by unwillingness to help China, but by our inability to be of real service under the present circumstances.

By waiting it may be possible at a later date to reorganize according to some plan whereby there will be real cooperation between the Mission, the Chinese Church and the Alumni and a gradual transfer of administrations, control and support of the institution to a Chinese Board of Directors.

In considering these three possible courses of action, I am deeply conscious of the importance of the decision to be arrived at. As one who has devoted much time and attention to Christian education in China, it is difficult to view the matter impersonally. I have tried, however, to be guided by what is for the best interests of the cause of Christ in this land, and I hope that what I have written may be of some value in the solution of this most difficult problem.

CHURCH COUNCIL REBUKED FOR CRITICIZING EVANGELISM.

Winona Lake, Ind., September 17.—"The criticism of evangelists and evangelism by the Federal Council of Churches of New York in a recent article in The New York World is being as unfavorably received as the findings of the Council on National Prohibition in 1925", the Rev. Charles Stewart, Secretary of the Interdenominational Evangelistic Association of Winona Lake, declared today.

"With evangelism at low tide since the World War, there has been the lowering of moral standards, producing a crime wave and a loss in Church attendance and membership. We need to go forward to greater evangelism if we change the trend of society of today."—The New York Times.

"THE EARTH SPEAKS TO BRYAN"

By O. A. Hawkins

UNDER thhe above title Professor Charles Fairfield Osborn, of Columbia University, New York, has recently published a book and dedicated it to John Thomas Scopes, of Dayton, Tennessee, fame.

In this book Prof. Osborn writes that William Jennings Bryan is the man on trial, not John Thomas Scopes. The author quotes Mr. Bryan as saying in 1922: "The real question is, did God use evolution as His plan?" and Prof. Osborn chooses to consider this the question in the "Scopes'" trial; he also charges that Mr. Bryan was possessed of a closed mind, because, as he writes: "The earth speaks clearly, distinctly, and, in many of the realms of nature, loudly but he, Bryan fails to hear a single sound." The author says: "Fifty million years ago Nature begins to speak as 'the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creatures that hath life'." In these days fifty million is so easily conceivable, especially does the range of Prof. Osborn's "time tables" seem to be without limit. The learned professor does not hesitate to make positive and exact statements that are not accepted by other scholars who are admittedly as learned as himself; for example, he tells us "of perfectly preserved fossil remains of the artistic race of Cro-Magno's who lived thirty thousand years ago"; of "the testimony in several complete skeletons of the race of Neanderthal, who lived one hundred thousand years ago". These, however, must be considered by the professor as ultra modern to judge by what follows; he writes, "it is not true to say that the evolution of man rests upon evidence as complete as the horse, for example, because we have traced man's ancestors back only for a period of four hundred thousand years; whereas, we have traced the horse back for a period of three million years". When I read statements presuming to tell what occurred in such remote periods of the past as 30,000 years, 100,000 years, 400,000 years, 3,000,000 years and 50,000,000 years, I am forced to the conclusion that the expression, "Pre-historic", has no place in our vocabulary, it certainly cannot have any meaning. Again, in the light of the many great disruptions and unheavals of old Mother Earth, changing its formation to unknown depths, within historic times, I can only wonder to what extent such disruptions and upheavals wrought in the same old Mother Earth in, may I use it, pre-historic times. There are scholars as thoroughly informed as Prof. Osborn, who tell us of the younger strata (geologically) being found on top of the older strata (geologically). In passing I may say that as Prof. Osborn writes so slightingly of the scientific attainments of men like John Burroughs, the great Naturalist, and Professor Bateson, a noted scientist, it may explain the "super-man" idea responsible for his very positive expressions contradicting other well-known scientists.

Prof. Osborn writes: "Nature has been regarded from the earliest time as the work of God, full of moral beauty, truth and splendor." That Nature is full of beauty, truth and splendor, no one will deny, though some may not appreciate the application of the attribute "moral". As the trend of the book appears to be to rebuke Mr. Bryan for not recognizing the "beauty, truth and splendor of Nature", I dare assert that no man now living responded to this sentiment in a more vigorous and public manner than William Jennings Bryan. Oh! yes, the earth spoke to Bryan, and Bryan heard and acknowledged, but it can be said truly he did not bend both ears to the earth; he was in communion with God as surely as man can be, and he imbibed his learning, and the guiding for his life from both God and Nature. He did not accept Nature as God, but God as Creator of all we call Nature, as well as all the laws for the government of Nature. In polemics it is rather unusual that a person be called upon to prove a negative; Prof. Osborn writes as follows: "If Bryan and his learned counsel can prove that God did not use evolution as His plan, they will deserve our gratitude."

As Mr. Bryan relied upon the earliest written record in existence telling of creation, and affirmed his belief in said record, the burden of disproving that record rests upon those who challenge its truth. Prof. Osborn stresses: "Creative-Evolution". I believe that unprejudiced scholars will agree that one may properly speak of creation and evolution, but that creation by evolution is a contradiction in terms. For this thought I am indebted to a learned Professor now in Princeton Theological Seminary.

Certainly the accepted definition of "create" is "to cause to be, or to come into existence; especially, to produce out of nothing". While "evolution" means "the act or process of evolving; or the state of being evolved; development or growth". Specifically, in biology, the series of steps by which a germ or a rudimentary part becomes an adult organism or a fully developed part; the succession of changes by which a germ passes from a simple to a complex condition". Always and eternally the germ must be created, then follows development. Who created the germ? If a human being is developed, it must be from a human germ; if a member of the bovine family is developed it must be from a bovine germ, and so on along the entire line of animate creation, because only like can produce like; and we find that as learned naturalists and botanists as are in the world assert the same truth applies in plant life.

Prof. Osborn writes, "A challenge to evolution now is a challenge to Nature itself, and Nature is the oldest and wisest instructor of both minds and morals" and he quotes Cicero, "I turned to Nature as I would to God"; thus we do know something of the source of Prof. Osborn's teaching. Prof. Osborn writes, "We are told that Nature and Evolution are inconsistent with religion and are undermining conduct". Unless there be some of the School Prof. Osborn defends express that idea, I do not remember to have heard from his lips or pen, that Nature is inconsistent with religion, why should Prof. Osborn couple up these two words, any how, except to bolster his conception in regard to evolution. All of Nature known to man serves in complete harmony with God's revealed plan for man and for man's conduct; it is only when man acts in opposition to what he knows of Nature that his conduct becomes vitiated. It should be remembered, however, that no man knows all of Nature, only God, the Creator knows, hence, I prefer the use of "Super-human" to "Super-natural".

To revert again to the super-man, or ego, given strong expression by Prof. Osborn, I quote what he wrote about a great scholar and divine: "I had the good fortune to fall under the influence of James McCosh, natural philosopher and divine, who in his lectures on Christianity and Positivism, accepted evolution with most of its implications". This statement is really ambiguous and not in keeping with the positive expressions of the learned professor. I have been at some pains to ascertain from authority at Princeton as to the reliability of the construction of Dr. McCosh's teaching, as made by Prof. Osborn. I quote, "Dr. McCosh accepted none of the implications of Naturalistic evolution. He believed that when Natural science observes its necessary limitations, it does not and cannot conflict with Christian super-naturalism; Dr. McCosh took the position that inferences from the evolutionary hypotheses might be anti-theistic or theistic, and anti-Christian or Christian. He points out the necessary limits of the evolutionary hypotheses, defends theism and supernatural Christianity".

As one reads the above comments one might think of a tendency to what is popularly called "theistic evolution"; well, the proper definition of "theistic evolution" is development by God's order and direction.

Prof. Osborn quotes Charles Kingsley as being a staunch disciple of Darwin in 1863, and then credits Kingsley as follows: "The state of the scientific mind is most curious, ... (omission by the author) they find that now they have got hold of an interfering God—a master magician, as I called it. They have to choose between the absolute empire of accident and a living, immanent, ever-working God." I confess to curiosity as to what measure of approbation for his contentions Prof. Osborn finds in Kingsley's expressions.

Prof. Osborn differs with Darwin as to the germ origin of man, in that he says man did not come from ape or monkey; he does dignify the human family by allotting to them a specially supplied germ origin.

Evolution as commonly accepted, is predicated upon accidental generation, but there is a living, immanent, ever-working God trying to bring men and women, and nations out of pride and selfishness and into harmony with the life and teachings of His Son. To this high ideal William Jennings Bryan dedicated his heart and mind during his life, and the memory of his splendid life and services will continue in the mind and conscience of an innumerable host, and of the children of this host, long after many of his best known critics of today shall have been lost to the memory of man, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord", is his reward.

CHURCH UNITY.

Mr. Editor:

In the Living Church and in The Southern Churchman of September 17, I have read the articles on Lausanne Conference. They do but confirm my first convictions of several years ago, when Mr. J. P. Morgan's $100,000 gift financed the Commission on Faith and Order. Would it not be well for all so-called Christians to try to get together amongst themselves first? Could we not, as Churchmen, get together the followers of the Rev. Mr. Opie, and the followers of Mr. Morehouse, and see if we cannot get a medium level that will be acceptable to all? Then The Southern Churchman will no longer call a procession of Priests a St. Patrick's procession, because they are with colored stoles, and The Living Church will not advertise a Priest who used left-over consecrated wine for dessert.

In the last official United States Religious Census, 1916, there are reported two hundred and two denominations. Of the three numerically the strongest Protestants, one reports seventeen varieties, another twenty varieties, and the other ten varieties. So long as these minor divisions exist, why should we hope for a reunited Protestantism? Would not such a combination encourage us to hope that there would yet be a reunion of Churchmen, Romanists and Protestants into the Faith, as Se. Jude says: "Once for all ('Attae') delivered to the saints."

Then when we sing:

> "Spirit divine,
> Come as the dove, and spread thy wings,
> The wings of peaceful love,
> And let thy Church on earth become > Blest as the Church above."

We can feel that our prayer will be granted. God speed the day.

In Holy Church, Yours Faithfully,

(REV.) LOUIS LLEWELLYN WILLIAMS
(Retired).

WHAT REALLY HAPPENED AT THE WORLD CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor:

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie reporting the final sessions of the World's Conference on Faith and Order in your issue of September 10, makes the following statement:

> "It was during the discussion of the statement on the relation of the United Church to the existing Churches, that a small group of High Church Episcopalians of America, augmented by a few other ecclesiastical extremists, threw an eleventh hour bomb into the sessions. The entire report which represented days of collaboration on the part of delegates of divergent views, was attacked, the chief spokesman being Dr. Frederick W. Morehouse, editor of The Living Church, Milwaukee, Wis. . . . . It looked as though the report and all that it represented in the interests of harmony would be lost to the conference and to the Christian world—as a unanimous vote was necessary to its reception for transmission to the entire Church. But motion was made that it be referred to the Continuation Committee for such action as they might see fit to take."

What Mr. Opie does not state is that this motion for reference to the Continuation Committee was made by Dr. Morehouse and that it was this motion that constituted the "eleventh hour bomb". The report published on the editorial page of The Living Church, presumably written by Dr. Morehouse himself, contains this sentence:

> "Nothing could conceal the immediate feeling of rage toward the introducer of the resolution (i. e. to refer to the Continuation Committee); it chanced to be Mr. Morehouse; and some of the Anglican delegates were foremost among these Protestant stalwarts."

The two reports are not literally contradictory, but they are practically so. Was Dr. Morehouse the introducer of the resolution to refer, as he unequivocally states? Was this resolution the "eleventh hour bomb" referred to by Mr. Opie? Was it known to Mr. Opie when he wrote his report that Dr. Morehouse introduced the resolution that, according to Mr. Opie's statement, saved the day? If the report sent by Dr. Morehouse to The Living Church is a correct statement of what there occurred then Mr. Opie's report is grossly unfair to Dr. Morehouse; if Mr. Opie's report be a fair and unbiased statement, then one knows not what to think of Dr. Morehouse's report. The two reports cannot hold together as two fair and unbiased statements of the same occurrence. I think the Church at home is interested in having the matter cleared.

I would suggest that your readers in all fairness procure The Living Church report of the incident and read what Dr. Morehouse has to say on the whole subject.

In such a conference, where it had been agreed upon beforehand that no one was to be compromised, that all reports approved by the Conference or merely received, were to be so approved or received by unanimous, or at least nem. con., vote, why should any group, even "a small group of High Church Episcopalians from America, augmented by a few other ecclesiastical extremists", be faulted for objecting to this report brought in at the eleventh hour, when in conscience they felt themselves bound to object?

C. H. JORDAN.

Weldon, N. C.

(Editor's Note:—When the above was referred to Dr. Opie he made the following comment:

"In reports of the World Conference there was no intention of being unfair to the editor of The Living Church, whom the writer holds in high esteem. The Southern Churchman's correspondent confuses two different matters. It was NOT the 'motion to refer' that constituted the 'eleventh hour bomb', but the slashing of the report on 'The Relation of the United Church to the Existing Churches'—making it impossible for this harmless but important document to take its place with the other five reports which will be sent out to the whole Christian world (as a careful reading of my correspondence will show).

"Dr. Morehouse did 'move its reference', but only after he had attacked its entire drift and tenor, in a way that convinced the leaders of the conference that the report would be tabled and thus lost as a conference document—unless referred to the Continuation Committee. Bishop Brent himself supported this motion, only because he saw that it was the only hope of saving the report for future reference (in the light of the dissent now evident), although it was apparent that few delegates in the conference objected to full endorsement, and an overwhelming majority very evidently wished the report to take its place with the other plenary reports. It is significant that Dr. Peter Ainslie, in a recent article in The Christian Century refers to this action as a 'sectarian outburst' and an 'unreasonable protest', and The Living Church says it produced a 'feeling of rage', etc., so that The Southern Churchman was not the only writer who regarded the attack upon Report No. 7 as unwarranted and sensational!")

THE NATIVITY OF ST. MARY.

Mr. Editor:

The "Christ Church Reminder", Chattanooga, Tenn., of September 18, contains the following item:

> "We received a surprise visit from Father Sharp, the Executive Secretary of the Diocese, last Sunday. His presence enabled us to celebrate the Sunday within the Octave of the Feast of the Nativity of St. Mary with a Solemn High Mass, Father Harris being the Celebrant, the Rector the Deacon, and Father Sharp the Sub-Deacon. Father Sharp preached the sermon, which was a very inspiring message from the Bishop and Council of the Diocese. From Chattanooga, Father Sharp went to Tate Springs, where he preaches the Bishops' Crusade.

This is the first intimation that we, down here in Tennessee, have had that the Executive Secretary of this Diocese was to be referred to as "Father", nor, in justice to him, have we ever heard it indicated by him that he desired or expected to be so addressed or designated.

Where in the Constitution, Canons, or Rubrics, of this Church is the authority for the title "Father" as applied to a Clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church? Jesus said (Matt. 23:8-9), "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your father, which is in heaven". Most Episcopalians, at least down in this section of the country, believe that this admonition of the Christ carries more weight of authority than the practices and teachings of the "Catholic" Party in the Church; and it might well be added that we still adhere to the right of private interpretation of the Scriptures, which does not appear to meet with much favor in "Catholic" circles.

We next read that the presence of the Executive Secretary made it possible "to celebrate the Sunday within the Octave of the Feast of the Nativity of St. Mary".

Article X of the Constitution of the Church, provides, in part:

> "The Book of Common Prayer . . . . as now established or hereafter amended by the authority of this Church, shall be in use in all the Dioceses and Missionary Districts of this Church."

And Article VIII of the Constitution requires that no person shall be ordained as Bishop, Priest or Deacon, unless he shall make the following declaration:

> "I do solemnly engage to conform to the doctrine, Discipline and Worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America."

In its Prayer Book the Church has plainly designated the Feasts and Saints Days which are to be celebrated, and a careful examination of that Book reveals no provision for celebration of "The Feast of the Nativity of St. Mary". Where, then, is the authority for the celebration of any such feast in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America? And where is the authority of any Bishop of the Church to permit the celebration of any such Feast in this Church? Unquestionably, if the Church had intended to celebrate that "Feast", it would have so provided in its Prayer Book, and the Church not having done so, is such a celebration in conformity with its Doctrine, Discipline and Worship? Getting right down to the meat of the question, how can any Clergyman who has made the solemn declaration required by Article VIII of the Constitution celebrate any such "Feast" in this Church? And how can any Bishop who has made the same declaration permit the celebration of any such "Feast" in his Diocese? These are questions of law which are giving a great many thoughtful people in the Church grave concern.

And then the article goes on to state that on the occasion referred to there was a "Solemn High Mass", with Deacon and Sub-Deacon. Where in its Prayer Book has the Church provided for any such service or any such clerical official as a "Deacon" and "Sub-Deacon"? The Roman Catholic Church, as it has a right to do, celebrates what it denominates a Solemn High Mass, with Deacon and Sub-Deacon, but what right has any Bishop or Clergyman in the Protestant Episcopal Church to make its services conform to those of the Roman Church, or create officials not provided for in our law in the performance of its services? When the ordinary individual reads that a Solemn High Mass, with Deacon and Sub-Deacon, was celebrated, he naturally assumes that the service so performed was the same as that of the Roman Church, and if it was not, then the description of it is misleading.

To the mind of a great many of us Protestant Episcopalians who are loyal to its Constitution, its Prayer Book, its Canons and its Articles of Religion, if these are mere "scraps of paper", if the solemn declaration of conformity on the part of Bishops and Clergy is meaningless and if there is to be such a complete alteration of its Doctrine, Discipline and Worship as to make it conform to all intents and purposes to that of the Church of Rome, then the only fair and honest thing it can do is to plainly so state and not say one thing in its Constitution and do the opposite in practice. If we are to have Masses, High, Low, Requiem, Nuptial, etc., Purgatory, Auricular Confession, Worship of the Virgin, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament, and practically all of the doctrines and practices of the Church of Rome, let us so amend the Constitution of the Church and alter its Prayer Book as to boldly and plainly say so, in order that we may all know where we stand.

Even the "Catholic" Party admits that the Church cannot permanently include both "Catholic" and Protestant Episcopalian, and how any thinking man can entertain any serious idea to the contrary is a mystery.

Strive as they may to avoid it, the question is before us, shall the Church be "Catholic", a sickly imitation of Rome, or shall it be the Protestant-Episcopalian?

Can this constant and unrestrained defiance of the fundamental law of the Church fail to weaken the faith of the people in its declarations? Do Bishops and Clergy believe that this state of affairs can continue without a day of reckoning?

Book Reviews

"PHILUS," "THE STABLE BOY OF BETHLEHEM": By the Rev. E. J. Cleveland, D. D. Harper and Brothers, New York.

A series of Children's Story-Sermons for Christmas and other days and seasons of the Christian year.

This is a very attractive book of a dozen story-sermons for children. They are instructive and well presented. It is a wholesome book to have in the home for the older children to read and to be read to the younger ones. Bishop Slattery writes the "Foreword".

DRAMATIC ACTIVITIES FOR YOUNG FOLKS: By Grace Sloan Overton. The Century Company, New York.

NEW BIBLE HELPS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE with four thousand questions and answers. The Oxford University Press.

ASK ME A BIBLE QUESTION: by the Rev. George Stewart. The Century Company, New York.

Of "Dramatic Activities" the Century Company says: "This group of dramatizations is presented in response to a very general demand among religious education workers for material suited to production by young people. They are not plays in the accepted sense of the world, and are not intended to supplant or compete with the plot or conflict type of religious drama now available in increasing numbers. They are worship services—two for the great religious festivals of the year, Christmas and Easter, and two others, are so written that they may be produced almost as effectively in the ordinary church auditorium without curtains or other equipment, as on a regular stage."

There are four of these "play" services entitled: "The Living Christ," for Easter; "The Eternal Quest," for Christmas; "Youth's Prophetic Vision," a dramatization of Amos (cast entirely of boys), and "The Age-Old Dream," a masque for Mothers' and Daughters' Week (cast entirely of girls).

"New Bible Helps for Young Folks" is one of the best books of its kind. The fact that it is published by the Oxford Press is ample guarantee of its merit. It is full of illustrations and maps and picture stories. Its features are too varied to enumerate here. No one interested in the study of the Bible could read over the first half of the book without great benefit. The second half is devoted to the four thousand questions and answers arranged in the order of the books of the Bible, not including the Epistles and Revelation.

A good book for the individual or for class work.

S.

"Ask Me a Bible Question" is another question book on the Bible. It is a different kind of arrangement and questioning from the other books. The book itself, paper and large printing are all that can be desired. It is divided into very interesting parts:

The Making of the Bible,
The Formation of Our Present English Bible,
The Bible in General,
The Beginnings in Genesis,
The Patriarchs,
The Contest with Pharaoh, etc.

The New Testament Questions are on:

The Life and Teachings of Jesus,
Peter and the Apostolic Church,
The Life of St. Paul,
The Letters of St. Paul, etc.

Such books as this one, if used faithfully, will add greatly to the knowledge and love of the "Book of Books".

Dr. Grafton Burke on Furlough.

Dr. Grafton Burke, of the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska, leaves the mission on September 28 for delayed furlough after four years of service. Plans for a furlough in 1926 had to be set aside because of the impossibility of securing relief. Dr. Floyd O'Hara of San Francisco has volunteered to take charge of the hospital for one year and is now in Alaska. On reaching Seattle Dr. Burke will confer with Dr. John W. Wood, Secretary of the Department of Missions, who will be passing through about the same time en route to the Orient. During the autumn and winter Dr. and Mrs. Burke will probably be in New York where the doctor can secure opportunity for further post-graduate study.

St. Andrew's Cross.

By action of the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew the monthly magazine of the Brotherhood, St. Andrew's Cross, has been enlarged in scope so as to make it a general Church magazine for all laymen of the Church, while reducing the subscription price from $2 to $1 per annum. Several new departments have been added, including monthly pages on "Religion in the Home and Everyday Life", "Religious Education and Evangelism" and "Experiences in Personal Evangelism"; and provision has been made for giving brief summaries of general Church news of interest to laymen. There will be special helps for Church School Superintendents, teachers and Bible Class leaders.

Each month there will be a contributed article by one of the Bishops or other leaders of the Church. Among the already promised contributors whose articles will appear during the year are Bishops Murray, Anderson, Brent, Darst, Ferris, Fiske, Freeman, Gailor, Garland, Irving P. Johnson, Manning, Oldham, Penick, Slattery, Stires and Woodcock; the Rev. Messrs. W. A. R. Goodwin, Charles N. Lathrop, Alfred R. Newbery and Floyd W. Tomkins; and Messrs. Frederic C. Morehouse and Clinton Rogers Woodruff.

Historic Organ Rebuilt.

The ancient organ of Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, which was heard by Washington and the early Colonists and patriots, has been entirely renovated so that its music is made possible for Americans of the present day. It was used for the first time since the mechanics rebuilt it at the services Sunday, September 25. The instrument was purchased in 1728 from Ludovic Sproze and rebuilt in 1827 by Henry Erbow.

Since that time its almost daily use made still another renovation necessary. This latest improvement was started as a memorial to a former organist, George Frescoln, whose sons volunteered a contribution for the purpose. The significant story of the development of music in Philadelphia from Colonial days harks back to such geniuses as Francis Hopkinson, the writer of the music of the Star Spangled Banner, who then presided at the console in what has long been America's historic church.

Gifts to Gloria Dei Church.

Gloria Dei (Old Swedes) Church, Philadelphia, gets a large Bible bound in embossed leather and copper and a Swedish flag of Royalty, gifts of Crown Prince Gustav Adolph and Princess Louise of Sweden. These were presented to the rector and congregation of the church on Sunday, September 25, by Mr. Maurice A. Hogeland, vice-consul of Sweden, in memory of the visit of the Royal couple last year. The gifts were accepted by the rector, the Rev. John Lowry Hady, on behalf of the congregation.

Death of Two Faithful Church Workers.

Mr. George Margeron, seventy-two years old, for forty-two years the Superintendent of the Sunday School of the Free Church of St. John, Kensington, died at his home September 14. His body was taken to the church at noon on Sunday and the funeral service was held at three o'clock. During those hours a large number of friends came to look again at the face they had known so long and so well. At the morning service, the rector, the Rev. Frank Goostray, preached the memorial sermon.

Mrs. Jennie Overington, ninety-two years old, for seventy-five years a teacher in the Sunday School of St. Mark's Church, Frankford, died at her home on Leiper Street. She is survived by one son, William, with whom she made her home. Fifty years ago Mrs. Overington organized a Bible class in the church, in which she taught many prominent business men of the community. Funeral services were held in the church and at the service Sunday morning the rector, the Rev. Leslie F. Potter, preached a memorial sermon.

Dr. Wood of the Board of Missions, New York, made an address on Sunday morning, September 25 at the service in St. Peter's Church, Germantown. He spoke on "Conditions in China" and in his statement received at the Church House, Dr. Wood says the Episcopal Church is planning to go ahead in China on the basis laid down in the budget formulated by the General Convention at New Orleans in 1925.

The Rt. Rev. Hiram R. Hulse, Missionary Bishop of Cuba, was in Philadelphia Sunday. He preached in the morning at St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, and in the evening at Christ Church, Germantown.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Cathedral Services Resumed.

Bishop Freeman has resumed his Sunday afternoon services at Washington Cathedral in connection with the four o'clock service of Evensong held there every Sunday. This service is broadcast by radio and is always largely attended, usually more than taxing the capacity of Bethlehem Chapel. The music, rendered by the Cathedral choir under the direction of Edgar Priest, is well known for its beauty and high standard and is sought, either by radio or attendance at the service by many people.

Thousands of people visit the Cathedral all through the week and great interest is manifested in the progress of the building. Visitors represent every state of the Union and many foreign countries, and organizations and conventions temporarily in Washington often make pilgrimages in a body to this place of growing interest, beauty and inspiration.

Lay Services in Rural Parishes.

Lay services in rural parishes, which have been conducted so successfully in the last two years by the Laymen's Service Association, were brought to a close for this season by a splendid pilgrimage and service at All Faith Church, Mechanicsville, Maryland, on Sunday, September 25.

More than fifty men and women constituted the party which left Washington in cars arranged for them by the Laymen's Service Association. Luncheon was taken and the day given over to the pilgrimage. At the morning service the address was delivered by Dr. Larkin Glazebrook and the service was read by Mr. H. D. Amiss, Mr. Busey H.

Howard and Commander T. C. Jewell. At the afternoon service the address was made by Mr. O. R. Singleton and Commander Jewell, President of the Laymen's Service Association made a statement of the methods and purposes of the Association. In the afternoon there were also conference groups held on the lawn when Sunday-school workers were addressed by Dr. A. T. Gregory of St. Stephen's Church and Sunday School; Mr. S. C. Munick of St. John's Church, Georgetown; Mr. W. C. Beck of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education; Mr. Lewis T. Miller of St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek, and Commander Jewell.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, will be one of the speakers at the third annual rally of the Interdenominational Committee of Young People to be held the evening of October 14, at Central High School. Beside Bishop Freeman, the other special speaker will be Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, President of George Washington University. The committee on arrangements includes a representative of the Episcopal Young People's Society.

A series of lectures in a normal course for Church School teachers will be held Sunday evenings at St. John's Church, Bethesda, the first of the course being held Sunday, September 25. These courses will carry regular credits toward the certificate issued by the National Association of Accredited Teachers of the Episcopal Church. The Rev. Clarence P. Parker, rector of the church, holds one of these certificates and will be in charge of the course. The subject of the first lecture was "Church School Ideals". The meetings will be held at six o'clock every Sunday evening and will be preceded by supper served by members of St. John's Guild of the parish.

The Rev. Joseph Fletcher, Canon and Librarian of Washington Cathedral, was the preacher on Sunday morning, September 25, at St. Margaret's Church, Seat Pleasant, Maryland. This service was in special commemoration of the two hundred and thirty-first anniversary of the founding of Addison Chapel, which later became St. Margaret's Church, and which was founded in 1696. In the afternoon of the same day, foundation stones of the proposed porch and belfry were laid by Loyalty Lodge of Odd Fellows. And the speakers of this occasion were Major-General John A. Lejeune of the U. S. Marine Corps and vestryman of Epiphany Church, and the Rev. George F. Dudley, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church. The services were in charge of the rector of St. Margaret's, the Rev. R. J. Ripley.

Summer Auxiliary Work.

That Church work can be carried on in the summer months as well as during the more pleasant ones, was demonstrated by the Christ Church, Richmond, branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, which came together for work each month this summer with an average of ten members present. The meetings were held in the morning, in the homes of various members, and the hostess served a light luncheon. In this way a box was prepared and sent to one of the Mountain Missions. Twenty-five dollars was contributed for Christ Church Mission; ten dollars to meet another obligation was also contributed; and there remains a balance of nine dollars in the treasury. It is hoped that this will encourage other branches to "carry on" when the hot months come again.

Preaching Mission.

Following up the Bishops' Crusade of last winter and spring, a successful preaching mission was held in Grace Church, The Plains, the Rev. S. L. Rotter, rector, the week of September 18, by the Rev. Kirk B. O'Farrell, rector of Emmanuel Church, Cleveland, Ohio.

Bishop Beckwith's Recovery.

The Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop of Alabama, on Sunday, September 18, underwent a serious operation for appendicitis, with partly local anaesthetic. The Bishop is recovering rapidly, showing the recuperative power of a far younger man.

St. Andrew's, Birmingham.

The chancel of St. Andrew's Church, Birmingham, has been completely remodeled. It has been re-panelled. A new altar, pulpit and communion rail have replaced the old, and a parapet has been placed at the front of the chancel. This work was done under the supervision of R. Geissler, Inc., New York.

The pulpit was the gift of Mr. J. T. Moore, late senior warden of St. Andrew's, in memory of his wife, whom he joined in Paradise before the pulpit's installation. It was dedicated by the rector, the Rev. V. C. McMaster on the Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity; when the sermon was preached by the Rev. Joseph T. Ware, former rector of St. Andrew's.

Diocesan Convocations.

The three convocations of the Diocese of Alabama will meet between the tenth and twentieth of October: Montgomery Convocation at Eufaula; Mobile Convocation at All Saints', Mobile, and Birmingham Convocation at St. Andrew's, Birmingham.

For the past eight years the dominant note of these convocations has been the general missions of the Church. As a result, Alabama has developed the habit of more than meeting the apportionment laid upon her. This year the light that has shone so brightly on the distant missions of the Church will be focused on the missions of this diocese, where all fields are manned, but where there are twenty-five counties in which there is no work of the Church of any kind. This reproach is to be removed as soon as possible, not failing, meanwhile to maintain the present standard of giving to the work of the General Church.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese will hold its annual meeting beginning Tuesday, the eighteenth of October, continuing three days. The meeting will take place at the Church of the Nativity, Huntsville, the Rev. Cary Gamble, rector. Mrs. Gamble is president of the local branch.

Among the prominent speakers on the program are Miss Theodora Young, of the Japanese mission, and the Rev. R. A. Kirchhoffer, of Mobile. Mr. Kirchhoffer will preach at the service of the Holy Communion, Wednesday morning, and Miss Young will make an address in the evening of Wednesday, at which time the pageant, "Song of Sixpence", will be presented. Upon adjournment Thursday morning, a pilgrimage will be made to "The House of Happiness", one of the most interesting missionary undertakings of the diocese, in the mountains of Alabama.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Mr. Franklin Visited the Diocese.

The three largest cities in the diocese, Staunton, Lynchburg and Roanoke, were so fortunate as to entertain Mr. Lewis B. Franklin recently. On Friday evening, September 16, he was guest of honor at a supper with the men of the Staunton churches, and at this time he led a conference on the general missionary work of the Church.

On Saturday, the seventeenth, he was guest at a similar supper conference with the men of Lynchburg.

Sunday morning, the eighteenth, Mr. Franklin made an address during the sermon period in St. John's Church, Roanoke, in which he gave an interesting account of the present situation in China and especially its relation to the missions of the Episcopal Church. As Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council of the Church he has had exceptional opportunities for the study of conditions in China and the congregation on Sunday morning were enabled to visualize the situation much more clearly than is possible from the simple reading of the secular papers.

Sunday afternoon Mr. Franklin spoke in St. John's Parish House at a meeting of Episcopal men of Roanoke and nearby points. All but two members of the vestry at Radford had driven over for this meeting and others were present from Salem, Buchanan, Pulaski, etc.

At the Sunday evening service in Christ Church, Roanoke, Mr. Franklin made an inspiring address on the general subject of Missions as a part of the life of a loyal member of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. Whittle at Covington.

The Rev. Dennis Whittle conducted his first service as rector of Emmanuel Church, Covington, on Sunday morning, September 18, and he and his family are now settled in the rectory there.

On Sunday, October 23, there will be a special service in Emmanuel Church, where Bishop Jett will formally install Mr. Whittle as rector of the parish.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

The Campaign For St. John's Hospital.

Bishop Stires delivered the address at the dinner given by him for the opening of the one million dollar campaign for the new St. John's Hospital in Brooklyn. St. John's is one of the units of Long Island's great work for others. The Church Charity Foundation, which includes a Home for the Aged, a Home for the Blind, cottages for orphan children, and St. John's Hospital; this latter is the oldest of the buildings; it serves the sick and the injured without regard to race or creed, and does a larger proportion of charity work so far as is known than any other hospital in Brooklyn or Long Island.

Its capacity now is ninety-six beds. The new hospital will have two hundred and two beds, of which fifty-four will be in private rooms the remainder in semi-private and wards.

Everything will be of the best, carried on with the finest and most modern ideas. Every contribution made during the campaign will be applied exclusively to the building fund. All campaign expenses have already been provided for, and when the hospital becomes a reality, the endowment fund will carry it.

Every man, woman and child on Long Island is asked to take a part in this splendid project, and it is felt that there are many who, reading these lines, will, with the memory of what St. John's has meant to them or some dear one, wish to send their contribution, and have a part in it. The campaign will last from October 21 to 31. A fact to be noted is that the building of the new hospital will release the old one, which will be used for a Home for Incurables, something almost unknown in Long Island, there being only one, very small one.

The campaign officers include Bishop Stires, honorary chairman; General Wingate, campaign chairman; Justice Callaghan, chairman of the building committee; William M. Gore, campaign treasurer, and the Rev. Charles Henry Webb, director of the Church Charity Foundation. The campaign headquarters are at The Insurance Building, Room 805, 130 Clinton Street, Brooklyn.

St. Matthew's Parish, Brooklyn Manor, in the Archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau, organized in 1913, has decided to build a church costing $85,000. For this they have $12,000 in pledges, $30,000 in cash, and are working to raise the rest.

The Rev. F. V. Baer is rector of St. Matthew's.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D.,

Clergy Conference.

Under the auspices of the newly-created Field Department of the Diocese, the Rev. Roger Walke, Chairman, a Conference of the Clergy was held in St. Peter's Parish, Solomon's Island, September 21-23. The Island is at the southern-most tip of the diocese, between the Patuxent River and the Chesapeake Bay. The site and weather proved ideal for the three days.

The conference was held to prepare for the work of fall and winter, and it was hoped that the entire body of clergy would be present. Only twenty-nine found it possible to attend, but their enthusiasm and interest was full assurance of the value of the meetings. The conference was fortunate in having both the Presiding Bishop of the Church, Bishop Murray, and the Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, present. The extra-diocesan leaders were the Rev. J. I. Larned of the National Field Department, and the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, President of Boone University, Wuchang, who has just returned from China and was able to give a most valuable and vivid account of the present situation in that missionary field. The chairmen of the various departments of the diocese presented their program for 1927. The session was constantly open for discussion from the floor and hence the gathering proved to be a real "conference".

Poor Business Methods.

The clergy are often, and quite justly, charged with poor business methods. This accusation of course comes from lay business men who have had unfortunate experiences in parish ventures. A recent occurrence in the Diocese of Maryland indicates that the shoe sometimes fits the other foot. The Diocesan Field Department attempted to organize a Laymen's Conference to discuss the work of the coming winter. Five hundred personal letters of invitation were sent out to a carefully selected list of laymen from every parish in the diocese. In each letter was enclosed a postcard for reply. To these letters only forty per cent bothered to reply at all. One is curious to know what happened to the other three hundred postcards. Incidentally it might be noted that only fifteen laymen accepted the invitation and the conference was given up.

Ecclesiastical Authority.

On September 15, Bishop Talbot transferred all ecclesiastical authority of the Diocese of Bethlehem to the Bishop Coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, D. D., LL. D. Therefore from this date on all diocesan correspondence should be addressed to the Bishop Coadjutor. After October 1, his address will be the See House, Bethlehem, Penn.

Bishop Talbot will return to the Diocese the latter part of September. A suite of rooms has been prepared for the Bishop in Leonard Hall. He will occupy these when visiting the diocese, but he expects to spend most of his time with his daughter in New York.

The Fall Convocations.

The program of the Fall Convocations will be devoted to the interests of the Church's program. Bishop Overs and Dr. Schmuck will present the matter at the Reading Convocation, which will meet in St. Barnabas' Church, Reading, October 4 and 5. The Scranton Convxocation will have a three days' meeting at St. Stephen's Camp which belongs to St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, and is situated about thirty miles north of the city along the Susquehanna River. Dr. Schmuck, the Archdeacon and the Bishop Coadjutor will present the Nation-Wide Campaign program and the Rev. G. R. Wood, of Cambridge, will deliver theological lectures to the men.

New Church Planned.

Grace Church, Kingston, has for a number of years been collecting funds for a new church. Under the rectorship of the Rev. Mr. Feild the congregation has entirely outgrown the present structure. According to the architect's plan the new church will be Gothic in design with a fine tower. It is to cost $100,000.

Clergy Conference.

The annual Clergy Conference of the District was held in Sweetwater the first week in September with a full attendance. The Conference opened with a Celebration of the Holy Communion.

The first hours of the business session were given over to plans for the fall activities with especial reference to the Every Member Canvass. The Speakers' Manual is the text presented by the National Council for use in this year's canvass and was thoroughly discussed in the Conference.

Mrs. J. B. McClelland, of Clarendon, Custodian for the District of the Woman's Auxiliary United Thank Offering, spoke to the Conference regarding her work, and of the purpose and spiritual significance of the U. T. O.

Enough members of the Executive Committee were present to form a quorum, and outlined a budget which the Conference adopted, and will recommend to the Annual Convocation.

Of outstanding interest was the Rev. Percy Jones' report for the Department of Christian Social Service. Heavenly Rest Parish, Abilene, through the Department report, showed excellent work.

As a result of the report the Conference recommended that a Social Service speaker be secured for Convocation and that his time be used in conference rather than in a mass meeting address.

Apostolic Results of Apostolic Service.

It would be difficult to measure the good results in the life of the Church in Shreveport, brought about in the past five years by the cooperation of a number of our bishops in traveling many hundreds of miles to bring the message of the Lenten season at the noonday hour. These services have had a cumulative interest and usefulness with the passing of each year and culminated in a splendid three weeks' series in 1927, under the leadership of Bishop Wise, of Kansas, Bishop Quin of Texas and Bishop Cook of Delaware. The devotional life of the parish has been deepened along every line. An index is the increase of congregations for the early Sunday Communion from an average of nine to an average of thirty-five. A healthy stimulus has been given to the work of the Church School and all other organizations and services of worship in the parish by these noonday services.

The most important material result has been the acquiring of a magnificent property adjoining the church consisting of a fourteen-room house and one hundred and seventy front feet of land which gives the parish one of the handsomest sites for a church in the entire South—a total frontage on one of the main streets of the city of two hundred and eighty feet. The interest of the loyal people of this parish in securing the property at a cost of some ninety thousand dollars was greatly stimulated by the results of these noonday services.

Communion Hymn.

Lord, as Thy temple's portals close
Behind the outward panting throng,
So shut my spirit in repose,
So bind it here, Thy flock among.
The fickle wanderer else will stray
Back to the world's wide parched way.

Here where Thy angels overhead
Do warn the Tempter's power away;
And where the bodies of the dead
For life and resurrection stay;
And many a generation's prayer
Hath perfumed and hath blessed the air.

Oh, lead my blindness by the hand,
Lead me to Thy familiar feast,
Not here, or now, to understand,
Yet even now and here to taste
How the Eternal Word of Heaven
On earth in broken bread is given.

The Apocalypse of John.

If any one will consider in what kind of colors this painter has dipped his paint brush, he will feel it inappropriate to prepare a frame for the picture. There is a throne; and of One that sat there he says that He was, to look upon, like unto a jasper and a sardine stone. And round about the throne there was a rainbow like unto an emerald. And before the throne a glassy sea like unto crystal.

Perhaps some of us have seen something like that glory. If one has eyes for it, it is there sometimes, on an early shining morning, when the dewdrops on a lawn are transforming the light into jasper, emerald, crystal! And you may try to describe the indescribable: misty golden greens and fiery reds and what they call "violet" rays; but the light, as it flashes through the dew, bursts into flame and borrows, in turn, all the rainbow's colors; it is light unspeakable. No painter could even name its colors. You may say, like an emerald; or like a jasper; or, crystalline; or, as Shelley would say, burning mists of gold. What the words have said is that the wonder passes beyond words.

Those who have looked at "heaps of unvalued stones", and "luminous mists" and "rainbow lights" and the shining gold—whether of jewelled crowns or of the westward waves of a sunset sea—and the diamonds—whether of dew or raindrops on bare branches, or of some priceless tiara—or those who have noticed, say, the glory of the wet slate roofs and the wet pavement flagstones and the rain puddles of the street when, after a wet hour, the sun shines suddenly through the old town's smoky sky, can see something of the light spoken of in this Apocalypse. But if any one thought the words could catch and hold the light of which they speak, he would find the glass through which he was trying to look cracked and broken, and the view a blank.

The seer saw because he was "in the Spirit on the Lord's day". And the reader must be "in the spirit on the Lord's day", too, to read what the seer has written. Perhaps it is characteristically Jewish to "get his effect" by using language of goldsmiths and jewellers. Turner would have used whole skies, morning and evening skies, and rainstorms and transparent air, and waters of stream and lake and sea, and starlight reflected in a seashore pool, and sunlight shining through the shallow waters to the sand. He would perhaps have come nearest to being able to give an English equivalent for the Jewish vision of glory. But the last word about it is that it is a description of the indescribable. It is a picture which cannot be put upon canvass, or framed in a frame. It is a light which is as the light of seven days.

And the language so symbolically used happens to be a language of light, of jasper light, and emerald light, and crystal light. This Apocalypse takes all the help it can get in this light-language. It dips its brush in liquid jewels. It uses these all up. And still, out beyond what they can say, lies the glory which is unspeakable. To hear what is said, here, you must let the symbolic language say all it can; and then pass on from whatever it has been able to suggest. If you refuse to let the words be suggestive, your mind's eyes can see nothing. But, equally, if you let the mind stop at what, as a matter of fact, they do suggest—jasper, emerald, crystal—your chance of seeing is lost. And you will not easily find a much better analogy, to suggest what Christian dogma can effect, and what are the limitations of its use.

These are the dogmas of this divine revelation. The Fatherhood of God; and the sonship of God the Son, God of God, light of Light; and the Holy Ghost. And dogma speaks, using these human words, and says that these Three, being Three, nevertheless are One. So we have set human speech to speak about God, earthly language to tell about heavenly things. We heard, just now, jasper, emerald, crystal, being used to speak of what light can be. Now we hear our words. Fatherhood, for example, and the rest, used to speak of what is the vision of the love of God in which the Church lives and moves and has its being. If you do not allow the language to be suggestive to you, you must naturally miss whatever it is that the Church's dogmas have to reveal to men. But, again, and equally, if it is thought that any form of words can catch and hold secure for us the truth about God, then the dogmatizing misleads. You might turn from the names of precious stones. to look at what the light can do. And so you can turn from the dogmas to feel what God is.—Guardian (English).

Religion for Mankind.

When Jesus declared that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, He affirmed a principle of much wider application than the right of His disciples to rub out corn on a particular day of the week. He established a test for every possible conflict that can arise of religious requirement and human need. What He said, in effect, was that every obligation imposed upon men in the name of religion is to be tested as to its reasonableness and authority by its value to human life. His word on this subject is a high form of pragmatism. It is the utter removal of religion from the area of arbitrary tabu.

This is an important discovery, and not all young people have made it. The fault in part may well have been in their teaching. Unreasoning obedience may have been enjoined as the essence of what is rooted and grounded in the need and well-being of human life. Jesus repudiates this method. If murder, arson, greed, lust and revenge are best for human life, then religion must accept and incorporate them in itself. But Jesus makes His appeal to men on the basis of a sweet reasonableness. His religion has its authority and validity in the patent fact that what it does for men is good for men.

The fact that this is true is strong presumption that the same God who made mankind is the author of the ethical and spiritual values of the Christian faith.

To young people, revolting against all that is arbitrary in religious requirement, the method and message of Jesus come as a welcome discovery as to method and content.—Youth's Companion.

The Bishop's Estate.

An inconspicuous news note on the back page of today's paper arrested my attention. "The will of the late Bishop ———, probated in the Chancery Court yesterday, leaves an estate valued at twelve thousand one hundred and sixty-five dollars."

He was a good man and a good Bishop. I have frequently heard laymen of his Church say that he handled the business of the Diocese in a masterly way. I do not know what his salary was, but I have no doubt that it was liberal and adequate, for he belonged to a Church which does things in a handsome way. Yet he left a very small estate, when you consider the present value of a dollar, and when you consider the size of estates left by business men with far less ability. Why did the Bishop leave such a small estate? It was not because of the smallness of his salary nor for the lack of business ability. He could have left a handsome estate if he had turned his mind in that direction. But he had set his mind on higher things. He was busy laying up treasures in heaven, not upon the earth.

It would be interesting if we could tabulate the estates left by some of the greatest ministers the world has ever known. I am away from my books and cannot give the exact figure, but I know that John Calvin left only a pittance. He was often in actual want. John Wesley could have been a rich man, but after his income grew large he lived on practically the same amount that he spent when his income was small, and gave all the rest to the work of the kingdom. He left comparatively little.

In our own Church there have been many ministers who received good salaries and yet spent their latter years in comparative poverty and left little or nothing.

I am thinking of one of the most saintly and one of the most gifted ministers that I ever knew. He could have commanded the largest salary paid in our denomination, and yet when he died he left only a few thousand dollars in life insurance.

How much money should a minister save? A few ministers, at least, receive salaries which would enable them, by rigid economy, to lay up comfortable estates. Some ministers are such good business men that they could, by wise investments on the side, make comfortable estates for themselves and their families. I did not know the Bishop, but from all that I have heard of him, I believe that he could have been a rich man if he had turned some of his energies in that direction. How much money should a minister save? I am sure that I cannot answer that question. There are several things that I have observed in life. One is that the people admire a minister who has a large heart and who gives liberally and wisely. They rather expect him to set them an example in the grace of giving as well as in the other Christian graces. Another thing which I have observed is that the people do not like for their minister to turn any part of his energy aside from his ministry to the commercial world. If he begins to invest in real estate or industrial stocks, the critics are right apt to begin their work.

Still another thing which I have observed is that when a minister begins to turn his attention to business, it takes just that much of his time and thought from his ministry. I was introduced to a traveling man years ago as a Presbyterian minister. He promptly made a remark to this effect: "I know Dr. ———. He is not like most preachers; he has real business sense. He can sit down in a board of bank directors or cotton mill directors and hold his own with any of them." After a pause he added the remark: "He is a very fine man, but I must confess that he is a very dry preacher." Those two remarks are probably more closely related than they at first seem to be. If the minister had put all the thought and energy into his pulpit work that he was putting into directors' meetings, he might not have been so dry in the pulpit.

The minister faces a financial dilemma. If he puts any of his energy into the business world, his people are disturbed; besides, he lessens his power in the pulpit. If he is rigidly economical and thus saves a little for old age, the people are apt to hint that he is stingy. On the other hand, if he is a liberal giver and pays no attention to the business side of life, he will leave his family in want, if he dies, and he will come face to face with poverty in his old age, if he lives.

The average business man does not know how little money the average minister has. I dare say that many business men of his denomination were surprised and even shocked to learn what a small estate the Bishop left. Business men of other denominations would be surprised to know how little money their ministers have, even in those cases where their salaries seem to be liberal. The minister and his wife have a remarkable way of keeping up appearances on very little.

In common with many other ministers, I used to ride a bicycle in doing my pastoral work. Automobiles were not so abundant in those days and not so low in price. A man who counted his money by the millions asked me one day why I did not get an automobile to do my pastoral work, and intimated that it was not quite dignified for a minister to ride a bicycle. I replied that I did not have enough money to buy an automobile. He replied that I could get a very good one for a thousand dollars. Whereupon I replied that I had neved owned that much money at one time in my life. He asked me if that was literally true. When I told him that it was he said that he could not understand that. Of course he could not. That is the very point I am making. The average business man does not know how little spare money his minister has. Even in those cases where the minister's salary seems to be very comfortable, the demands upon him are large, and there is very little left.

John Wesley had a sermon on money in which he made the following three points: "Make all you can. Save all you can. Give all you can." The first of those points the minister cannot practice, for he must not give his life to making money, but I have an idea that the people would like to see him follow the last two. The people like to see their minister give his whole heart and all of his energies to his ministry. They want him to be an example to them in Christian giving. If by following this program he comes to want in his old age, they are ready to help some. Besides, the Master has something very much to the point to say on this subject: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Rev. W. L. Lingle, in Presbyterian of the South.

Better Than Harshness.

Bishop Creighton writes of one of his visits:

"We left a little before seven for a visitation to Toluca, which is the capital of the State of Mexico. The narrow gauge railway runs through a beautiful country, at one point reaching an altitude of 10,000 feet. Unlike the central table-land further north, there is an abundance of water in this portion of the State of Mexico, which results in a fertility refreshing to see after the arid wastes in Hidalgo. In some respects the trip to Toluca is quite as spectacular as the one from Vera Cruz to Mexico City. The distances are not so great, nor are the panoramas so broad, but vast areas of cultivation open up to view from time to time while the train hangs on the edge of the mountains.

"We saw the volcano for a long time before we came to the city. No one seems to know its name and it is referred to by people who live in Toluca as 'El Volcan'. It is an enormous crater; Madame Calderon de la Barca describes it as 'a very respectable volcano for a small town'.

"At Toluca we had a very beautiful service of Holy Communion. Mr. Perez preached and Mr. Salinas celebrated. I occupied my seat in the sanctuary, but took no part in the service. Following the service, there was a delightful luncheon attended by several guests invited in to meet us. At three the Sociedad Enrique Forrester presented a most pleasing program in the church. At seven the Woman's Auxiliary gave a supper in our honor. I was particularly touched by the character of the decorations. On the wall just over my head was a huge diamond made of the Mexican colors, and in the center was an American flag made of paper and pasted to the wall. This gracious gesture is indicative of the feeling of our people in the field. In many, many churches the flowers on the altar are entirely red, white and blue.

"I had intended to make a visitation to Joquicingo on Monday, but one of our congregantes made the trip all the way to Toluca to warn me that the rebels were within five miles of town, and to beg me not to attempt the trip. Messrs. Perez and Salinas were of the same opinion, as were a number of guests from Tenango del Valle; so I decided that discretion was the better part of valor and decided to remain in Toluca over Monday. We visited the State Normal School and spent nearly the entire morning going through its many departments. There are few educational institutions on the continent which can surpass this splendid school in its well-kept fabric, its light and sunny rooms, and in the order and neatness of its dormitories and administration departments."

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of Goldilocks.

I visited the home of the daughter of Keturah, and she and her husband and I sat together by the fire after we had supped.

And when I sought my couch, the daughter of Keturah said, Thou wilt find thy bed ready, and partially occupied.

And it was even so. For I found a little oval bundle just below the pillows, and when I touched it it moved not.

And I said, The dear little girl just had to go to sleep before Grandpa came.

So I lay down beside her and she moved not all the night through. But in the early morning she began to move a little and then she remembered. And she wiggled down under the clothes, and she covered up her head.

And I knew that it was about time for me to wake up.

And I spake in a deep low tone saying, Somebody's been sleeping in my bed.

And then I waited, for a terrifying moment, and I said, Somebody's been sleeping in my bed.

And then again I waited, and I said, Somebody's been sleeping in my bed, and here she is.

And then I hugged her as a grandfather Bear should hug a soft, loving little girl.

And she threw off the clothes that were about her head, and she said, Oh, Grandpa, I tried to keep awake, so the Great Big Bear with the Great Big Voice should find Goldilocks there when he first came up, but I went to sleep and forgot all about it. But, Oh, it is so nice to wake up and find that The Great Big Bear is here to welcome Goldilocks.

Now on this fashion have I played with my Grandchildren, and they have formed a Rather Favorable opinion of Bears. And I have formed a very Decidedly favorable Opinion of those little people whom the Great Big Bear doth now and then find, whether asleep or awake, awaiting his coming.

And I cried, Oh, Lord, of all the Wonderful Ingenuity which Thou hath shown in the making of this Puzzling World, I think there is nothing that can have occasioned Thee more thought making of Grandchildren to keep the tention to this particular bit of the and Pleasant Contemplation than the doctor replied: "Your note calling atday's work is a great help. One gets over regarding these things as unusual. Eight cases like this last year."

Grown-Up Land.

"Good morrow, fair maid, with lashes brown,
Can you tell me the way to Womanhood Town?"
"Oh, this way and that way, never a stop!
'Tis by picking up stitches grandma will drop;
'Tis by kissing the baby's troubles away;
'Tis learning that cross words never will pay;
'Tis helping mother, 'tis sewing up rents;
'Tis reading, playing, 'tis saving the cents;
'Tis loving and smiling, forgetting to frown.
Oh, that is the way to Womanhood Town!"
"Just wait, my brave lad, one moment, I pray, Manhood Town lies where? Can you tell me the way?"
"Oh, by toiling and trying we reach that land,
A bit with the head, a bit with the hand!
'Tis by climbing the steep hill, Work,
And keeping out of the wide street, Shirk;
'Tis by always taking the weak one's part;
'Tis by giving the mother a happy heart;
'Tis by keeping bad thoughts and actions down.
Oh, that is the way to Manhood Town!"
And the lad and the maid ran hand in hand
To their fair estates in Grown-Up Land.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Our High Calling.

M. L. G.

"Jesus," says St. John, "knowing that He was come from God and went to God"—rose from the table on the last night before He should go, and made Himself the servant of all gathered in the Upper Room. To Him that knowledge gave only more reason to serve His brethren. So I think He would have us feel. We in our degree and way come also from God, and shall go to Him. How great is our origin, how high our destiny! No one who realizes this can fail to desire with all his heart that in this little time on earth he may do the Father's will and serve Him by serving his fellowman.

Not to be ministered unto, but to minister, our Master walked the ways of Galilee, and died at last upon the Cross. He felt upon His heart the weight of the world's suffering and sin. But He knew the triumphant joy of giving rest, and clean hearts and new purpose. He does this still and our work is to bring our brothers to Him, that He may touch them with healing and life-giving power.

This was Andrew's work, and John's and Peter's. For this Paul spent his life, and that long line of saints and missionaries that reaches like a chain of gold down the centuries of history.

In some way to bring others to Him, to bring His good news to others—what calling but this is worthy of us who like our Lord, have come from God and go, from glory unto glory, till we see Him face to face

Jimmie-Boy and Grandfather.

Jimmie-boy and Grandfather were walking home from church together. It was the holiday season, and Jimmie-boy was spending a few days "across the city" with his grandparents.

"I know the text," said Jimmie, trying to keep step with his grandfather, "and Father said if I could tell it to him when I come home, he will give me a dime."

"Let's hear it," said Grandfather, "and if you really do know it, I will give you another dime."

"He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul."

"That's right," said Grandfather, "and here's the dime."

"Thank you," said Jimmie politely, and added, "but I don't know what it means."

"Let's sit down here in this little park," said Grandfather. "We can talk a little and I can rest, for I am so old that it makes me puff to walk far."

"I don't believe it's because you are old, Grandfather," said Jimmie, but very politely, "but because you are fat."

Grand father laughed. "Maybe you are right," he said, "and the fat has more to do with it than age, but still I am glad to sit down a while. Now let us see, What was your question?"

"I forget—" said Jimmie, and then hastily added: "It wasn't a question, Grandfather, but I just said I didn't understand the text, 'He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul'."

"Here's a story I once heard Mr. Moody tell," said Grandfather. "Maybe it will help you understand what it means. I don't remember whether he told it of himself and his own little daughter, or of another man and his little girl. But just who she was really makes no difference in the story.

"He had taken her into the city one day, and as they walked along a city street, she spied a tray of small china dolls, and at once insisted that she should get one. Her father tried to persuade her to wait, but she was insistent, so he took her in, allowed her to choose the doll she wanted, and carry it away.

"By and by they came to a window where large and lovely wax dolls were displayed. They had real hair and tiny teeth that showed between their smiling lips. They opened and closed their eyes, and if you pressed a spring they made a sound like 'Mamma'.

"The little girl gasped with astonishment. Never had she seen so lovely a sight.

" 'Now,' said her father, 'one of these is what I really brought you into the city to get. But you have a new doll, one that was entirely your own choice. You insisted on it, so I cannot buy you another doll today.' And so they went home, the little girl soberly carrying a cheap little toy, instead of the lovely thing her father had intended for her."

Side by side the two sat on the bench in silence, Jimmie pondering the story. Then he burst out:

"Wasn't she the silly," he said, "her father meant to give her a great big doll, and she chose the measly little one. The silly!" Then, all at once, his face changed.

"Is that what the text means, Grandfather? God wants to give people something fine and big, and they coax so hard for something cheap that He lets them have it—and then, He sends leanness into their soul? What does leanness mean?"

Do you remember the man we saw in the restaurant who could hardly eat anything. I knew him. He has abused his stomach with drink until he almost has to starve himself. Suppose people set their hearts on the mean little things, then they finally have no appetite, no desire, for the fine things God might otherwise give them. If you know the text real well, you will understand what 'leanness' means when you get older."

"Grandfather, if the preacher had just told one teenty little story like yours, he would have helped me understand while he preached," said Jimmie wistfully.

"Maybe so, son," said Grandfather. "Maybe so. But a good many preachers are very busy men."

"But you just heard the story and then remembered it," said Jimmie stoutly.

"Are you sure that you remember that text," said Grandfather rising.

" 'He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul,' " answered Jimmie promptly.—The Presbyterian.

Pooh Goes Visiting.

Edward Bear, known to his friends as Winnie-the-Pooh, or Pooh for short, was walking through the forest one day, humming proudly to himself. He had made up a little hum that very morning, as he was doing his Stoutness Exercise in front of the glass: "Tra-la-la, tra-la-la," as he stretched up as high as he could go, and then "Tra-la-la, tra-la—oh, help!—la", as he tried to reach his toes. After breakfast he had said it over and over to himself until he had learnt it off by heart, and now he was humming it right through, properly. It went like this:

Tra-la-la, tra-la-la,
Tra-la-la, tra-la-la,
Rum-tum-tiddle-um-tum
Tiddle-iddle, tiddle-iddle,
Tiddle-iddle, tiddle-iddle,
Rum-tum-tum-tiddle-um.

Well, he was humming this hum to himself, and walking along gaily, wondering what everybody else was doing, and what it felt like, being somebody else, when suddenly he came to a sandy bank, and in the bank was a large hole.

"Ah!" said Pooh. (Rum-tum-tiddle-um-tum.) "If I know anything about anything, that hole means Rabbit," he said, "and Rabbit means company," he said, "and company means Food and Listening-to-Me-Humming and such like. Rum-tum-tum-tiddle-um."

So he went down, put his head into the hole, and called out:

"Is anybody at home?"

There was a sudden scuffling noise from inside the hole, and then silence.

"What I said was, 'Is anybody at home'?" called out Pooh very loudly.

"No!" said a voice; and then added "You needn't shout so loud. I heard you quite well the first time."

"Bother!" said Pooh. "Isn't there anybody here at all?"

"Nobody."

Winnie-the-Pooh took his head out of the hole, and thought for a little, and he thought to himself, "There must be somebody there, because somebody must have said 'Nobody'." So he put his head back in the hole, and said:

"Hallo, Rabbit, isn't that you?"

"No," said Rabbit, in a different sort of voice this time.

"But isn't that Rabbit's voice?"

"I don't think so," said Rabbit. "It isn't meant to be."

"Oh!" said Pooh.

He took his head out of the hole, and had another think, and then he put it back, and said:

"Well, could you very kindly tell me where Rabbit is?"

"He has gone to see his friend Pooh Bear, who is a great friend of his."

"But this is Me!" said Bear, very much surprised.

"What sort of Me?"

"Pooh Bear."

"Are you sure?" said Rabbit, still more surprised.

"Quite, quite sure," said Pooh.

"Oh, well, then, come in."

So Pooh pushed and pushed and pushed his way through the hole, and at last he got in.

"You were quite right," said Rabbit, looking at him all over. "It is you. Glad to see you."

"Who did you think it was?"

"Well, I wasn't sure. You know how it is in the Forest. One can't have anybody coming into one's house. One has to be careful. What about a mouthful of something?"

Pooh always liked a little something at eleven o'clock in the morning, and was very glad to see Rabbit getting out the plates and mugs; and when Rabbit said, "Honey or condensed milk with your bread"? he was so excited that he said, "Both", and then, so as not to seem greedy, he added, "But don't bother about the bread, please". And for a long time after that he said nothing . . . until at last, humming to himself in a rather sticky voice, he got up, shook Rabbit lovingly by the paw, and said that he must be going on.

"Must you?" said Rabbit politely.

"Well," said Pooh, "I could stay a little longer if it—if you—" and he tried very hard to look into the direction of the larder.

"As a matter of fact," said Rabbit, "I was going out myself directly."

"Oh, well, then, I'll be going on. Good-bye."

"Well, good-bye, if you're sure you won't have any more."

"Is there any more?" asked Poor, quickly.

Rabbit took the covers off the dishes, and said, "No, there isn't".

"I thought not," said Pooh, nodding to himself. "Well, good-bye. I must be going on."

So he started to climb out of the hole. He pulled with his front paws, and pushed with his back paws, and in a little while his nose was out in the open again . . . and then his ears . . . and then his front paws . . . and then his shoulders . . . and then—

"Oh, help!" said Pooh. "I'd better go back."

"Oh, bother!" said Pooh. "I shall have to go on."

"I can't do either!" said Pooh. "Oh, help and bother!"

Now by this time Rabbit wanted to go for a walk, too, and finding the front door full, he went out by the back door, and came around to Pooh, and looked at him.

"Hallo, are you stuck?" he asked.

"N-no," said Pooh carelessly. "Just resting myself and thinking and humming to myself."

"Here, give me a paw."

Pooh Bear stretched out a paw, and Rabbit pulled and pulled and pulled . .

"Ow!" cried Pooh. "You're hurting!"

"The fact is," said Rabbit, "you're stuck."

"It all comes," said Pooh crossly, "of not having front doors big enough."

"It all comes," said Rabbit sternly, "of eating too much. I thought at the time," said Rabbit, "only I didn't like to say anything," said Rabbit, "that one of us was eating too much," said Rabbit, "and I know it wasn't me," he said. "Well, well, I shall go and fetch Christopher Robin."

Christopher Robin lived at the other end of the Forest, and when he came back with Rabbit, and saw the front half of Pooh, he said, "Silly old Bear", in such a loving voice that everybody felt quite hopeful again.

"I was just beginning to think," said Bear, sniffing slightly, "that Rabbit might never be able to use his front door again. And I should hate that," he said.

"Use his front door again?" said Christopher Robin. "Of course he'll use his front door again."

"Good," said Rabbit.

"If we can't pull you out, Pooh, we might push you back."

Rabbit scratched his whiskers thoughtfully, and pointed out that, when once Pooh was pushed back, he was back, and of course nobody was more glad to see Pooh than he was, still there it was, some lived in trees and some lived underground, and—

"You mean I'd never get out?" said Pooh.

"I mean," said Rabbit, "that having got so far, it seems a pity to waste it."

Christopher Robin nodded.

"Then there's only one thing to be done," he said. "We shall have to wait for you to get thin again."

"How long does getting thin take?" asked Pooh anxiously.

"About a week, I should think."

"But I can't stay here for a week!"

"You can stay here all right, silly old Bear. It's getting you out which is so difficult."

"We'll read to you," said Rabbit cheerfully. "And I hope it won't snow," he added. "And I say, old fellow, you're taking up a good deal of room in my house—do you mind if I use your back legs as a towel-horse? Because, I mean, there they are—doing nothing—and it would be very convenient just to hang the towels on them."

"A week!" said Pooh gloomily. "What about meals?"

"I'm afraid no meals," said Christopher Robin, "because of getting thin quicker. But we will read to you."

Bear began to sigh, and then found he couldn't because he was so tightly stuck; and a tear rolled down his eye, as he said:

"Then would you read a Sustaining Book, such as would help and comfort a Wedged Bear in Great Tightness?"

So for a week Christopher Robin read that sort of book at the North end of Pooh, and Rabbit hung his washing on the South end . . . and in between Bear felt himself getting slenderer and slenderer. And at the end of the week Christopher Robin said, "Now"!

So he took hold of Pooh's front paws and Rabbit took hold of Christopher Robin, and all Rabbit's friends and relations took hold of Rabbit, and they all pulled together. . . .

"And for a long time Pooh only said "Ow"!....

And "Oh"! . . .

And then, all of a sudden, he said "Pop"! just as if a cork were coming out of a bottle.

And Christopher Robin and Rabbit and all Rabbit's friends and relations went head-over-heels backwards . . . and on the top of them came Winnie-the-Pooh—free!

So, with a nod of thanks to his friends, he went on with his walk through the forest, humming proudly to himself. But, Christopher Robin looked after him lovingly, and said to himself, "Silly old Bear!"—From "Winnie-the-Pooh", by A. A. Milne.—E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

The Blessing of Toil.

The toil of brain, or heart, or hand,
  Is man's appointed lot;
He who God's call can understand.
  Will work and murmur not.
Toil is no thorny crown of pain,
  Bound round man's brow for sin;
True souls, from it, all strength may gain
  High manliness may win.

O God! who workest hitherto,
  Working in all we see,
Fain would we be, and bear, and do,
  As best it pleaseth Thee.
Where'er Thou sendest we will go,
  Nor any questions ask,
And that Thou biddest we will do,
  Whatever be the task.

Our skill of hand, and strength of limb,
  Are not our own, but Thine;
We link them to the work of Him
  Who makes all life divine.
Our Brother-Friend, Thy Holy Son,
  Shared all our lost and strife;
And nobody will our work be done
  If moulded by His life.

—Thomas W. Freckelton.

The Japanese View of Christianity.

S. Sheba, editor-in-chief of the Japan Times and Mail, one of Tokyo's great Japanese dailies, says:

"No amount of sophistry will hide the fact that it is the Christian workers and Christian civilization that have lifted Japan above the darkness of old ideas and backward customs, and put her on the path of progress and higher culture."

Y. Tsurumi, son-in-law of Viscount Goto, is a rising young liberal leader. He gives this witness:

"If you will take the outstanding figures in nearly every field of beneficent work in Japan, you will find men and women who in their early life came under the influence of American missionaries."—Exchange.

Prayers for School and Teachers.

Father, bless our School
  And help us to learn to know
Thy will and wisdom's rule
  That we may love Thee so
  As in Thy ways to go. Amen.

There are so many things to learn, dear God,
  So many things about this world of ours,
About the earth and seas and skies and stars,
  About the birds and trees and rocks and flowers—
O Lord, I love to go to school and learn
  What all these pretty things are for:
And now I pray Thee, as I learn, O let
  All these help make me love Thee more and more. Amen.

Winnsboro Blue Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.

Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—granite—genuine Winnsboro Blue. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

OF ALL THE GRAY GRANITES,

Winnsboro Blue Granite

"The Silk of the Trade"

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes that resemble this granite on first appearance but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Write for Free descriptive literature, also for facsimile reproduction of a polished sample of Winnsboro Blue Granite, that you may see its beauty.

When you have purchased a monument specifying Winnsboro Blue Granite write us giving name of your Memorial Merchant, and we will send you a polished Winnsboro Blue Granite paper weight.

Deaths

NOLAND: Entered into Life Eternal, on September 14, 1927, after a brief illness in Stuart, Florida, BURR POWELL NOLAND, son of the late Major B. P. and Susan C. Noland, of Middleburg, Va., in the sixty-first year of his age.

MISS ANNIE SCOTT WILEY.

Entered into rest, on Sunday evening, August 21, 1927, at St. George's Rectory, Fredericksburg, Virginia, ANNIE SCOTT, eldest daughter of the late Benton and Sallie Scott Wiley, of Roanoke County, Virginia.

For many years she had lived a very quiet and retiring life in the home of her sister, Mrs. Dudley Boogher, who survives her.

Without warning and without apparent pain God called her and she was laid to rest in East Hill Cemetery at Salem, Virginia, in the quiet of the twilight hour and in the presence of old friends and loved ones.

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

MRS. SADIE GLASS MILLER.

Died, on June twenty-sixth, shortly after returning from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Antrim McKay, in Baltimore, Md., to her home, "Sunny Side", at Stephen's City, Frederick County Va., where she had spent much of her married life MRS. SADIE GLASS MILLER, widow of Mr. Dudley Miller, an elder in the Cedar Cliff Presbyterian Church at Vaucluse, in the same county.

Mrs. Miller had been widowed for years. She had lost two sons almost in their babyhood and a married daughter, Mrs. William McKay, a victim of the ravages of influenza when it first appeared. Mrs. Miller had often expressed her willingness to join her departed loved ones. She had no other faith nor hope but in her Redeemer who bore our sins upon the cross, in order to purchase for us an incorruptible and everlasting inheritance.

She is survived by her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Antrim McKay, and two loving granddaughters, Louise and Anne, eight and four years of age, who long to see her beautiful face again. As their years increase, may their hope of joining her increase also, where, through our divine Saviour, sin and death cannot come, and they will be united in everlasting joy.

Mrs. Miller was noted for her unfailing traits of kindness and generosity. From early youth she had been a devoted member of Christ Episcopal Church, Winchester, Va. Her funeral services were conducted by the rector of that church, Rev. Robert B. Nelson, assisted by Rev. Frank T. MFaden, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian Church. She rests beside her husband in Mt. Hebron Cemetery.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

A lasting debt of gratitude on the part of the Church in Shreveport and through it the Church at large for the services of these gentlemen, who have traveled from such distant points as Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, New Jersey and Delaware to be with us for the services, not forgetting the splendid cooperation of our own beloved Diocesan.

Another index to the value of these services is a Confirmation class of fifty-two persons in the parish this year and a renewal of active work after a lapse of a number of years in one of the oldest rural points in this territory.

Now You Must Know the Why of Missions

Never has there been a more critical time in the Missionary life of the Church. With China in turmoil, and the Mexican situation so ominous, many are asking if the Church's efforts have been justified, and if the work shall go on.

Vestrymen, officers and teachers of Church Schools, leaders of parish organizations, all Church workers, must be ready to answer these questions.

THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS

It's Because It's A Plan

You wouldn't build a home, nor go on a journey, nor start a business without a plan.

Without a plan your house would be faulty, your journey futile, and your business would fail. And so with saving money. Lay a plan to have a certain amount in a certain time. Measure the distance you will go by your power, so to speak, and your goal will be reached.

What better plan for results than one which invests each $100, as saved, into first mortgage bonds yielding 6 per cent return

ABOUT CHURCH ORGANS

If you have ever been in a strange town on Sunday and have walked about the streets wondering which church to attend, you know how inviting are the organ strains of a familiar hymn, as they drift through the doorway to greet you. And many a world-weary soul, who has not intended to enter a church, has been attracted by the soft appealing notes of an organ that seem to say, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden". It would be interesting to know just how many such have been led to Christ and the fellowship enjoyed in his Church through the ministry of the organ.

But the sweet-toned organ of today has many services to render within the church as well as without. One is the answer to a problem found in a number of churches. Have you not known churches where some members, endeavoring to be just on time, always manage to come in late, through meeting unforeseen setbacks, stopping to pass the time of day with neighbors, and the like? Many churches are improving this situation by having an organ recital, twenty to thirty minutes before each service. Not only does such a recital stimulate a congregation toward promptness, but, rightly conducted, it contributes much toward creating a worshipful spirit. Organs can now be secured in any size to take care of almost any need or to suit any available fund.

It is interesting to note that men and women are more and more coming to appreciate good organ music. Commercial enterprises have been quick to see the value of a well-handled organ. One of the country's most successful merchants has had for years in his department store a great pipe organ, and hundreds gather regularly, often in the midst of a busy day, to listen to its lovely music.

It is indeed worth while to ask yourself, "Is our church equipped with a suitable organ, and does it use what it has properly? Is our church being made inviting and restful and given the proper setting for worship by appropriate music"?

Church Equipment Service, this new feature appearing in the first issue of The Southern Churchman each month, will, from time to time, portray the advantages of many other important items of church equipment. The advertisers that are represented near by can tell you even more about the advantages of their products. Any inquiry you may wish to make will be answered promptly, if you will address The Southern Churchman, marking your envelope or card, "Church Equipment Service".

OBSOLETE

It is very ridiculous that those who vaunt and ceaselessly advertise themselves as moderns, forward thinking, progressives in religious thought, really are the crudest and stalest of fundamentalists, most hopelessly and absurdly retrogressive and reactionary. They go back to the blindness and vain groping and wild, weak wandering of as many thousand years ago as the archaeologists can trace the story of mankind and civilizations. Those of us who recite from our hearts and minds and feel with our souls the "I believe" of the Apostles' and the Nicene Creeds are the only real moderns, the people who live and think in the present and for the future. Organizations and institutions with the sign of the Cross are carrying every day help, hope, comfort and strength to relieve human miseries, to avert or soften misfortune, to brighten gloom, to lift to light the stricken and the downfallen. No such work is done under the sign of the interrogation mark, the one symbol appropriate and possible for the doubters, skeptics, infidels, atheists, those curiously acrobatic combiners of incongruities and compromisers of opposites who display themselves before the public with one foot in a Christian Church and the other in the Association for the Advancement of Atheism.

Every system or vagary or course of thought that undertakes to reject the Omnipotent and Benevolent Creator of all, revelation of Him through the Holy Scriptures, salvation, deliverance and elevation of mankind by faith in Christ and His sacrifice for us, is archaic, ancient, outworn, musty, demonstrated as flimsy and foolish fallacy by experiments and experiences of ages long gone. Nations, empires, kingdoms, built on materialism and following man-contrived religious systems, have risen to opulence and power and perished, one after another. Relics of them, dug from old ruins, desert sands and mountain sides, tell us their stories, show us exactly the same conceptions and conclusions now boastfully presented as new thought. The evolutionists have not told us from which slime-spawned thing we inherit the instinct of unseen, mysterious Power above us. History, apart from that of the Scriptures, and the relics tell us man has had it from the beginning.

The first thing for people trying to use common sense in religion to learn is that there are mysteries beyond our comprehension just as in the boundless, silent immensity of space there is a countless multitude of solar systems beyond the searching of our telescopes and the grasp of our imaginations. We may not know why the Creator left most of the human race to wander and blunder through centuries, trying to obey the impulse of worship by its own devices. It may be that He intended by allowing man to take his own poor way to teach oncoming man, destined for some mysterious, magnificent purpose, his own futility and helplessness while unaided by divinity. We may not know of that. It is beyond the knowledge and perceptions given us.

We do know, from our explorations and the remaining records, that the establishment of gods and systems of religion by human intellect and intelligence was attempted and tested, in Babylon, with Baal and Ashteroth, in old Egypt, with deities represented by bulls and bugs, cats and crocodiles, Greece and Rome with Zeus, Jupiter and Juno and their attendant galaxy on Olympus—in many ways and forms by many peoples. Invariably the man-devised deities were degraded by progressive thought and triumph of human inclination to be regarded as sharing human weaknesses and passions, to be pleased by orgies, the bestialities of the groves, saturnalia, butcheries of babies and captives. All the nations, empires, kingdoms built on these man-contrived religions have gone. Socrates and Plato, splendid searching minds, reasoned for Greece and four hundred years after them, in Paul's time, Athens was the centre of intellectual and religious chaos—an altar to the unknown god, Epicureans, Stoics, the people spending their time hearing or telling some new thing.

The Jews, comparatively a small and weak people and scattered over the earth, holding fast to worship of the Almighty Jehovah and faith in a Messiah to come from Him, have maintained nationality and religion, outlasting Babylon and Tyre and Sidon, Rome and Greece with their intellectually manufactured gods and godesses. China and India stand as they are with leadership of Confucius and Buddha, fine human philosophers and humanitarians. Christianity banished the old tangled and conflicting myths, overcame the darkness to which our self-proclaimed liberals and progressives ask us to return. Barbarian hordes who overthrew ancient culture and beauty were enlightened, softened, civilized, made mighty forces for good. By the Christian faith the old world was reconstructed and in the later days a new one has been constructed. The evidence of facts is indisputable. Those who would take us back to Babylon and old Egypt under the delusion of finding some new thing are confronted by the stories of their failures, by the living presence of strong, splendid achieving endeavor for mercy and betterment and advancement and brotherhood for mankind, being done under the banner of the Cross, with purpose and courage and guidance derived from the Holy Bible.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE BLESSED DEAD

By the Reverend F. B. Meyer, B. A.

Minister of Regent's Park Chapel, London.

ON the quay of an obscure Norwegian town I once saw a parting between a little group of emigrants, about to try their fortunes in a strange and distanct land, and their friends and relatives, who gathered to bid them a last adieu. They were altogether of the poorest class, their goods in clumsy boxes, or clumsier canvas; but that nature spoke, through their evident grief, which makes us all kin. But the chief point of interest was the wistful eagerness with which the eyes of those on shore followed the wake of the retreating vessel, as though they would fain pierce the parting veil of distance, and see the land into which their dear ones went, perhaps never to return.

So is it often as we gather around the spot from which some beloved soul is about to depart into the unseen. Whither does it go? What does it behold? Whence comes the light which illumines the wan and pallid features, till they seem already transfigured into the likeness of an angel? We gaze where we almost expect to see an open haven, but all is opaque and dark and we turn away to take up our lonely path, and to wonder with a great awe as to what is really involved in this great and solemn mystery, which we call Death, but which angels know as Birth.

Obviously, in death, there is no break in the soul's consciousness. The life of the spirit is altogether independent of the body in which it dwells. The signal-box may be in ruins, and yet the operator may be within—as clear in thought and quick of hand as in the day when all was new. It often happens, when the body is at the point of death, that the spirit reveals itself in undiminished splendor, and flashes forth in thoughts that can never be forgotten, and words that can never die. And does not this prove, beyond doubt, that the spirit is only a lodger in the body, and when the house of its tabernacle is broken up, it is not affected, but simply passes out to find some other and more lasting home. "We know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle" (this bodily frame) "be dissolved, we have a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens" (2 Cor. 5:1).

This conclusion, arrived at on merely natural grounds, is substantiated by all the references of the New Testament. There is no shadow of warrant for the idea (held by some) that there is a pause in our consciousness, a parenthesis in our existence, between death and the resurrection. "To depart," said St. Paul, "is to be with Christ, which is far better" (Phil. 1:23). But surely it could not have been far better to pass into a sort of sleep! Better to live on in this mortal life, amid the acutest sufferings, and to have the presence of Christ, than to lose that presence during centuries of unconsciousness.

"To be absent from the body," he said again, "is to be present with the Lord" (2 Cor. 5:8). The moment of absence is the moment of presence. As the spirit withdraws itself from the body, closing blinds and shutters as it retires, it immediately presents itself in the presence of the King, to go no more out forever.

"Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him" (i. e., with the Lord on His second coming for His own); "and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thess. 4:14, 16). Clearly, then, those who have fallen asleep in Jesus (this is the constant phrase used by the Apostles for the death of the believer(have gone to be with Christ, or they could not be said to return with Him; and their spirit-life must be independent of their bodies, which will only be raised when the angel-trumpet calls them from the grave.

And the beloved Apostle distinctly closes the door against all further doubt and questioning on this matter, when he says, "I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth" (Rev. 14:13). What can those two last words mean except that the blessed rest of the beloved dead dates from the moment that they have died in the Lord?

Death is not a state, but an act; not a condition, but a passage. In this it finds its true analogy in birth, by which we entered upon a new stage of existence. In death we are born out of the darkness and constraints of this mortal life into the freedom and light of Heaven. So Christ was called "the firstborn from among the dead". A moment's anguish; a wrench; a step; a transition; a breaking through the thin veil, which hangs between two worlds; a stepping across the boundary line—such is death. And the soul carries with it across that boundary line its freight of thought and life, to pursue its continuity of being and love and purpose in an unbroken and uninterrupted course. The dead are those who have died, and are living for evermore an intense bright life (Ps. 21:6).

Of course, then, our dear and sainted dead love us as they ever did. Their love to us was a part of their existence, woven into their innermost being, as warp with woof. It was not a property of the body which they have left behind, but of themselves. And we cannot think of them as being the same beings as they were without that love. If, as we have seen, the spirit carries on its life unbroken and unaffected by its passage from the body, then it must continue to live on the other side as on this side. Its love is only altered in its brilliance and intensity, not in its objects; just as a piece of phosphorus, which burns in ordinary air, sparkles with unwonted coruscations when suddenly plunged into a jar of oxygen gas.

Love never dies (1 Cor. 8). Our partial knowledge dies amid the revelations of perfect vision. Faith will be needed no more where we know as we are known. Hope fades in fruition. But love abides forever. It never fails. Death may cut off the interchange of words and acts of love, but its cold hand cannot touch that which is Divine origin, eternal in nature and everlasting in duration.

That is what we pine to know. It is not the distance that makes our souls faint and fear; we could bear that; but the feeling that perhaps we have lost forever the love which was light of our existence, the fire at which we were wont to warm ourselves. Let us know that this is preserved to us still; that they love us still who have left us; that their thoughts still enfold us in tender embracements, and follow us in our wanderings, and hover over us like ministering angels—then we can afford to be without their presence; nay, we gladly resign them, because they are happier where they are than we could ever have made them.

If your child were to cross the seas, and sojourn for all coming years of life amid strange surroundings and foreign tongues, would you expect it to cease to love? Did Joseph forget his father or brothers when suffering in the prison, or reigning on the throne? Did Moses cease to love his mother, when for forty years he dwelt in the palace of the Pharaohs? Did the little maid forget her home when she was transported to the halls of the warrior Naaman? And why should we suppose that those forget us who have passed into the City of God, where the soul only loses its grossness and denseness, but where all that is true and noble and lovely reveals itself in fellowship with its fellows?

Oh, press this thought to your innermost soul—that those whom you have "loved long since and lost awhile" love you still, care for you still, with a warmth of affection which kindles into an intenser brilliance, as they come nearer to the heart of the Eternal Father, the Source and Sun of Love. And in this love they wait for us. They cannot attain their full consummation and bliss until we, too, emerge from the shadows of death into the perfect light of eternity: so only shall love be satisfied.

But if the love of earth be preserved on the other side, will they not suffer more pain than pleasure, more anguish for those who are overcome by evil than joy for those who conquer? Yet, surely, Heaven cannot be a place of selfish enjoyment. The very essence of its bliss will be in thought and care for others. Its happy residents cannot be oblivious to the travail that rends the heart of its Master for the world He loves, and the Church, His bride. Death will only bring them into closer sympathy with Him in His great plans of redemption, and may reveal to them considerations and possibilities which will mitigate their anxiety, and enable them to wait the unfolding of His plans for those whom they have left behind. "Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."

Our Sainted Dead Will Be Capable of Recognition. Of what use would it be if they were so changed that we could not know them? Even if they were the same in essence they would not be the same to us. Of course they would not wear the body of mortality, racked with pain, dissolved in death. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven." "This corruptible must put on incorruption. This mortal must put on immortality." But the resurrection body, as is proved by the story of the Forty Days, though in many respects different, is so nearly like the body of our present life that it can be recognized, not only in the general outline, but by the very intonation of the voice, speaking the dear old familiar names of the past.

Mary did not recognize Christ at first, because she would not lift her tear-blinded eyes from the grave where she had seen His sacred body laid; but the tones of His voice recalled her from her sad reverie, and made her start with recognition. The two who walked to Emmaus would have known Him if their eyes had not been holden. And when repeated opportunities were given to the rest to verify Him as the same Jesus with Whom they had spent three years of blessed fellowship, they knew Him, and "were glad when they saw the Lord". Those alone did not see Him whose senses were beclouded by unbelief or earthliness.

So shall it be with all who belong to Him. His resurrection body is a pattern of ours. "He shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory" (Phil. 3:21). The spirit will be robed in an ethereal, spiritual body, obedient to its every behest, the meet vehicle of its bright and blessed life; but that glorious body will, in its tones and look and acts (John 21:7), recall the loved spirit with which our heart was entwined.

Sometimes, when reaching a crowded railway station, we have been refreshed by seeing the faces of those we know and love, who have come to meet us with their welcome. So Paul felt as his weary journey approached its end at Appii Forum. But what will it not be to be greeted on the other side by familiar faces, and well-known voices, and tokens by which to recognize the dearly loved! Yet this is what we may expect. We are to be gathered unto our people; a phrase which cannot mean their dust, because the word "buried" is used of this, and, therefore, which must mean their living, loving, recognized, and welcoming presence. Those whom we have befriended will welcome us into eternal habitations. A choral entrance is to be ministered unto us into the home of the saints (Luke 16:9; 2 Pet. 1:11).

Once More: The Blessed Dead Are Not Far Away. They are where Jesus is; and since He is here, may they not be here too? Heaven is not "far away", as the children are taught to sing. It is near at hand, within the moment's flash of the spirit's flight. "Today" (and it was near sunset when the Speaker said it) "thou shalt be with Me in Paradise." "Absent from the body, present with the Lord." No doubt there are several heavens through which ultimately spirits shall pass in their upward mounting (Eph. 4:10); but the third chamber of the many mansions, Paradise, where now the blessed dead are gathering, and where they await the resurrection is near, very near (2 Cor. 12:2, 4). There is but a step between.

The prayer of Jesus was that His Church should be one in the Father and Himself. He made no distinction between those who should have crossed the border line and those still lingering on this side. And thus we may infer that all those who are one with Him are one with each other; and that, when we realize our union with Him most closely, we are warranted also to realize our union with all the Catholic Church in heaven and earth, and especially with our beloved. Moses and Elias met the disciples in the Transfiguration Mount. And saints still meet us when we are nearest Christ. The members of the same body cannot be very far from each other!

Those dissevered by miles of land and sea meet each other in spirit as they gather at the same hour at the Table of the Lord; and those who touch Christ from the heaven side meet us in Him when we touch Him from the earth side. Hallelujah! To the holy soul, not heaven only, but earth, and vale, and hill, and all lovely scenes are thronged with the presence of bright, radiant, and holy spirits, among whom we recognize those who have been ours, and are ours forever.

And there is this thought also for those who have lost the child, the young sweet friend, the bright dear life from which it seemed so hard to part. From the moment that death takes them they cease to grow old; they always remain to us what they were in all their radiant beauty. There is always a child-life in the houses where a child has died, always merry ringing tones, always soft caresses, always pretty childish ways. The other children grow up and pass out into life and the world; but the child whom death has taken is always there, there for ever in unimpaired beauty and freshness. Oh, Death, thou angel of God, thou dost seem to rob us of our treasures, but thou dost really make them ours forever in the dew of an immortal youth, transfiguring them with a light that can never fade from their faces or our lives; blotting out only what we are glad to forget, preserving what we loved in imperishable beauty!

The bereaved have often said to me bitterly, "I cannot feel resigned; I know that it must be all right, but I cannot feel resigned". But, does God expect us to deny the love He gave us, as it pines for "the touch of the vanished hand, and the sound of the voice that is still"? Jesus wept at the grave of His friend.

There are two kinds of sorrow—the sorrow which misses its companion at every turn, and at each fresh sense of loss weeps bitter tears under a keen sense of pain; and there is the hard, bitter, unresigned, and unsubmissive sorrow, which will not forgive God. It is only the latter of these which is wrong. The first is natural, and there is no cause in it for self-rebuke.

When grief is fresh do not try to feel resignation, but will it. Look up to God, in the first stab of pain, and in all the long weary hours of suffering which follow, and say, "Father, I choose Thy will; I know it is the tenderest and best for my loved one, and for me. Even so, my Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight; not my will, but Thine be done". And as these words are repeated, and the will offers itself to God, and lays its sacrifice upon the altar, though the hand trembles and the eyes brim with tears, the inward tumult will subside and die down, and the sufferer will come to delight (not in the sorrow) but, in the Father's appointment, which at first it could only choose.

We never know from what lingering suffering, from what bitter grief, from what impending disaster, spiritual or temporal, God has taken our dear ones. He knows best, and has a sufficient reason, and will explain it clearly to us some day. Meanwhile, He Who wounds can heal. He Who takes will Himself fill the vacant place. And He will keep that which we have committed to Him, and give it back to us restored to perfect health and beauty.

The best cure for heart-sorrow is ministry to others. There is deep truth in the old Hindoo story of how a mother, who had lost her only son, was bidden to get a handful of flour from a house in which there was no sorrow. Of course, when she came to ask her neighbors for such a boon, she found that there was no house without its secret anguish. And in bearing and sympathizing she found the pressure of her own grief less.

God sometimes passes us into the valley of shadow that we may learn the way, and know how to lead others through it into the light. To get comfort we must comfort with the comfort wherewith we ourselves have been comforted. In wiping the tears of others our own will cease to fall.

THE BETTER LAND.

I hear thee speak of the better land,
Thou call'st its children a happy band;
Mother, Oh, where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it, and weep no more?
Is it where the flower of the orange blows?
And the fire-flies dance through the myrtle bough?
Not there, not there, my child.

Is it where the feathery palm-trees rise,
And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
Or midst the green islands on glittering seas,
Where fragrant forests perfume the breeze,
And strange, bright birds on their starry wings
Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?
Not there, not there, my child.

Is it far away in some region old
Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold,
Where the burning rays of the ruby shine
And the diamond lights up the secret mine
And the peal gleams forth from the coral-strand—
Is it there, sweet Mother, that better land?
Not there, not there, my child.

Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy,
Ear hath not heard its deep songs of joy;
Dreams cannot picture a land so fair—
Sorrow and death cannot enter there,
Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
Far beyond the clouds, and beyond the tomb,
It is there, it is there, my child.

Let us have courage and confidence. Our wills can do nothing without God's help, and God will not help us without fervor on our part. Let us pray God to kindle the sacred flame of fervor within us. The living influence of esus sent out the Apostles, not only to preach, but to console the world, to help soften the miseries of humanity, to comfort and help troubled souls; and therefore, the more we are united by fervor with the Will of God, the more we shall participate in the powers of sonsolation, and the more He will give us of His Grace to help others among whom we are thrown in our daily life.—Selected.

A LIFE-GIVING BOOK

By Bishop Warren A. Candler

THE German poet, Heinrich Heine, in his earlier days rejected the Christian religion and decried the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures; but in his later years he became an ardent defender of the faith, proclaiming with emphasis his confidence in the Bible as the source of his religious beliefs.

He said:

> "Neither vision nor ecstasy, neither voice from heaven nor bodeful dream, has pointed the way of salvation to me. I owe my enlightenment quite simply to the reading of a book. Of a book, you say? Yes, and it is an old and homely book, plain as nature herself, a work-a-day, unpretentious looking book—and the book is sometimes called quite simply The Book, The Bible. Rightly it is also called Holy Writ. He who has lost his God may find Him again in this Volume and he who has never known Him will there be met by the breath of the divine Word."

Surely this man of genius was not influenced by any bias, or prepossession, in favor of the Christian Scriptures. He spoke out of the deep convictions of a profound experience and a transformed life.

He thus shows the Bible as a life-inspiring book, which is without comparison in all the literatures of earth. Such indeed, it is.

There are those who would have us believe that its inspiration is a quality which it shares with other compositions written by men, such as Milton's "Paradise Lost"" or Tennyson's "In Memoriam". They affirm that its inspiration may differ in degree, but not in kind from that of the writings of the men of genius who have written in many lands and many times. But their rationalistic theory does not account adequately for the facts.

It has been often remarked that there is a great difference between a book which makes a man and a book which is made by a man.

The Bible is a man-making book. It may be truly said that it is also a nation-making book. It is no accident that the nations which possess it and which have been guided by its teachings and imbued with its spirit are the most prosperous and powerful peoples in the world.

Wise and generous men have established and endowed Bible Societies for the dissemination of the Holy Scriptures among all nations; and the spiritual results that have followed their efforts have vindicated their wisdom and justified their benevolent expenditures. Who would organize a Milton Society, or a Tennyson Society, for the achievement of such religious consequences?

Great as were Milton and Tennyson, and impressive as are their poems, it is impossible for a reasonable mind to put them in the same class with Moses and the Hebrew Prophets and the Christian Apostles.

Nothing short of divine inspiration adequately accounts for the existence and character of the Bible. If it were lost, and its teachings utterly forgotten, could any one or all of the most gifted and learned men in all the earth make another book like it? The critics can carp at it, and they do presume to correct it; but can they create anything that approaches it in the majesty of its visions and the power of its truth?

In answer to such questions as these Jean Jacques Rousseau said:

> "I confess that the majesty of the Scriptures strikes me with admiration, as the purity of the Gospel has its influence on my heart. Peruse the works of our philosophers; with all their pomp of diction, how mean, how contemptible, are they compared with the Scriptures. Is it possible that a book at once so simple and sublime should be merely the work of man? Is it possible that the sacred Personage whose history it contains should be himself a mere man? . . . Shall we suppose the evangelic history a mere fiction? Indeed, my friend, it bears not the marks of fiction; on the contrary, the history of Socrates, which nobody presumes to doubt, is not so well attested as that of Jesus Christ. Such a supposition in fact only shifts the difficulty without obviating it; it is more inconceivable that a number of persons should agree to write such a history than that one should furnish the subject of it. The Jewish authors were incapable of the diction and strangers to the morality contained in the Gospel; the marks of whose truth are so striking and inimitable, that the inventor would be a more astonishing man than the hero."

Even the writings of the great men who led the primitive Church in the Post-Apostolic Age fall far below the level of the Scriptures. The famous German scholar, Neander, noted this significant fact, and, in his monumental "Church History", said:

> "A phenomenon singular in its kind, is the striking difference between the writings of the Apostles and those of the Apostolic Fathers who were so nearly their contemporaries. In other cases transitions are wont to be gradual, but in this instance we observe sudden change. There is not gentle graduation here, but all at once an abrupt transition from one style of language to another, a phenomenon which should lead us to acknowledge the fact of a special agency of the Divine Spirit in the souls of the Apostles, and of a new creative element in the first period."

In view of the supernatural characteristics of the inspired writings the men of today will do well to lay to heart what St. Peter wrote to the Jewish Christians of the First Century, "Scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia", saying: "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away. But the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you" (1 Peter 1:24 and 25).

The British philosopher, John Locke, said of the inspired book, "The Scriptures have God for their Author; eternity for their object; and truth without any mixture of error for their subject-matter". To this strong statement some liberalistic minds will take exception; but surely they will not hold in disesteem what Matthew Arnold, the liberalist, said of the abiding worth of the Bible, when he said:

> "To the Bible men will return; and why? Because they can not do without it. Because happiness is our being's end and aim, and happiness belongs to righteousness, and righteousness is revealed in the Bible. For this simple reason, men will return to the Bible, just as a man who tried to give up food, thinking it was a vain thing, and he could do without it, would return to food; or a man who tried to give up sleep, thinking it a vain thing, and he could do without it, would return to sleep."

Truly men cannot do without the Bible. The human race can do without the teachings of Confucius, the Vedas of India, and the Koran of Arabia; but the loss of the Bible would be the greatest calamity that could befall mankind.

Why should any one seek to bring on such a direful disaster by efforts to impair confidence in the sacred volume and diminish faith in the Redeemer whom it reveals? In no other can salvation be found; "for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12). Why dim the world's only hope? Why extinguish the light of life and leave men in darkness ending in despair and death?

Sorrow, like pain, is indeed a tremendous and startling mystery. It is the pain of the heart of the spiritual being, of the very self. It is one of the deepest of things: it connects itself with the tragedy of the fall: it has some of its source in the deeper mysteries of sin: it takes somber color from the awful aspect of death. Sometimes it seems to come as punishment, so finding its place in the divine government of the world. It comes as a warning, and stands above the great valleys of life. Christianity is true to this great and solemn fact—the fact of the certainty of sorrow. And in this as in other things it applies its wonderful alchemy to transform. Under its touch, under the shadow of the Cross, the dark-robed figure which haunts the steps of our human pilgrimage becomes a tender and ministering angel of light.—W. J. Knox Little.

A FEW DETAILS OF THE PENDING REVISION OF THE PRAYER BOOK

By the Reverend James F. Plummer

It was painfully apparent at the last General Convention that many deputies had failed to give adequate consideration beforehand to the proposed changes. Under pressure of other business and perhaps rendered impatient by the high temperatures which prevailed in New Orleans the most of the time, and, perhaps most of all, in deference tc the very able Commission, there was a marked disposition to act favorably upon the Commission's recommendations without debate.

Without apology for what may appear presumption on the part of a very inconspicuous deputy, but rather hoping to make some small contribution to adequate discussion of the changes that are remaining to be acted upon and hoping that whatever of ignorance or misinformation may appear here may find enlightenment at the hands of the better informed, some details are here offered.

Offices of Instruction.

It is proposed that these Offices shall take the place in the Prayer Book now occupied by the Catechism and that the Catechism shall follow the Thirty-nine Articles to the back of the book.

This would introduce confusion. While the Offices of Instruction generally employ the identical words of the Catechism, there are some details in which (1.) the Offices teach one thing and the Catechism another, as e. g., the omission of a part of the answer as to the inward and spiritual grace in Baptism; (2.) the extensive additions of teaching as to the Church and the Ministry; (2.) changed details in the rubrics at the end. It would seem apparent therefore that, if both Offices and Catechism are printed in the new book the Church will be retaining superfluous or false teaching in the one instance, will confess the Catechism's incompleteness in the second and will be both retaining and rejecting some details of her rubrical law.

Perhaps, as seems probable, it is expected that the Catechism, having reached the back of the book, will follow the Thirty-nine Articles through the back cover. In this case, oughtn't it to go now and save the Church the embarrassments suggested above—and the cost of printing! The writer's feeling is, however, that the Catechism should be retained in its present place.

In detail:

1. The modernizing of the sixteenth century style of the Catechism is not always happy nor consistent. Space limits us to one instance: children in our day do not say, "Yes, verily" (answer to fourth question).

2. Since the Committee has not hesitated to make additions, it would seem that the explanation of the Fourth Commandment in the Duty to God might contain some specific reference to the Commandment.

3. Perhaps all of us have felt that the "Desire" was not an altogether happy explanation of the Lord's Prayer, but why not provide some alternative?

4. A significant addition in the answer as to Infant Baptism is that it is accomplished "by the faith of their sponsors". This would appear to require the insertion of a new question and answer covering the case of those who are baptized without sponsors.

5. The teaching as to the office of a Deacon abbreviates the Ordinal, adhering even more than the Ordinal does to the sixteenth century assumption that the whole Church is parochially organized, so that each Deacon serves his diaconate as assistant to a Priest. Why not make the answer conform to present-day conditions? It would be interesting to have statistics as to the number and proportion of Parishes today that are willing to have Deacons as their Assistant Ministers.

6. Why not provide collects at the end of the first of the two Offices as well as the second? For an intelligent and robust faith; for loyal championship of "law and order": for the constant habit of prayer?

7. Why limit our prayers at the end of the second half to those who shall be baptized and confirmed? Should we not pray for those who are now baptized and confirmed and for those who are "baptized but not confirmed?

8. And why limit our prayers in the second collect to the benefit of reception of the Holy Communion? Why not add the other "means of grace"?

9. Ought not there to be also collects based upon the added teaching as to the Church and the Ministry?

The Thirty-nine Articles.

The pending resolution is to omit them entirely from the Prayer Book. It was apparent in the Convention that a majority was obtained for this action by the union of three widely varying bodies of opinion:

1. On the part of those who considered that the most of these Articles are unnecessary, because sufficiently expressed elsewhere: in the Prayer Book and in the Constitution and Canons.

2. On the part of those who felt that the sixteenth century theology embodied in the Articles is outgrown and, in some instances, untrue.

3. On the part of those who definitely wish to repudiate the work of the Reformation and to return to mediaeval theology and polity.

It might be conceded, as to the first two of these classes of opinion, that the Creeds are a sufficient statement of the fundamental theology covered by Articles 1-5 and that Articles 9-18 are largely the expression of contemporary opinion, so that the truth embodied in them ought to be restated in the light of present-day knowledge.

But, as for Articles 6 and 7, the Church nowhere else, except in the Ordination vows, declares herself so explicitly as to the Holy Scriptures and a definite declaration was never more needed than today.

Articles 19 and 20 are at the bottom of the assumption of the whole body of Constitution and Canons that this is a Constitutionl Church, whose authority is properly limited and defined. It is perhaps not too much to say that the whole principle of our Anglo-Saxon and American civilization, as affected by the functioning of the Church, is involved here. And also (as e. g., in the matter of reservation) there is involved the question of her rightful authority, within constitutional limits. to "decree rites and ceremonies" departing from those current in an earlier age and to have her decrees respected.

Article 22 might well be improved in its wording, but its declaration is still needed.

Articles 25, 28 and 30 are perhaps the only, certainly the most explicit, statement we have of the deliverance of the Church, in our branch of it, from a magical and idolatrous conception of the sacraments.

It does not seem necessary to discuss the remaining Articles, some of which (as e. g., Article 35 "Of the Homilies", where a parenthetical paragraph recognizes the fact) have been obsolete in our American Church from the beginning.

There have been many expressions of a hope that the Church will not attempt to complete the revision in 1928. If such criticisms as I have attempted are valid—and I have spoken of only a very small part of the work—this would seem an inevitable conclusion. Opportunity should be given for further amendment and for a return to the original program forbidding the Commission to recommend changes of doctrine.

May I conclude with two further suggestions? 1. The parable of the unjust steward, in the Gospel for the ninth Sunday after Trinity is proposed to be displaced because of general misapprehension as to its teaching. As if it were possible for our Lord to "commend" the unjust steward! It would seem wiser not thus to despair of these words from His blessed lips, but rather to let Him give the parable His own interpretation, clear and unmistakable, in the four verses that immediately follow.

2. Permission to abbreviate the reading of the Ten Commandments in the Holy Communion should go on, in the Fourth Commandment to include an integral part of it: Six days shalt thou labor and do all that thou hast to do.

It is a valley cold enough and dark enough, God knows —colder indeed, and darker to some, and now and then cheered up with bright sunbeams; it is subject to all the pains and distresses, and fatigues and fears, that lead down to death itself. And the name of that valley is—the World. And yet it is given to us for a door of hope. And why? Because those blessed Feet walked in it, which, wherever they went, were beautiful with the tiding of peace; because, if we are called to tread the gloomiest and darkest part of it, we are but following them; because He that is our Head was well acquainted with the sorrows and the grief that beset this valley, bore them all, and conquered them all, and so made a glorious ending when He ascended up from darknes to Light, from passing sorrow to eternal Joy.—J. Mason Neale.

REMARKABLE REVIVALS IN CHINA

By George T. B. Davis

SEVERAL months ago communism was sweeping over China like a tidal wave. The movement was accompanied with intense persecution of the Christians, desecration of churches, and looting of mission property.

Today a change is taking place. The onward sweep of communism has been checked, and in some places the communists are in hiding instead of the Christians. The opposition to communism by the Chinese people has increased very much during the past few months. This is the Lord's doing in answer to the cry of His children in many lands. It is a striking testimony to the power of united intercession. But a great volume of persistent believing intercession is still needed to make the victory complete.

While the anti-Christian agitation is still strong, yet it is perceptibly decreasing, and in one place at least has ceased entirely.

Mr. Hermann Becker, of Yuanchow, Hunan, tells of the miraculous manner in which God answered prayer in their city. He writes:

"The students forced the people into a big parade. They wanted to take some of our helpers and Christians and drive them through the streets. The Christians decided that if they should take one of them, they would ring the large bell and all the Christians would go with those bound. I also offered to go with them. The whole city became nervous. We had a day of prayer and fasting. The parade was very big, but, except for some crying against us, they did nothing.

"On the nineteenth they wanted to have a big lantern parade, and after that to destroy our chapel. We prayed much. Just when the parade started, a big thunder storm came and all had to flee. It was the Lord! On the twentieth we still had rain, so they began the parade in the evening of the twenty-first.

"We wondered how the Lord would intervene this time. About fifteen minutes after the parade started fire broke out in the house of the General. The soldiers drove the people home with rifles and knives. Some were killed and wounded. We are now caring for some of the severely wounded men. All the anti-Christian movement has gone. The people are as friendly as ever. It was a real miracle. No one could have foreseen such a change."

Mr. Becker has applied for 13,000 copies of the New Testament for distribution in his district. One thousand Testaments have already been forwarded. Mr. Becker writes:

"We are waiting and longing for the New Testaments. The whole Church is praying for the distribution of them."

In a glorious manner the blessing of God is resting upon the nation-wide distribution of New Testaments in China. These Chinese pastors and evangelists and workers are cooperating most heartily and enthusiastically in the presentation of Pocket Testaments to Christians and inquirers to build them up in the faith, and to the unsaved to lead them into a knowledge of the truth.

Dr. Jonathan Goforth, who has probably been more graciously used than any other missionary in China in revival meetings, tells how he gives the Testaments to those who make profession of their faith in Christ in his meetings. He writes of the readiness of business men and others to receive and read the Word of God. He asks for a consignment of eight or ten thousand Testaments for use in his new field of labor in Szepingkai, Manchuria.

One of the most touching requests for Testaments has come from Mr. Hwang, a Chinese Christian—evidently a pastor—who has recently contracted leprosy, and is now in a leper colony in Fukien Province. He writes: "My gratitude in receiving your letter was greater than I can express in words; and to know that you look on all countries as one family, and all the people as blood brothers. This is what is spoken of us 'loving others as one's self'.

"All in this infirmary are lepers who have never been able to hear God's Gospel. They dare not go to the different halls for fear of infecting others. In 1900 I went to the South Seas to preach. This year at the age of sixty-nine I have contracted this disease. When I came to this infirmary I gathered my brethren together to worship God. Most of them are poor and unable to buy Testaments. I hear that your Honorable Society is giving away Testaments. I am pleased beyond measure. I write first to ask for Testaments, and second to thank you."

The last sentence of Mr. Hwang's letter reminds one of the leper in the Bible who returned to give thanks. We are gladly sending him a consignment of the life-giving little Books.

Just as the Lord has so marvelously answered prayer, and has raised up forces to oppose and put down communism in China; so in answer to the united prayers of His children in many lands, He can send a mighty spiritual awakening sweeping over China. Already remarkable revivals have occurred in certain places. In two districts at least the outpourings of the Spirit have been largely along the lines of the Welsh revival. Mr. A. J. Smith recently sent an account of how the revival began in Tamingfu in Chihli Province. He said:

"The missionaries had been praying for some time, and the Chinese also, that God would send a revival in His own way and in His own time. We had ceased to pray for more missionaries and more money, but we were praying for a spiritual revival. Everything else was secondary. We also got to the place where we said, 'Lord, send a revival; no matter in what mission, no matter in what province or station, just so a Holy Ghost revival is started'.

"We were greatly encouraged in our praying as we received letters from America, and from other parts of China, telling how the Lord was laying it upon their hearts to pray for a revival, and of the faith they had in God for a revival. A letter from a friend at T'eng Hsien, Shantung, said, 'Some day there is going to be the greatest revival in the world here in China, and we cannot get ready too soon. His day is coming'. We gave prayer the preeminence. The best hours of the day and night were spent in prayer.

"God has wrought far beyond our fondest expectations. If anybody would have told us five months ago what would take place among the Chinese and foreigners we would not have believed it. Some of the missionaries would be called out of bed at two o'clock in the morning to pray. After the burden of prayer had rested upon our hearts for a number of weeks, the burden also came upon the Chinese. They would get up at midnight, and weep and pray for the lost. They would get up early in the morning in the dark and cold and pray for a revival.

"Thousands of confessions have been made. Our best workers confessed to have sins in their lives. All kinds of confessions have been made. Restitution was made to the extent of hundreds of dollars. There was little preaching done. People would get up and quote a Scripture verse, then comment on it. Others would testify or tell of some experience and people would come to the altar of prayer. Such praying, and such Godly sorrow for sin, I have never witnessed in all my life. I knew that God had the power to work in such a marvelous way, but I had not expected it at this time nor to such a large extent."

Surely not only in China, but in the homelands as well glorious revivals can be brought to pass if prayer is given the preeminent place. Charles G. Finney declared you can have a revival anywhere if you will pay the price. They paid the price in China; and the fire fell from Heaven.

Almost simultaneously with the revival in Tamingfu District, an equal or even more remarkable outpouring of God's Spirit took place in the Chao Chen District, across the border in Shantung Province. Mr. L. C. Osborn recently sent me an account of how the Church was transformed when the flood gates of Heaven were opened. He said:

"Since the revival began the Chinese have shouldered responsibility as never before. A large part of the work that we have heretofore carried has been shifted to the shoulders of the Chinese. We will give ourselves to prayer, and the preaching of the Word. Praise the Lord!

"It was such a blessing to see open Bibles all over the house. Some of the sins confessed were as follows: A young man was so deceived by the devil that he intended to murder his whole family, and then to commit suicide. Another stole over $300 worth of narcotics. Still another defrauded a friend out of $100. One Church member, before conversion, poisoned two of his neighbor's cows; another confessed to shooting a man.

"A number of workers confessed to dishonesty in giving out famine relief money, and in handling of mission money. Adultery, borrowing things and refusing to return same, deceitfulness of all descriptions, worshipping idols after being in church several years, were among other sins. Many confessed to breaking all of God's Commandments, pride in its worst form, love of self, covetousness, years of hatred toward the missionaries, stealing, long grudges where people had not spoken for years, the taking of revenge, mistreatment of parents, and many other sins.

"The revival spread to the out-stations and whole families were united and reconciled to each other. One Sunday there were over one hundred seekers at the altar of mercy. Practically all of these were people who had heard considerable preaching: parents, relatives and friends of the Christians. On this day there was much weeping and people dropped to their knees all over the house confessing their sins. Dismissed Church members were praying for mercy, and those for whom we had given up hope were mightily revived. People came in for many miles around. God was in our midst. We shall never forget it. But if Jesus tarries and we are permitted to return to our work, we believe we shall see the 'greater things'.

"Five persons possessed with demons were delivered during the three weeks. The enemy was unusually busy, but the Lord got the victory in every case. Praise Him! Some who were under deep conviction ran away from the meetings, but God followed them and they returned, and in sackcloth and ashes bitterly confessed their sins.

"The night before our party left headquarters for Tientsin, being ordered out by the American Consul, we had a communion service with the Chinese which was followed by prayer and testimony. The Chinese said, 'It used to be you missionaries and we Chinese, but now we are one'. Praise God!

"Before this revival began it was impossible for the Chinese to see the importance of strict Sabbath Day observance, but now conviction seizes them, and they are strongly reproved for desecration of the Lord's Day. Praise God! The benefit of tithing was also never understood by many, but now some are having to make up years of back tithing, and tithing in general is a joy. Others who have never tithed are promising to do so.

"What God has done He can do again! What He has done in one place He can do in all places, therefore, let us pray and believe for a mighty revival."

It may be true that we are on the eve of an era of unparalleled spiritual progress in China. A missionary writes from Hong Kong that the leading native evangelist of South China recently said: "There will be a hundred thousand more Christians in China two years from now than there are at present."

Each one who reads these lines can have a definite share in helping to bring to pass a great spiritual awakening in China. Will you not join with thousands of others in daily persistent believing prayer for a mighty outpouring of God's Spirit in this distressed land?

The Chinese pastors are distributing among their people many thousands of prayer cards asking them to spend a few minutes daily in earnest intercession. Will you not set apart a little time daily for special prayer that a righteous government may speedily be established, and that peace may prevail; for the missionaries and Chinese Christians; for the millions of unsaved; for the nation-wide distribution of New Testaments; and for an era of unparalleled spiritual progress?

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form, wondrous things that God wouldd have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson—No. 2.
Topic—"Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth."

1. In 2 Timothy 2:15 we are admonished to rightly divide the Scriptures and herein lies the secret as to why the humble believer of limited education finds full harmony and unbounded treasure in the Holy Word, as compared with the unbelieving professor whose world wisdom rejects the wisdom of God (1 Cor. 2:14).

2. The occasion for "Rightly dividing the Word" is due to the vast scope and periods of time which the Bible covers and in which God dealt with different peoples, so that as the Church (a company of believers called out from a sin-cursed world) first came into view in "The New Testament" The entire Bible, while being for the instruction of the Church, is not entirely about the Church.

3. The Holy Scripture can be said to cover the course of this world as it lays between the past and future eternities. When we distinguish the different periods of time, we find perfect harmony and that the Holy Word never contradicts itself. The student should, therefore, learn to distinguish God's plan for each age, and especially the different classes of people into which humanity is divided, viz.: The Jews, the Genfiles, and the Church of God.

4. It is difficult to condense into our limited space a comprehensive treatise on this subject, so that the writer would urge the obtaining of a small pamphlet entitled, "Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth", by Scofield, which is of unusual merit in making clear this vitally important subject.

5. For our present purpose the accompanying chart will afford a view of the seven Dispensations, or periods, of time, distinguished by God's way of testing humanity. Each period offers a new hope, but man led on by the world, the flesh and Satan, proves himself an enemy and suffers the inevitable penalty. We have now advanced over 1,900 years into the sixth Dispensation or Age of Grace in which man's last chance is through Grace and the beloved Son of God. This present age will also end suddenly. 1 Thess. 4:17: the time is not revealed; perhaps today. Then follows the judgments of God upon a world that has rejected His Son; the purging of a sinful world, and the visible return of our Lord with His blood-bought Church, to subdue evil and to set up the promised Kingdom on earth (Rev. 4 to 19).

6. The seriously vital question at this moment is, Are you sheltered by the Blood of the Lamb of God? "When I see the Blood I will pass over you" (Exodus 12:13; 1 Peter 1:19; Heb. 9:14).

CALVARY: AN OLD EPISCOPAL CHURCH WITH A YOUNG RECTOR AND A NEW SLANT

THE work of most of our Churches begins at the foot of the chancel steps. The rector on one side of them speaks officially to the lay folk in the pews stretched out before him. The curates in their places, the choir in their stalls, the organist at his key-board, the choirmaster in his seat, seem like adjuncts to the service, a part of the background like the stained-glass windows in the walls. They are a more or less permanent part of the structure of the building, but although in reach of the rector's voice are beyond or shut off from his influence. There is nothing intentional in this. It is just that they are taken for granted, segregated in their jobs, not usually thought of as individuals as much in need of Christ, as anybody in the congregation.

The rector of Calvary Church, the Rev. S. M. Shoemaker, Jr., takes no one for granted. He knows that there is no one, no matter how happy and rich they are, nor how poor and unsuccessful, who cannot find the experience that has given motive power to his own life. Knowing what has happened to him in finding a personal religious experience, he knows the need of other people for the same experience. At Calvary Church no one human life is valued above another. There is respect for spiritual quality, but none for wealth or social position. Leadership in Calvary is gained not because of assumptions that a man may make about himself, or some one else make about him, but because he has found Christ and is learning how to share his discovery.

The first person to receive the Message after Mr. Shoemaker came to Calvary a little over two years ago, was the organist. This young fellow, musically successful, widely educated and with much practical experience, was helping to make a name for the music at Calvary and for himself. He was a person who had long lived his life with a consciousness of God, but he had never learned that God knew him so well that He could guide and direct his life, not only in the big things but in the small ones. It was before Mr. Shoemaker had settled into the rectory that they had their first interview. It was in the old library, that has recently been torn down with the rest of the house to make room for a modern building. They sat in the heat of the summer two years ago, in the bare room, on a couple of old chairs which the former rector had not thought worth taking away. Atmosphere comes not only from surroundings, but from the spirit of the people who are together. Against this atmosphere the organist found Christ not only as a friend, but as an enthusiasm, something deep enough to supersede everything else in his life. For two years more he gave his full time to music, but last spring he was guided to make the music, in which he had a great future, the chance to make a reputation, second to an untried future as a minister of the Gospel. This winter he is in a Theological Seminary, still playing at Calvary in order to earn his way, determined to use his music to the full, but to use it not for the sake of music, but for the sake of Christ.

The choirmaster in Calvary Church has done his work there for twenty years. The accuracy and beauty of tone of the Calvary choir are well known among musical people in the city. An added beauty will come into the music of this choir, Mr. Shoemaker believes, this winter. At the first meeting in preparation for the winter's work, the choirmaster, Mr. John Bland, in speaking to the choir, told them that the quality of their music would grow with their own spiritual experience; that he was as deeply interested in that as he was in their ability to read the notes he put before them.

In this choir are three people who already have been won at Calvary. The wife of the choirmaster is the soprano of the choir. Her lovely voice, which she has given freely, was not gift enough. A year ago she surrendered the whole of her life to God, and her music is no longer her first interest. She is a delightful person socially, friendly and spirited. She is as gay and quick of tongue as ever she was, but the major subject in which she is interested forever comes into the conversation. The musician has turned disciple.

Two of the choir men have been touched. One of them has sung in choirs all his life; has been passed by, by hundreds of sermons. The more personal quality of Mr. Shoemaker's preaching caught him and one of the young curates, sensing his need, made friends with him. The relationship between the two men is an extraordinary one. Priest and choirmaster meet on the common level of the need for Christ's direction in their lives. On that basis they are friends in the deepest sense, each one contributing to the spiritual life of the other. Another choir man has had since his conversion quite an extraordinary influence over the boys with whom he comes in contact through the Church. He offers them now something more than a good time while they are with him. He tramps with them, talks with them, plays with them; but these things are not, as they used to be, ends in themselves. They are a means towards establishing such relationships with the boys that they may be brought to his own experience.

It is the commonest thing in the world to take clergymen for granted. It is assumed that any one who has graduated from a Theological Seminary and is licensed to preach, and who has given his life to the ministry, knows all there is to be known about God; that he not only has this knowledge, but that he knows how to put it to practical use. It is not always so. One of the curates at Calvary, a fine high-minded, devoted young fellow, had spent, before he came to Calvary, a winter doing the routine work of a parish elsewhere. His preaching was able, he was faithful to the organization work of the Church, but he was not actually changing lives. Through Calvary he saw the opportunity for a life wholly dedicated to actual work for Christ, not work on committees nor through printed material nor just through sermons, but through the knowledge of individual lives and their problems, and the power of Christ to set them right. He is now a great force through personal work in the parish.

This is the story of a handful of people whom the congregation at Calvary looks at every Sunday. Miracles have happened steadily in the congregation itself. But that is another story.

Book Reviews

MY FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST: By James M. Gray, D. D. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Carlyle has said that the man to teach religion is the man who has it. Hence it is that this volume has an authority not often found in theological books; for it is the personal testimony of a man of God who has been greatly used of God. So far as teaching goes, the mantle of Dwight L. Moody has in a sense fallen on Dr. Gray. As the head of the Moody Bible Institute, the West Point of Christian Service, he has developed that Institution both in numbers and efficiency wonderfully, and trained and sent out a host of consecrated young people to all parts of the world to a ministry marked by great spiritual fruits. His own books are read in other languages, not alone because of a personal spiritual experience of the truth he expounds, but, possessed of rare intellectual gifts and a scholarly mind, widely read and fully abreast of the modern so-called scientific attack, this man is preeminently qualified to speak.

The book covers such bed-rock foundation facts of the faith as the Trinity, the Divine Human Personality of Christ, the Virgin Birth, the Sacrificial Atonement, the Bodily Resurrection, the Life of Our Ascended Lord, Will Christ Come to Earth Again in Bodily Form, etc. The chapters on the Virgin Birth and the Sacrificial Atonement are especially strong, though it is hard to particularize, for the whole book is a clear, calm, dispassionate setting forth of the facts of the faith once for all delivered. Amid the shifting quicksands of modern thought here we are on solid rock, with the teaching of a man who has lived it and who has in the past, and is now, under God helping to transform the world with it.

In he prefatory note he says:

"Of a distinguished contemporary, well known for his orthodoxy, it was recently said:

" 'Yes, he is an able and eloquent preacher, but his sermons could have been preached fifty years ago as well as now.'

"To this it was replied:

" 'You did not go back far enough, you ought to have said, nineteen centuries ago.' "

The author of this book could covet no higher praise. That is to say, he is more than willing to be called a 'back number' if only the number is back far enough."

The book is true to the Apostolic faith then and now; for as he shows that faith was one delivered.

There may be progress in Christianity and progress of Christianity, but such a thing as the Modernists term

"Progressive Christianity" there cannot be. Christianity and the faith are one and the same, and the faith was delivered to the saints once for all.

Quoting Casaubon: "Every doctrine which can be shown to be posterior to that faith is new, and every doctrine that is new is false."

The book is a valuable contribution, and we hope it has a wide sale. We wish every Christian home had a copy as a guide to faith in these troublous days.

RURAL CHURCH PROBLEMS DISCUSSED AT COLUMBUS CONFERENCE

Eight bishops of the Church, representing constituencies with large country populations, participated in a conference in Columbus, Ohio, through September 20 to 22, the certain effect of which will be to make the rural Church problem in the United States a vital and immediate task of the whole Church. This Columbus Conference, notable for its great informative value and its spiritual quality, brought the problem to a focus in a series of significant findings, adopted unanimously, each one of which touches a vital need developed at the conference. Following a preamble in which it is declared that "Rural Church work is of supreme importance not only for its own sake and its immediate field, but because of the constant immigration of the people from the country to the city", and that "The future salvation of our national life, the very preservation of our civilization depends upon an adequate answer to the constant need of country life for devoted leadership"; and further that "All organized religion must give itself to the evangelization of the countryside, a condition which can best be brought about by diligent religious education, constant and constructive social service, and persistent pastoral work", the findings embrace the following brief points:

That a committee be appointed to present to the House of Bishops a book of services, with a request that the House of Bishops authorize its use among those unfamiliar with the Church. This committee will be composed of Bishop Jett, Bishop Gray and Bishop Davenport.

That the Commission on Evangelism and all diocesan authorities without delay carry the Bishops' Crusade into every village and hamlet in the land.

That the various theological seminaries include in their curricula, definite courses in rural work, that the bishops and clergy seek opportunity to present to the men of the seminaries the call to the rural ministry.

That a larger use be made of laymen in village and country work, not only in matters of social service and religious education, but in preaching as well. That the objectives of the rural division of the Department of Christian Social Service, as well as the suggested program for provincial and diocesan social work receive the earnest support of the entire Church.

That the Brotherhood of St. Andrew consider the advisability of establishing a school in one or more of its summer camps for the training of laymen in evangelistic work in village and country, and that the Woman's Auxiliary and all of the great corporate agencies of the Church extend their activities into the villages and hamlets and open country of America.

And that finally, the National Council provide funds for the sending of seminary students into the rural fields of the Church each summer, for training in rural Church work.

There are other recommendations in the findings, of scarcely less importance, but those which are cited touch the deep notes of the conference. The two suggestions of outstanding note, viz.: That a service book be authorized for use in communities where the Church is little understood, and the request for a wider use of laymen as preachers, received the united and enthusiastic support of every Bishop attending the conference. Those participating in the conference included the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop of Easton, who presided; the Rt. Rev. S. B. Booth, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont; the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop of Florida; the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia; the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., Bishop of Northern Indiana; the Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., Bishop of Springfield; the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Western New York, and the Rev. Warren L. Rogers, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Ohio.

Without exception, all of these bishops voiced difficulties encountered in working among rural populations with regard to the unfamiliarity of the people with the form of service of the Episcopal Church, and their inability to follow intelligently the service as prepared in the Prayer Book. Similarly, the bishops, practically without exception, deplored the lack of clergy for work in the rural sections and extolled the services which are rendered in that connection by devoted laymen whose scope of activities they believe requires broadening in the interests of the Church.

A service book of the type desired was laid before the conference by Bishop Jett. It consists of the services of morning and evening prayer printed consecutively, with clarifications of the rubrics intended to meet the needs of the people whom it is sought to reach.

Space restrictions make it impossible to present in full the discussions at the conference, which were participated in by every Bishop attending, as well as by the Rev. Harrison W. Foreman, Secretary for Rural Work in the Department of Christian Social Service, under whose auspices the conference was held; Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Dr. C. J. Galpin, of the United States Department of Agriculture, and Dean Vivian, of the Ohio State Agricultural College. To these names is to be added that of the Rev. Dr. M. A. Dawber, Secretary for Rural Work in the Methodist Episcopal Church, whose discussion on "The Episcopal Church and Rural America", was one of the outstanding contributions to the conference.

The speakers in cumulative and startling succession laid before the conference shocking conditions in progressive and enlightened America, which are not exceeded in the heathen recesses of Africa and the Far East. Whole counties in populous states like Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, were shown to be entirely without adequate means of worship; and by ironical contrast, scores of other communities were presented where six or seven various denominations are operating in sparsely settled sections where one small mission church would do the work of all. Coupled with this, the conference revealed among those who professed Christian beliefs the most distressing ignorance and superstition. Not this only, but neglect of the training of the youth upon whom the conference unanimously agreed the future of the Church and of American civilization rests. This was the point upon which the conference laid its greatest stress. It is not in essence a rural problem at all. It is a national problem. Dr. Dawber declared flatly that unless the rural problem is solved by the Christian Churches, the great city, within a generation, "will be as barren as a tomb". Significantly also, he stressed the point that such churches as are operating today in the rural sections of the country are merely "hospitals for incurables", so far as the adult population is concerned. The hope of the future lies in the youth for whom the findings of the conference make a special appeal.

Of immediate interest to Churchmen is the fact brought out that the Episcopal Church, by reason of its form of worship is capable of making the most effective appeal, is grossly neglecting its opportunities and its mission. Through the century and a half of our national history, the people in these rural sections in large part have progressed through a period of emotionalism to a point of indifference bordering closely on atheism. Strangely enough, secular education has progressed in these sections where religious instruction has stood still. It was brought out at the conference that a need has arisen for a reasonable and rational faith, such as can be offered by the Episcopal Church. In other words, Dr. Dawber declared, and his views were concurred in by the conferees, that the Church has failed to keep pace with the educational advance in the rural sections, thus presenting an opportunity for the Episcopal Church and the sending of the call which emerges from this conference, for the Church to besfir itself and grapple with the task.

In dwelling upon this Columbus conference, one must not neglect a word regarding the spiritual heights, amounting almost to the dramatic, which it reached. There were times, well on in the evening sessions, when it resolved itself into experience meetings, at which the bishops told of the distressing handicaps under which they are forced to labor in the discharge of their tasks; of the cruel lack of workers; of their financial embarrassments; of the ignorance, superstition and also of the simple faith which they encountered. We, in the urban centers, picture our bishops in vestments, preaching from pulpits in handsome, well-lighted and comfortably ordered cathedrals. We know little of these bishops who daily perform the tasks of parish priests, who travel afoot in the mountains and valleys, who resort by compulsion to the most pitiful resources to win here and there a single soul to Christ. Now they are at last invoking the aid of the whole Church in a task which they can no longer grapple with and which, as has been pointed out, involves in the not distant future, the success of the whole Church's work.

That the Presiding Bishop is fully in sympathy with the movement which this conference launches is evidenced by his letter to Mr. Foreman, which was read at the conference; and in which he said:

"No phase of the Church's work is more vital to the Church and to America than that of village and country. God's richest blessings, not only upon the Bishops' Conference, but upon every effort the Church may make to serve and win the dwellers in rural America."

Church Intelligence

Memorial Service to Bishop Brown In Trinity Church, Porto Alegre, Brazil.

On Sunday night, August 28, a memorial service to the late Bishop William C. Brown was held in Trinity Church, Porto Alegre, Brazil. Those taking part in the service were the Rev. Messrs. Jorge U. Krischke, Vicente Brande, Arnaldo Bohrer and Henry D. Gasson of Porto Alegre; the Rev. Joao Baptista da Cunha and the Ven. Archdeacon Americo V. Cabral of the neighboring cities of Sao Leopoldo and Viamao, respectively. The preacher was the Ven. Archdeacon Cabral, the John Chrysostom of the Brazilian Church. In a simple yet eloquently beautiful way Archdeacon Cabral honored the memory of one who by his twenty-three years of labor and Christlike understanding here in this land has written his name permanently in the heart of the growing Brazilian Church. Probably he summed up the feeling of that Church when he said: "For his understanding of the Brazilian heart; because he knew the depths of our language almost as he knew his own native tongue and gave us our Prayer Book and was the leader of the Brazilian translation of the Bible —the best we have in Portuguese;— for all this and much more we honored 'Dr.' Brown (as we knew him). But we loved him because he was the great missionary and living testimony of the Divine Love; because he taught us what it was to be the friend of Christ."

Meeting of The National Commission on Evangelism.

A unanimous conviction that the Bishops' Crusade was an initial step whose results, far exceeding expectations, demand that the work inaugurated go forward; and plans for a vigorous prosecution of this work, were the outstanding features of an all-day meeting of the National Commission on Evangelism at Church Headquarters, New York, on September 28.

Bishop Darst presided. Among those in attendance were Bishop Freeman of Washington, Bishop Cook of Delaware, Bishop Oldham, Coadjutor of Albany, the Rev. Dr. Tomkins of Philadelphia, the Rev. J. S. Bunting of St. Louis, the Rev. Henry Wise Hobson of Worcester, Mr. Willard Walker of Tennessee, and Mr. Samuel Thorn of New York. Mr. Leon Palmer, Executive Secretary of the Commission was also present; and during the progress of the meeting the Rev. Lloyd S. Charters, rector of Emmanuel Church, Norwich, New York, and the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, rector of Calvary Church, New York City, held the close attention of the members of the Commission with detailed recitals of the results of visitation evangelism in their parishes.

After prolonged discussion of the Crusade and the outlook, the Commission authorized the appointment of a Field Worker, to be named later, who will look after the promotion of the objects of the Commission in the field. It was also decided to make the Rev. Dr. Loaring Clark, General Missioner of the Commission, to act also in the field, both officials to act under the direction of Bishop Darst, Chairman of the Commission.

Through the adoption of the report of Bishop Cook, Chairman of the subcommittee on Literature, a new hand book of the Commission will be issued, outlining a course of procedure, including a parish program, by which the work begun by the Crusade can be effectively carried forward. A letter to be signed by the Bishops who are members of the Commission, was also approved and will be sent to every Bishop of the Church urging cooperation in the intensive follow-up on the Crusade; and there will be isued by the Commission at an early date also, a pastoral letter addressed to the whole Church upon the same subject.

The Commission plans to lay before the General Convention at Washington, in connection with its report on the Bishops' Crusade, appeal for support for a systematic and well-organized follow-up. Among the plans under consideration is a project for an Evangelistic Mass meeting. Bishop Darst was requested to keep in touch with Bishop Freeman and the Presiding Bishop in order that such a meeting may be arranged that will not conflict with other arrangements which may be made for the Convention.

A REQUEST FOR PRAYER FROM THE PRESIDING BISHOP.

The National Council and its Departments will hold their regular fall meetings in New York, October 11, 12 and 13. They will welcome the prayers of our people that they may be rightly guided in their deliberations.

May I ask that, if possible, prayer be offered in our churches on one or more of the Sundays previous to the meetings.

Faithfully yours,
JOHN GARDNER MURRAY,
Presiding Bishop and President of the National Council.

Conference of Virginia Clergy.

A notable gathering of Virginia clergymen will assemble in Richmond October 25 and 26 to attend a conference of Virginia Liberal Evangelicals, arranged under the auspices of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, and to be held there. An interesting program of subjects for consideration and discussion has been arranged, and a number of the ablest and most prominent ministers in the State will take part in it.

Plans for the conference are being made by the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector of St. Paul's, and his vestry and congregation will act as host and sponsor for the meeting and in arranging for the entertainment of the visiting clergy.

It is hoped that this gathering will prove, in the life of the Virginia Church, what the congress of the Episcopal Church has proved in the life of the Church at large.

Bishop Winchester in Rochester Hospital.

Just as we go to press the news is received that the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, Bishop of the Diocese of Arkansas, is at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minnesota. He has passed successfully the first stage of an operation on his throat, the second part to be performed in a few days.

Meantime, the Bishop is holding his own, and the physicians are encouraged as to his condition.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Bible Class Organized.

A Bible Class, growing out of that which was held at Epiphany Church last year, has been organized at St. Paul's Church, Twenty-third Street, and promises at least some of the remarkable enthusiasm and attendance experienced at Epiphany Church. This class will meet every Wednesday evening at St. Paul's Church, and it is hoped that this hour may accommodate some who have been unable to attend the Sunday morning classes at Epiphany Church. Believing that those who come out to study the Bible should have the best possible instructor, Mr. McCallum, rector of St. Paul's Church and others assisting him, have secured the services of Dr. W. E. Rollins, of Virginia Theological Seminary, as instructor of this class.

Dr. Rollins is an acknowledged Bible student of high attainments.

The Journal of the Thirty-second Convention of the Diocese of Washington, which was held last May, has been issued recently by the Secretary of the Convention, the Rev. H. Allen Griffith. The book will be found of great interest to any active Church worker in the diocese, and will also serve as a useful reference book. Reports show a total of 24,511 communicants in the diocese, with 10,517 children in the Sunday Schools. The total property value of Church buildings and grounds is estimated to be $5,002,280, not including the property of Washington Cathedral.

Washington Cathedral will be the first place visited by a group of people of Mt. Pleasant Congregational Church, in a series of pilgrimages made every Thursday evening to some religious place or institution. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes will address the group on the subject, "Cathedrals Old and New". These pilgrimages are to be made this year in place of having visiting speakers come to them on Thursday evenings and it is characteristic of the widespread interest in Washington Cathedral, that it should have been chosen as the first to be visited.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., celebrated on Thursday St. Michael's and All Angels' Day, the fourth anniversary of his consecration as Bishop of Washington. Special services in commemoration of this event was held at Epiphany Church, where he was consecrated on September 29, 1924, and at Washington Cathedral.

In the four years of his service in the episcopate, Bishop Freeman has become very popular in the diocese and many called last week to congratulate him on the anniversary of his consecration.

Memorial Service in City Mission Church.

On Sunday morning, October 2, a memorial service was held in the Episcopal City Mission Society's Italian Church of San Salvator, for Mrs. Ida R. Bouker, who died in Albuquerque, New Mexico, on July 15.

For more than thirty years she was branch president of the Girls' Friendly Society of San Salvator.

Canon George S. Nelson, D. D., former Superintendent of the City Mission Society and the present superintendent, the Rev. L. Ernest Sunderland, D. D., participated in the service, assisted by the Rev. John Castelli, vicar at San Salvator, and the Rev. Henry J. Chiera, formerly the minister there.

Special music was arranged by the young people who had knows Mrs. Bouker and her work. This included "Largo", played on the violin by James Caruso.

Memorial Windows Placed in St. James' Church.

Two stained glass windows have recently been placed in the clerestory of St. James' Church, New York. One is in memory of Hildegarde von Brockdorff, who was a beloved deaconess in several New York parishes, as well as in Grace Church, Providence, from which she came to St. James' Church, New York, when the Rev. Dr. Crowder began his rectorate there.

The other is in memory of William Tucker Washburn, Mary Rosina Washburn and William Mayhew Washburn, and is the gift of the family, which is one of the oldest in the parish.

These windows will be dedicated in a few weeks by the rector.

"The Seventy's Visitations."

Seventy members of the Men's Club of St. John's Church, Lansdowne, comprising men widely known in that community and in the business circles of Lansdowne and Philadelphia, started out Sunday afternoon to do a definite piece of religious work as laymen based upon that portion of the tenth chapter of the Gospel of St. Luke, which reads:

"Now after these things the Lord appointed seventy others and sent them two by two before his face into every city and place whither he himself was about to come. And he said unto them the harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest."

As did the disciples of old the seventy members of St. John's Meu's Club Sunday went forth two and two to visit as many families in the field covered by their parish church. The purpose of the visitation was to cement the people more closely together in Christian Fellowship, Christian Work and Christian Worship. They welcomed especially new men in the community, and spoke in general of the Church's desire to be at the service of the community in its work and its ministrations.

Reports of the "Seventy's Visitations" were made to their rector, the Rev. Charles E. Tuke, at a supper meeting given in the parish house at 6:30. The committee of laymen in charge of the "Visitations" included Rush T. Haines, Don Sidle, Harlan P. Statzell, Mercer Bailey, Ernest H. Brown, James Davis, Edward Rittenhouse, James Wilkinson, T. Cassin Davis and Guy Britton.

Annual Church School Institute.

Religious education in its relations to the home, the community and the public schools was discussed by leaders in various specialized fields of educational work from Philadelphia and other cities, in connection with the fifty-seventh annual Church School Institute of the Diocese of Pennsylvania on Monday afternoon and night, October 3, in the Church of the Holy Apostles.

Upwards of four hundred and fifty representatives of the Episcopal Church Sunday Schools in the diocese, in addition to many others interested in the subject of religious education, took part in the Institute. The sessions began at three o'clock when Bishop Garland and the Rev. Dr. George H. Toop, rector of Holy Apostles welcomed the delegates. The Rev. F. E. Seymour, Director of Religious Education of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, presided at the Institute. From five to six o'clock Sectional Conferences were held, followed by a dinner and at seven-forty-five the Institute held a public meeting.

Speakers at the afternoon session included Dr. Adelaide T. Case, of the Teachers' College of Columbia University, New York, and the Rev. Malcolm Taylor, of Boston, General Secretary of the Province of New England. Dr. Taylor's topic was "Christianity in the Home". At the night session the Church School of Holy Apostles presented a pageant, "He Liveth". Stephen F. Payne, District Superintendent of the New York City Department of Education, discussed "Correlation Between Public and Church Schools", which is probably the most widely discussed educational topic of the present time. "Ideals in Religious Education" was discussed by the Rt. Rev. Robert E. L. Strider, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of West Virginia and Chairman of the Department of Religious Education of the Province of Washington.

Dr. Case and Mr. Bayne also led discussions at the Sectional Conferences, at which other leaders included Mrs. A. H. Brown, Director of Religious Education, St. Paul's, Chestnut Hill; the Rev. A. Vincent Bennett, Chairman of the Diocesan Commission on Young People; Mr. W. O. Easton, of the Y. M. C. A. Department of Education and Chairman of the Diocesan Commission on Adult Education.

Organist's Fortieth Anniversary Observed.

The congregation of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Kensington, on Sunday, October 2, commemorated forty years of continuous service to the parish of its organist and choirmaster, Frank H. Longshore. There was festival music and augmented choirs at the ten-thirty service and again at the seven-thirty night service. There was a parish luncheon at one o'clock at which the guests included many former members of the Good Shepherd choir.

Mr. Longshore is widely known in the city's musical circles. During his service at the Kensington Church more than fifteen hundred men and boys have been connected with the choir, nine of whom entered the ministry. Two of the latter, the Rev. William R. Scott, Chaplain in the United States Army, and the Rev. Leonard C. Hursh, Canon of St. John's Cathedral, Quincy, Ill., were speakers at the luncheon.

"Home-Coming Day" at the Church of the Advocate.

The congregation of the Church of the Advocate, Philadelphia, set aside Sunday, October 2, as a "Home-Coming Day", at which former parishioners and parishioners who are living at a distance, were present to meet the new rector, the Rev. T. Leslie Gossling. "Forgetting Those Things That Are Behind" was the sermon topic at the morning service.

The Rev. Francis Campbell Steinmetz, who was called to the rectorship of St. Mary's Church, West Philadelphia, on Sunday, October 2, held his first services in his new charge.

The Rev. and Mrs. John Lowry Hady on Wednesday night were tendered a reception by the congregation of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes) Church, Swanson Street below Christian, Philadelphia. Mr. Hady, who was formerly rector of St. Paul's, Doylestown, was called to the rectorship of the historic Old Swedes Church last summer and held his first services there a week ago.

Meeting of The Executive Council.

Adopting a Forward Movement Budget of $83,200 for the year, 1928, and laying plans for a vigorous campaign this fall to secure pledges sufficient to cover this amount, the Executive Council of the Diocese met in Holy Trinity Parish House, Greensboro, on September 8. The Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor, presided. Having been directed by the diocesan convention to employ an executive secretary, the Executive Council heard with great interest an address by Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, of the Diocese of Springfield, on the functions and value of the executive secretary. The employment of this executive was referred to a special committee, who will act by January 1.

The Council heard an interesting report from the Department of Rligious Education. This department is active in ministering to the young people in North Carolina colleges, in promoting the Young People's Service League, and in raising the standard of teaching in the Sunday Schools of the diocese. Plans were adopted, looking to the restoration of St. Mary's Chapel, near the North Carolina College for Women, at Greensboro. The Rev. F. H. Craighill was named as Secretary for the Advent-Epiphany offering, and the Rev. T. F. Opie, D. D., as secretary of the 1928 Lenten Offering.

The Field Department reported that nine parishes in the diocese had agreed to a ten per cent increase in their apportionments. They have made extensive preparation for the Every Member Canvass. Their plans include an intensive campaign in a number of parishes to raise the level of their giving to the Forward Movement objects.

Unique Method of Paying Pledges.

Planting and harvesting a potato crop by their own efforts was the unique method adopted by the women of St. Andrew's branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, Rockingham County, to pay some of the pledges made by them. Though they planted their three pecks of potatoes very late in the season they harvested seven bushels. Both the planting and harvesting was accompanied by prayer. One of the women even offered to do the plowing, but the husbands did this for them.

Effective work is being done in St. Paul's Parish, Monroe, by the Rev. Duncan Thomas, minister-in-charge, who lately came into the Church from the Presbyterian ministry. Mr. Thomas recently presented a class of thirteen for confirmation, the largest in the history of the parish. The music at St. Paul's has been so improved recently that it is said to be the best in town.

The Rev. W. H. Wheeler, Superintendent of the Thompson Orphanage, was recently elected president of the North Carolina Orphanage Association, in recognition of his outstanding usefulness.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Christian Education Sunday.

Christian Education Sunday has been observed fully throughout the diocese. As a means to this, the Board of Religious Education sent out a regular form of service, which has created great enthusiasm, been widely used, and been equally satisfactory for city or rural parishes. It is of special importance to the officers and teachers of the Church School, calling for a pledge of loyalty from them, as well as the whole congregation.

Teacher Training Classes.

The first Teachers' Training Class of the season met on the evening of September 22, at Merrick, Long Island. It has a membership of about one hundred. It has taken up the different grades of the Christian Nurture Series, and six of our clergymen are enrolled on its faculty. Another class was opened one week later at St. Paul's Church, Flatbush, and this had five of the clergy on the faculty.

Lay Readers' School.

The Bishop's school for lay readers in the Diocese of Long Island opened on October 5, at the Parish House of the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, with a dinner to which all who are taking part in the school were invited. The Executive Committee has had a meeting at which courses have been decided upon, and all plans made.

Week-Day School For Religious Education.

The Rev. Arthur R. Cummings, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill, L. I., has opened a week day school for Religious Education that will run for the whole year; it has the best of equipment. This is just one more to be added to a number of these schools, which are being most successfully carried on, and doing good work on Long Island.

The Teachers' Fellowship, which started one year ago in the diocese has now four hundred members; its paper, the Teachers' Fellowship Exchange, has just been published; it is an unusually good paper, and the only one of its kind it is invaluable for teachers, and most informing for parents who are interested in their Children's Church training. Copies may be obtained at the Diocesan House, 170 Remsen Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Its editors are Miss Martin and Miss Allison.

Church School Building Dedicated.

Loyalty was the keynote of the sermon of the Rev. Charles T. Wright, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Memphis, on Sunday, September 25, when he dedicated the new Church School Building, which will be used until the congregation decides whether or not the Church shall remain in its present location on Vance Avenue. Following Dr. Wright's address, the children of the school renewed their loyalty to Church, cross and nation.

Most of the work of raising funds for the school was done during the long illness of Dr. Wright as a demonstration of loyalty by the congregation.

Sanctuary Window Dedicated.

An impressive service was held at St. Mark's Church, Orchard Park, on Sunday afternoon, September 11, when a new sanctuary window was dedicated. The window was given in memory of John Townsend, Mary A. Wright, his wife (through whose untiring efforts the mission was started) and William E. Towsend, their son, by members of the family. Evening Prayer was said by the Rev. F. M. Marchant, of Trinity Church, Lancaster, N. Y., and following the singing of the hymn, "The Church's One Foundation", Mr. Richard Townsend, grandson of Mr. and Mrs. John Townsend, unveiled the window. Then followed the dedication by the Rev. Charles H. Smith, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Buffalo, who established St. Mark's Mission in Orchard Park. The dedication sermon was preached by the Rev. E. J. Stevens, of St. Simon's Church, Buffalo, formerly in charge of St. Mark's Church. The choir was assisted by members of St. Simon's Church, Buffalo, and Trinity Church, Hamburg. Miss Helen Townsend, a daughter of the late William E. Townsend, of Buffalo, presided at the organ. Other clergy present were the Rev. Henry de Wolf de Mauriac, of St. Matthew's Church, East Aurora; the Rev. C. H. Jessup, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo; the Rev. A. S. Ashley, of Buffalo, and the Rev. Paul B. Hoffman, in charge of St. Mark's Church, who acted as master of ceremonies. The closing prayers and benediction were given by Dr. Smith. The beautiful window, which adds greatly to the enrichment of St. Mark's Church, bears the inscription, "I know my sheep", the central figure being that of Christ, with a lamb in His arms.

School For Church Workers.

The Virginia Episcopal School for Church Workers will be held in Grace and Holy Trinity Parish House, Richmond, October 10 to 21, daily except Saturday and Sunday, with classes from 5:15 to 9 P. M., with one hour for supper at 6 o'clock.

The 5:15 classes will be on "How to Teach" in kindergarten, primary departments, grammar grades, junior grades, Church School administration and adult Bible classes. From 7 to 9 of the first week, classes will be held in a ten-hour course in "The Life of Christ", "The Pupil" and "Young People's Work". In the second week studies will be in "History of the Church of England", "The Teacher" and "The Prayer Book".

A mass meeting of Sunday-school officers, teachers and Church workers will be held Sunday, October 9, at 8 P. M., in Grace and Holy Trinity. Officers of the school are:

President—The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.

Executive Officer—The Rev. Wm. Edward Cox.

Secretary-Treasurer—The Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon.

Executive Committee—The Rev. W. E. Cox, Chairman; the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon.

Clergy Conference Unqualified Success.

The Diocese of Newark embarked on somewhat of an experiment this year by holding its fifth annual clergy conference at the new Holiday House of the Girls' Friendly Society at Delaware, New Jersey. In previous years the conference has been held at Eagle's Nest Farm Camp, Delaware, and living conditions have been somewhat plainer than were offered this year at the Holiday House. Whether the improved situation, the carefully prepared plans of the committee or the splendid faculty proved the stimulus, the conference was undoubtedly the most successful in the history of the diocese and attracted about twice as many men as in previous years.

The conference opened with dinner on Monday, September 12, followed by an address of welcome by the Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearly, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese and an address on "Christianity a World Factor", by the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Overs, D. D., formerly Bishop of Liberia.

The program of the recreation committee of the diocese, headed by the Rev. J. W. Albinson, announced baseball, swimming, tennis and golf for the hours not spent in class.

Early each morning at a portable altar set up in the spacious living room of the Holiday House, the men gath-

Collect for Seventeenth Sunday After Trinity.

Lord, we pray Thee that Thy grace may always prevent and follow us, and make us continually to be given to all good works; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Yet Art Thou With Us.

"O Lord, on Whom we gaze and dare not gaze,
Increase our faith that gazing, we may see;
And seeing, love; and loving, worship Thee.
Through all our days, our long and lengthening days,
O Lord, accessible to prayer and praise,
Kind Lord, be gracious to all men and me.
Lighten our darkness and amend our ways.
Call up our hearts to Thee, that where Thou art
Our treasure and our heart may dwell at one;
Then let the pallid moon pursue her sun,
So long as it shall please Thee, far apart—
Yet art Thou with us, Thou to Whom we run,
We hand in hand with Thee and heart in heart."

—Christina Rossetti.

The Open Mind.

"It is only ignorance that has the open mind." These words were quoted to me and I reflected on their truth. I believe they are true. Consider the matter. If an unfamiliar truth is put before us, if we have any knowledge at all we are practically sure to find in our knowledge reasons which prove it to be unlikely, if not impossible. Knowledge, whether theoretic or gained by experience, is almost certain to be against it.

On the other hand, if we have no knowledge, the inherent power of the truth may very probably carry conviction to the soul.

When our Lord told His disciples that it was easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom, their half incredulous surprise arose from the fact that they had knowledge both of camels and needle eyes. The view that the "needle eye" was the popular name of a small postern gate through which a loaded camel could not pass seems to be untenable. For the disciples would have caught the idea of the illustration; they would have known it was possible for the camel to be unloaded, and for the rich man to renounce his wealth. It was because the thing was utterly "impossible" that they were amazed; their knowledge taught them it was impossible. Our Lord assents; According to the laws they know it is impossible; it is possible only to laws they do not know.

Now, as it seems to me, Christianity can only be approached with the open mind of ignorance willing to be illuminated by truth.

All the religions of the world come from God and hold His Truth. But Christianity is summed up in the revelation of God Himself standing incarnate upon the earth which has fallen away from His wisdom and His Love.

We can bring no knowledge to bear upon that which is revealed to babes. The Kingdom is a new Kingdom; there are new laws, new relations between God and man and between man and man. There are laws of conduct which in the light of the knowledge gained by the experience of struggle and pain are stark madness. "Resist not." "Blessed are the meek." "If a man smite thee, turn to him the other cheek." It is racial and national and social suicide! All knowledge, hardly gained, cries out against it.

God has brought an unfamiliar Truth to earth, and all man's hardly-won experience has been fighting it, and is fighting it still.

God has revealed a new birth, and new freedom—yes! and a new condition of matter and new laws of time and space. He revealed them by the Empty Tomb, and the True Body which entered through the locked door, which broke bread with them and vanished from their sight.

Christ came to the ignorant of the open mind; He thanked the Father for revealing His secrets unto babes.

But there was none, it seems, so bereft of knowledge as to be able to grasp the Truth.

The whole purpose, as it seems to me, of prayer and meditation is to cleanse the mind from the knowledge of earth, and make it "ignorant", approaching the mysteries of the Kingdom with an open mind which has grasped but the one Fact.

"With God all things are possible." Thus we shall learn of Him in the Country of the Little Child, that secret place within the soul where He teaches the ignorant, bringing out of His treasures things both new and old.—Michael Wood.

A Bidding Prayer for the Fearful.

There be thirsts many and grievous. But of all grievous thirsts, most grievous is the thirst of fear. Where it abides there is no fertility, no blossoming, nor any fragrance of refreshing shade. But the scorching sun of daily life beats down pitilessly, and men stagger forward on their dusty paths, with parched throats and empty hearts. And many who are most athirst know not why they suffer, and to still their torment, drink of the poisonous pools that lie hidden here and there, covered by weeds and unclean.

There be waters many, some deadly, some refreshing. But of all healing and refreshing waters, that which refreshes most and heals eternally is the water that flows in the great river of God's Presence, the water of the love of God. Where it flows, there is fruitful flowering and peaceful shadow. And they who drink of it, or but touch it with their lips, go onward gladly, forgetting the weight of their burdens and the weariness of the way.

You who wake suddenly in the depth of night with your heart pounding against your ribs, and oppressed by an appalling sense of some hidden danger; who try to call out for help and cannot speak, and who fear lest you must die ere you can call. In the midst of those dark hours of terror the river of God's Presence is flowing, unseen, beside you. Stretch out your trembling hand, and sprinkle your throbbing, bursting breast. The tumult and the fear that is choking you will subside; your heart will begin to beat slowly, softly, regularly; the fear and the hidden danger will vanish—and you shall sleep—in peace. For underneath are the Everlasting Arms.

You, wife or mother, surrounded by those you love and so absorbed in their lives that you have scarcely a thought for your own, and who, though fearing nothing for yourself, are fearful—so fearful for them. . . . . Come, to the clear air and the soft light that lies about the river of God's Presence. Drink. And your eyes shall be opened and all your fears shall disappear. For you shall see your beloved ones watched over by a love and a care even more loving, more careful than your own; guarded by a protection infinitely more powerful than any protection that you yourself can afford.

And you who walk all day long amidst small irritating fears that beset every inch of your daily path—fears of your own incompetence, of your inefficiency, of your failing powers of application and success; fears about your body and its functions; fears about your mind and the way it works or refuses to work; fears of infection, or serious illness, of a helpless, hopeless old age. . . . . Sit you down, in quiet, by the side of the river of God's Presence. And, as a boy tosses stones into a pond, so cast your fears, one by one, into the waters of God's love. They will disappear. You shall never see them again, and you can walk on, a free man, once more. Only, only, in the future, do not wander too far from the river bank.

And you who have been, suddenly unexpectedly, brought face to face with the thought of death. . . . Come—first be a man. Man enough, or woman enough, to stagger as far as the river. Its waters have great power for such as you. Drink . . . . So you shall find yourself not facing a blank, hopeless wall, the end of everything, but looking forward through a wide gateway into the true beginning.

You, also, who are afraid of your secret self, that part of you which the world never sees, but which you yourself know and dread. . . . For you, too, the river of God's Presence flows by. Give over pretence; drink of its waters; and—face your enemy. You shall find it a poor, weak thing, after all.

And you—God help and strengthen you—upon whom the black cloud of depression has descended; you whose mind no longer seems to function freely and happily. . . . If you are so fast bound in misery that you cannot move yourself, beg of some one to lead you to the bank of the river of God's Presence, and sit down there with whomsoever has guided you, asking that he hold tight—tight to your hand—and with his other hand, give you to drink. And you shall drink, perhaps not healing immediate, perhaps not sudden all-sufficing peace; but you shall drink strength—and patience—and courage. Courage and patience enough to tarry here by the river, until for you the darkness is overpast, and the sun of happiness shines upon you once more.

For there be, indeed, thirsts many and grievous. But of all grievous thirsts, most grievous is the thirst of fear.

And there be waters many, some deadly, some refreshing. But for the thirst of fear there is but one water that refreshes—but one water of eternal healing—the water that flows in the river of God's Presence, the water of the love of God.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."—From "Fear" by Dr. John R. Oliver.

Hymn.

"Who knows? God knows; and what He knows is well and best.
The darkness hideth not from Him, but glows,
Clear as the morning or the evening rose
Of east and west.
Wherefore man's strength is to sit still:
Not wasting care
To antedate tomorrow's good or ill;
Yet watching meekly, watching with good will,
Watching to prayer.
Some rising or some setting ray,
From east or west,
If not today, why then another day,
Will light each dove upon her homeward way
Safe to her nest."

Uninterested Christians.

Why are Christians not interested in foreign missions? There are many reasons, some petty, some grave.

First, some Christians are affected by hostile propaganda picked up in steamships and hotels through the Orient. Many thoughtless tourists repeat random remarks and chance impressions on their return home, and their report is taken as truth by many uninformed Christians. The reasons for this generally hostile attitude of the foreign community in Oriental lands toward foreign missions are not hard to find. Many are engaged in exploiting the natives, and the presence of the missionaries is a hindrance to their schemes; many of them are ignorant of the real facts; though they may have lived years in the same city with missionaries, they have never spent one hour studying the missionary work which they presume to criticise. Many others reflect the imperialistic and hostile attitude of their governments that are frankly not in the Orient for any altruistic motive. Some hate the missionaries because their loyal lives are a reproach to the easy and low standards of the lives of many in the foreign communities.

Second, many Christians are ignorant of the commands and obligations of their Christian faith. They are loyal, so far as they go, but they do not go far. Christianity is to them simply a resource of good and helpful emotions. They have never faced the last, the supreme command of the Christ whose servants they profess to be—"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature". They have never studied the story of the Christian Church, which is simply the account of the outreach of fresh waves of missionary impulse taking control of land after land. They have never had it brought home to them that missions is not an "elective course" to be taken by a few, but a "required subject", the concern of all who matriculate in the School of Christ.

All that such Christians need to transform them from missionary liabilities to missionary assets is instruction and education of both head and heart.

Third, some Christians lack imagination, and without imagination the long flights of Christian faith, unaided, are impossible. The ability to enter into the experience of alien races, to conceive what it would be to live in a world without Christ, to carry on life in an environment untouched by the New Testament, to go through the experiences of childhood, marriage, fatherhood, motherhood, with no Christian Church to minister to their needs; to be in and of a country where "there ain't no ten commandments", no settled justice, no modern medicine, no libraries, no free education, none of the institutions that have developed because of Christianity—there are many who are simply lacking the sensitive imagination needed really to grasp such situations.

Of course, they are not interested in foreign missions. They jog along their days of conventional religious life, absolutely unstirred by the divinest, altruistic enterprise of the centuries. They always will, unless some one helps these less-gifted folk, rouses their sluggish imagination, awakens their altruism, summons their dormant heroism. Stories, biographies, dramas, moving pictures, real experiences of real men and women are some of the spiritual tonics that such Christians need.

Fourth, there are some who are held in the tenets of a false theology: the theology of those who do not believe that Christianity has any vital message for the world; the theology of those who hold that there is nothing very much the matter with mankind; the theology of those who hold that one religion is about as good as another; and the theology of the few who believe that to make any attempt to reach and save the non-Christian world is to interfere with the sovereignty of God. "Young men, when the Almighty gets ready to save the heathen, He will do it without your aid or mine," said one of this hard persuasion over a century ago.

Such Christians need to have the great challenge of a great Englishman brought home to them; need to realize that they must either give up their Christianity or accept Christ's teaching with all its implications:

"I am asked," he said, "if I believe in foreign missions. I reply, do you believe in the gospel? For be sure of this, if Christ has no message for the men in Shanghai that it is worth giving my life, if necessary, to get to them, then He has no message for the man in London that I need bother about. He is either Saviour of the whole world, or He is no man's Saviour."

Fifth, there is a great multitude of Christians in whom the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches have choked the good seed of the Word so that it becomes unfruitful. In a life brimful of dress and amusement, of travel and business, of personal interests and luxury, there is no room for foreign missions to take root and grow. How many distractions there are claiming our attention—many of them good, but all at war with the supreme good. Our social "duties", a round of functions and teas and dinners, our clubs, our bridge parties, our tennis, golf, skating, dancing, our beauty parlors—their name is legion. Is it not time to call a halt, rearrange our schedule, give first things the first place in our time, our interest, our contributions of money and of service?

And last, there are those who are members of the Christian Church, but not members of Christ. They have never known the joy of forgiven sin, never turned their backs on self, never yielded the sovereignty of their lives to the Master, Christ. They have never risen with Him to walk in newness of life.

There is nothing to appeal to with this class in their present state. They do not respond to any Christian motive because they are not Christians. They are not interested in Christian missions because, primarily, they are not interested in Christ.

The only way to reach such is to pray for them until they are made new creations in Christ. One of the first manifestations of the new life will be a new interest in things which before they despised.

We have considered among Christians not interested in foreign missions, the misinformed Christian, the untaught Christian, the stolid, unimaginative Christian, the warped Christian, the worldly Christian, and the unconverted, formal Christian. There are, doubtless, many more types to be included in the class of the uninterested; but these are certainly some of the causes of uninterested Christians. Uninterested Christians!—uninterested in the cause that is dearest to their Lord! uninterested in the greatest international enterprise of our day! uninterested in the progress of the kingdom of God!—Helen B. Montgomery, in Christian Sun.

Jesus' Love For Childhood.

Jesus was the first great teacher of men who showed a genuine sympathy for childhood, perhaps the only teacher of antiquity who cared for childhood as such. Plato treats of children and their games, but he treats them from the standpoint of a publicist. They are elements not to be left out in the construction of society. Children in Plato's eyes are not to be neglected, because they will inevitably come to be men and women. But Jesus was the first who loved childhood for its own sake. In the earlier stages of civilization it's the main endeavor of men to get away from childhood. It represents immaturity of mind, ignorance and folly. The ancients esteemed it their first duty to put away childish things. It was Jesus who seeking to bring about a new and higher development of character, perceived that there were elements in childhood to be preserved in the highest manhood; that a man must, indeed, set back again towards the innocence and simplicity of childhood if he would truly be a man. Until Jesus Christ, the world had no place for childhood in its thoughts. When He said, "Of such is the Kingdom of God" it was a revelation.—Selected.

The Perfect Guest.

"She answered by return of post
The invitation of her host;
She caught the train she said she would,
And changed at junctions as she should.
She brought a small and lightest box
And keys belonging to the locks.
Food rich and rare she did not beg,
But ate the boiled or scrambled egg;
When offered luke-warm tea she drank it,
And did not crave an extra blanket,
Nor extra pillows for her head;
She seemed to like the spare room bed.
She brought her own self-filling pen,
And always went to bed at ten.
She left no little things behind,
But stories new and gossip kind."
—Selected.

Do right, and God's recompence to you will be the power of doing more right. Give, and God's reward to you will be the spirit of giving more. Love, and God will pay you with the capacity of more love; for Love is Heaven—love is God within you.—F. W. Robertson.

For the Young Folks

Souls and Temples.

Souls are built as temples are:
Inch by inch in gradual rise
Mount the layered masonries;
Warring questions have their day,
Kings arise and pass away,
Laborers vanish one by one,
Still the temple is not done,
Still completion seems afar.

Souls are built as temples are:
Here a carving rich and quaint,
There the image of a saint;
Here a deep-hued pane to tell
Sacred truth or miracle;
Every little helps the much
Every careful, careless touch,
Adds a charm or leaves a scar.

Souls are built as temples are:
Based on Truth's eternal law,
Sure and steadfast, without flaw.
Through the sunshine, through the snows,
Up and on the building goes;
Every fair thing finds its place,
Every hard thing lends a grace,
Every hand may make or mar.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Needs of Jesus.

M. L. G.

How little Jesus seems to have needed in His life on earth! He could share the homely fare of His humblest disciple and make His bed in a rocking fishing-boat. A manger was enough for His cradle, and the carpenter's rude home a place great enough for His up-bringing. He asked few favors—a drink of water, twice; a lad's luncheon to be a thousandfold returned; an ass, and an upper room. He who gave with such Kingly bounty, asked but little of His friends here.

It is the mark of a great character that a man can do without things, and yet be not starved. Our Master, by whom all things were made, was free from any bondage to things, and those who have most closely followed Him have been able to possess or to do without, not much affected either way.

This does not mean that we should not enjoy all we have, for all is of His loving grace. Only let us not be choked with things, nor demand too much of material comfort; but counting, as Paul did, all things loss that we might gain Christ, live above the clutter of material things. So we will be happy in what He has given us, but free from the service of possessions, that we may serve only Him.

AN ADVENTUROUS NIGHT.

In Two Parts—Part I.

George Morgan Knight, Jr.

Silas Higgins was a farmer in the northern neck of Michigan. During the winter months, he carried mail to the lumberjacks to earn some extra money.

For days a blizzard had raged making all communication next to impossible. The roads were snowed in under deep drifts. About noon of the third day the storm had subsided. The sky had cleared enough to let the sun shine through in scattered places.

It was evening. The mail had lain waiting for some hours. What did the letters tell? They were from mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, sweethearts, wives and even children. Each one had been sent to some dear one. Perhaps there was a new little stranger at some husky lumberjack's home far away. Or there might be sad news in one. Who could tell what was in those letters?

As Silas Higgins put on his coat, he glanced out of the window at the fast coming night. He then put the mail in his bag and fastened down the flap over it. The mail should have been taken earlier in the day. Uncle Sam's mail could not be delayed. Again the man cast an anxious glance at the sky. But he saw there would be no danger from the weather.

"You better not try ter go now, Silas," the storekeeper said, as he watched the man button up his heavy coat. "It's dangerous ter go at night. 'Specially in weather like this."

"But I must get the mail to the camp. It's lain here too long already. I know a short cut."

"It's not a wise thing ter do, Silas. Termorrow the men'll come for it themselves," the merchant protested. "I warn you th' last time. We never heerd what became of Luke Johnson, who dis-'peared last winter in these parts."

By this time Silas was ready to go.

"Fetch me a lantern, Tom," the farmer called to the boy near the big, black, hot stove, which was in the middle of the store. "I am not afraid. Thanks for the lantern, Tom."

The lantern was lighted and the wick turned up. Seeing that he had everything he needed, Silas opened the door and stepped out into the bitter cold night, with a handshake and warnings in his ears from the storekeeper.

A moon had stolen out from behind the scurrying clouds, and shone in patches. It was light in the open, but where the firs grew thickly it was very dark.

The village was soon out of sight, and Silas trudged on into the dark forest, of great tall fir trees. He was happy and whistled:

"A song to thee, fair state of mine,
Michigan, my Michigan;
But greater songs than this are thine,
Michigan, my Michigan;
The whisper of the forest tree,
The thunder of the inland sea,
Unite in one grand symphony
Of Michigan, my Michigan."

How happy the men would be at the camp, when he arrived, Silas was thinking. They did not expect him a night like this. There was great rejoicing whenever he did take the mail. It was always a pleasure to take it. What gratitude shone in their healthy faces! The brightness came back to their eyes. He missed taking the mail in the summer.

When the cold wind stopped blowing the forest seemed very still. One felt the solitude which settled over the vast wilderness. The wind had blown the snow into huge banks. In some of the places the ground was not well-covered. Thus Silas made better time than he had judged he would.

Suddenly he had the sensation that some presence he could not see was watching him. He could not hear it. But he instinctively knew that he was being followed. Silas had just entered the most dense part of the fir forest. It was dark and still. Only his lantern made a weak light in the blackness around him. The wind had been shut out by the trees here and it was difficult to get through the deep drift. Silas managed to do so. He must keep on! Silas Higgins wanted to look back, but he dared not do so. The thing might attack him.

Then that presence seemed to dart pass him. As it did so two pairs of eyes gleamed ahead of him. Big, searching eyes, they were. A limb fell laden with snow, just missing his heels. Two fiery eyes again looked at Silas. Yet they kept some distance ahead. Every now and then they would stop and gaze in his direction.

(To be concluded.)

Understanding Tom.

It was Polly's birthday—good little Polly with her self-sacrificing spirit and her thought for others.

She arose as usual, for birthdays are not always holidays, although they ought to be. Mother had been ill for several weeks, and for the last month Polly had been at the helm, planning the meals and cooking and cleaning.

Though it was her birthday, Polly did not start out by saving herself. Father was especially fond of bran muffins for breakfast and she would make a pan of them for him by way of a birthday offering. She would have bacon and eggs, too, and oranges.

Father and Tom looked at the neatly spread breakfast table with approval. Father put both arms around her as she came in.

"My good little daughter," he began with an affectionate kiss, "I trust you will have many, many more birthdays—each one happier than the last."

And then he put into her hands a small package.

Polly's face, flushed from the heat of the kitchen, lighted.

"Thank you, father dear," she cried. "You know how much I appreciate any gift you would give me."

The package proved to contain gloves. A sensible grey pair that Polly especially needed. But she could not help but feel just a little disappointed. On one's birthday one sometimes wanted gifts that were not quite so sensible. Mother's present proved to be material for a new dress. This was a sensible gift, too, for Polly needed the dress—a dark blue serge—there was no doubt about that. But still in Polly's heart there was that same disappointed feeling.

By ten o'clock Aunt Louisa came in bringing her gift. Two pairs of hose—and again the feeling of disappointment predominated. It was nice having all these sensible birthday gifts but, because she was a beauty-loving little girl, she longed for something different.

The day passed and at five o'clock a knock sounded on the door. Polly went to open it. There on the front steps was a boy from the florist's and he held in his hand something very carefully wrapped up.

"Are you Miss Polly Maxwell?" he asked.

Polly nodded.

"Yes, that is my name," she answered.

The boy handed her the package.

"It's all right, then," he said, as he took himself off.

Polly, with the package in her hand, went into the living room and very carefully took off the wrappings. And there before her astonished gaze was a blue and silver basket filled with chrysanthemums, pink rose buds, ferns and laurel.

"Oh!" cried Polly breathlessly; "oh! oh!"

And then she spied a card lying among the flowers. With fingers that trembled, she extracted it and held it up. On it were written these words, "To the best little sister in the world on her birthday, from her affectionate brother, Tom".

Polly suddenly stooped to lay her cheek upon the fragrance of the basket. As she did so she whispered a little prayer of thankfulness. Tom had made it all right. He knew that she needed something just that lovely, to set off her sensible birthday gifts.

"To the best little sister in the world on her birthday," she whispered the words softly.

Tom knew. Dear old understanding Tom!—Susan Hubbard Martin, in Presbyterian Advance.

A Song of Brotherhood.

When thy heart with joy o'erflowing
Sings a thankful prayer,
In thy joy, oh, let thy brother
With thee share!

If thy soul with power uplifted
Yearns for glorious deed,
Give thy strength to help thy brother
In his need.

Share with him thy bread of blessing,
Sorrow's burden share;
When thy heart enfolds a brother,
God is there.

The Star That Became a Flower.

Once upon a time, ever and ever and ever so many years ago when only the Indians lived in the great American wilderness, there was a Beautiful Star that dearly loved the Children of the Red Men. Every evening when the star rose in the heavens it looked down upon the tiny papooses swinging in their birch-bark cradles and half grown boys and girls curled up in their blankets for the night, and wished it could do something to make them happy.

So the Beautiful Star begged the Great Spirit to allow it to live with the Children of the Red Men.

"You shall have your wish," promised the Great Spirit, "but you must choose your own home upon the earth."

The Beautiful Star did not know what to do. If it rested upon a high mountain top, it would seem almost as far away from the Children of the Red Men as though it still lived in the sky, for the little children could never climb high enough to come and see it. If it rested upon the prairies the buffaloes would trample it with their heavy feet. If it dropped into one of the wigwams its shining face would be blackened by the smoke of the wood fire. What could it do?

The Beautiful Star went again to the Great Spirit. "Master of the Stars," it said, "I have thought and thought and thought where I shall be safe upon the earth. But I cannot think of a single place. Must I remain in the sky far away from the dear Children of the Red Men?"

"If you really want to go down to the earth you will find a safe home for yourself," answered the Great Spirit.

The Beautiful Star went back to his place in the sky. Night after night he looked sadly down upon the villages of the Red Men and wished to be with them. Night after night he tried to think of a place where he might be safe upon the earth. Then suddenly one night he gave a great cry of joy and spread out his points like beautiful white wings as he slowly floated down, down, down, through the quiet evening air. The other stars were frightened; but Beautiful Star was very happy to find a home at last.

The next morning while the dew was still upon the grass the little Children of the Red Men came running from their wigwams rubbing the sleep out of their eyes. As they came to a deep pool near the edge of the forest, one of them gave a cry of joy. The others ran to the edge of the water, clapping their hands with delight.

"Look, look!" they cried, pointing to the middle of the pool, "look at the star that has become a flower."

There in the middle of the pool, safe from harm, yet near enough to make the Children of the Red Men happy was a lovely star floating upon the water. But its shining points had turned into gleaming white petals, for Beautiful Star had turned into the water lily which little children still love, even to this day.—Child Play.

The Most Perfect Machine.

Think of the most perfect man-made machine that you have ever seen or heard of, writes a doctor in the St. Nicholas, and I'll guarantee you can find it perfected—as it was thousands of years ago—in your own body. The camera is but a crude reproduction of the marvels in the eye. The telephone transmitter is far more perfect in the ear. The finest factory for converting raw material to finished usefulness is nothing to the marvelous factories constantly at work in the glands within you. The telegraph system was complete in the nerves; and the radio, in that still unfathomed mystery—the sympathetic nervous system.

Study the great wonder that is yourself, master it, guard it, keep it useful and clean. You will never wholly understand it, but fortunately you do not need to, since there is a greater Master than yourself to direct your efforts and guide you in your intended way.—The Continent.

Friendships.

Did you ever read the story of "Damon and Pythias"? It is an old myth, but is very much like the story of David and Jonathan.

Pythias plotted against the life of the ruler and was condemned to die. He wished to go home to arrange his affairs before he died. The king was afraid he would not return and so would not consent to his going. Damon offered to place himself in the ruler's hands and to die in his stead should Pythias not return on the appointed day.

Great rains caused the river to rise, and Pythias was delayed. He returned at the last moment just in time to save Damon. This proof of true friendship so moved the ruler that he pardoned Pythias and asked to be admitted to their friendship.

Amos R. Wells says:

Friendship is the greatest thing that can enter any life.

This great thing can be brought about in any life; it does not merely happen.

Friends can be made. Therefore, no one should sit down and whine because he has no friends. Bestir yourself!

Friendship depends upon one thing alone, on character. And because you can make character, you can make friends.—Selected.

'Tis the Name by right exalted
Over every other name,
That when we are sore assaulted,
Puts our enemies to shame:
Strength to them that else had halted,
Eyes to blind, and feet to lame.

—Latin Hymn.

Deaths

DEANE—Entered into Life Eternal on September 26, 1927, in the eighty-fourth year of her age, EMILY CARRINGTON DEANE, widow of the late Captain Frank H. Deane, and mother of Mrs. John M. Taylor, and Miss Sallie C. Deane.

"Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

MRS. MARY BAYNHAM DAVIS.

At Lexington, Virginia, September 4, 1927, MRS. MARY BAYNHAM DAVIS died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James W. Kern, at the age of ninety years. Mrs. Davis was the widow of the late Rev. Dabney C. T. Davis. Interment was beside her husband in the cemetery at the University of Virginia. Services were conducted by the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D.

ROBERT EVELYN LETCHER.

ROBERT EVELYN, son of Dr. Robert P. and Anna Meade Woodson Letcher, died September 19, 1927, at the residence of his brother-in-law, Mr. N. L. Bronaugh, in Nicholasville, Ky. The services were held at the residence, conducted by Bishop Lewis W. Burton; burial in the family lot in Lexington.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

VIRGINIA PEGRAM JOHNSON ZIMMERMAN.

In the death of MRS. VIRGINIA P. JOHNSON ZIMMERMAN, widow of William Water Zimmerman, which occurred at her home, 5322 Enright on Friday, September 16, St. Phillip's, St. Louis, Mo., has lost one of her oldest members.

Owing to failing health, Mrs. Zimmerman had been confined to her home for a long time and although she was unable to take an active part in the parish life yet she always had a deep interest in what was going on in and about the Church.

The funeral service, conducted by the Rev. Hayward S. Ablewhite, was held from the Church last Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. "Lead Kindly Light" and "Abide With Me" were sung by the Church Quartette during the service.

Mrs. Zimmerman was taken to her final resting place in the family plot at Bellefontaine. She is survived by one daughter, Martha E., and two sons, Johnson and Louis W. Zimmerman to whom the sincere sympathy of the members of St. Philip's is extended for their great loss.

MRS. PARKE CHAMBERLAYNE BAGBY.

Exceeding fourscore years, the life of Mrs. Bagby has been, to a wide circle of friends, unique. She conquered difficulties of every kind that face the mother—long widowed—of many children, and gained the loyal and admiring friendship of all who knew her. She kept up, almost to the very end, with the books and thought of the day, and was the most charming talker of her delightful circle. She lifted a torch for mind and character whose light is seldom equalled.

"O God, to us may grace be given
To follow in their train."

MRS. WILLIAM C. PRATT.

At Camden, her beautiful home in Caroline County, Virginia, on the banks of the Rappahannock River, about thirty miles below Fredericksburg, Mrs. Eliza T. Pratt, widow of the late William C. Pratt, at an early hour Monday, August 29, closed her eyes upon a great past. With a majesty peculiar to such a woman she made her way through the golden doors of faith into the mansions of life eternal and into the restfulness of perfect peace.

Mrs. Pratt was the daughter of Mr. Richard H. Turner, of Woodlawn, King George County, Virginia, and Margaretta Hooe, of Alexandria, Virginia. She was educated at Lefebre School, Richmond, and the Virginia Female Institute, Staunton, Virginia (now Stuart Hall). Upon her marriage to Mr. Pratt a union was effected that henceforth was destined to make Camden famous for its charming hospitality and the center of a culture which has ever given Virginia her best traditions and crowned her life with the honor of an unsullied Christian faith.

Camden, dear old Camden, has lost its very heart; the source of its sweetest atmosphere; the charm of its cherished heritage and its song of perennial joy. Mrs. Pratt was one of those distinguished and cheerful spirits whose benedictions lift up the standards of life and gladden the world with a precious and contagious laugh.

Mrs. Pratt put the impress of her beautiful soul upon her children, and intrusted to them the good name of her God and the welfare of her Saviour's kingdom on earth. This tribute would not be complete should I fail to say that in imitation of Him who went about doing good she blessed with her abounding kindness every under-privileged person who came within her knowledge. She impressed upon every life that breathed within her presence the image of a finer ideal and the enthusiasm of a more aspiring life.

Far and near this good woman was known, honored and loved. In our memory of her, as in our association with her, the fragrance of her enriched character and the grace of her well ripened life will be treasured as a sacred heritage and should inspire us to emulate her devoted and fruitful life.

The writer cannot think of Mrs. Pratt without thinking of the Church. The Episcopal Church has lost one of its most loyal and faithful communicants; its every interest was dear to her heart. She adorned its life; she stood with womanly gallantry at the head of every group of Christian soldiers as they made fresh advances in an effort to plant the Christ banner nearer the summit of a more triumphant and glorious life. She herself has reached the heights; from those heights she bids those who knew her to follow on and in due time to share her joy.

It was fitting that Camden, over which Mrs. Pratt so long and graciously presided, should provide a home for her sacred body. Her grave there will keep fresh the story of her life and perpetuate the high sentiments which will preserve for those who follow her the true riches of a well-lived life. The service was conducted by her rector, the Rev. Robert U. Brooking, of St. Peter's Church, Port Royal.

Mrs. Pratt is survived by two sons: William T. and Richard S. of Fredericksburg, and by two daughters: Miss Margaret of Camden and Mrs. James B. Funsten of Poughkeepsie, New York. To each of these her devoted children and host of loving friends send messages of tender sympathy and offer prayers for their comfort which can come alone from the God and Father of us all.

ROBERT C. JETT.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

ered for daily celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese being the celebrant. After breakfast the first lecture on "The Devotional Life" was given by the Rev. H. Adye Prichard, D. D., Honorary Canon of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. Canon Prichard stressed the lack of emphasis on the supernatural in our day. He devoted himself largely to the subject of prayer: first, as man's duty to himself, secondly because of the need for us to be reminded of our best souls. He said, "Our Gods are a sublimation of our heart; to whom do we actually pray? Have we only an anthropomorphic mental idol. Thirdly, Canon Prichard said that we pray so that we might find reality in our search for truth. Great stress was laid on the mystical note, leading to a deeper and more real appreciation of God in human life and man's union with God.

The Rev. Royden K. Yerkes, D. D., of the Philadelphia Divinity School, the second lecturer, took as his subject, "The New Testament and Modern Life". He stressed the relation of the Bible to early literature from the laws of Hammurabi on. The eastern character of much New Testament literature was brought out. Dr. Yerkes, in characteristic fashion, said some startling things, as for instance: "We are still fooling the laity. They still think we can interpret the Bible. The laity don't know that most of us can't even read Greek."

The Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of North Carolina, had an interesting course on Parabolic Preaching, following Dr. Yerkes' hour. Bishop Penick traced the use of fables, similes, proverbs and parables and suggested outlines of different types of sermons.

Bishop Overs, who spoke at the night meetings, thrilled the clergy with the recital of his missionary experiences in Africa.

At the evening meetings Bishop Stearly and the Rev. Charles E. McAllister, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, spoke on Diocesan Organization, plans for the year and Parish Organization.

Annual Conference of Laymen.

On Saturday, September 17, at luncheon about eighty laymen from the various parishes and missions in the diocese gathered at the Holiday House for their annual conference. After an informal meeting, recreation was indulged in in the form of tennis, indoor baseball, swimming and boating. In the afternoon, and again after supper, Bishop Overs spoke on "The World Call to the Church". Bishop Stearly made a strong appeal for real consecration in the lives of the laity and conducted a preparation service for the early Communion on Sunday morning. The Bishop Coadjutor was the celebrant at the early celebration, and, after breakfast, a three hour conference on the diocesan plans for the promotion of the Church's Program was conducted by the Executive Secretary of the Diocese. After luncheon, Bishop Stearly and Bishop Overs spoke and there were addresses by the various laymen.

As at the clergy conference there was great enthusiasm and a feeling of strong confidence in the outlook for the coming year.

Much of the credit for the success achieved is due to the Girls' Friendly Society Holiday House and its efficient management.

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. C. B. Brewster, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. C. Acheson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Church Army Caravan Provided.

At the Choate Clergy Conference, Wallingford, Conn., held September 26-28 under the Chairmanship of the Rt. Rev. Edward Campion Acheson, Bishop Coadjutor of Connecticut, the clergy unanimously asked the Church Army to provide and equip and man a Motor Mission Van similar to the ones operated by Church Army in the Dioceses of New York and Vermont, for work in that diocese next season. By gifts and promises made on the spot the cost of the caravan was more than guaranteed by the clergy themselves.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Henry N. Herndon, for the past two years curate in Trinity Parish, Wilmington, Delaware, has entered upon his duties as rector of St. Philip's Church, Uvalde, Texas.

The Rev. J. C. Wagner, a Professor in the Bishop Payne Divinity School, and formerly rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Petersburg, Va., has entered upon his duties as assistant minister at Grace Church, Petersburg, the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., rector.

The Rev. Robert Bell, vicar of Old Swedes Church, Wilmington, Delaware, has been granted a three months' leave of absence on account of ill health, and on September 14, left for Battle Creek, Michigan, where he hopes to regain his usual health. During his absence, the Rev. J. Gibson Gantt will have charge of the church.

The Rev. Ernest Van R. Stires, son of the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., Bishop of Long Island, who was ordained by his father last June, began his work the first week in October by starting a new mission at Bellerose, L. I.

The Rev. M. B. Mitchell, formerly minister-in-charge of St. Mary's Church, Hot Springs, Ark., has entered upon his duties as rector of St. Augustine's Church, Fort Smith, Ark.

The Rev. Roy H. Fairchild, rector of St. Ambrose's Church, Chicago Heights, Ill., has accepted a call to All Saints' Church, West Plains, Mo.

The Rev. F. S. Persons has resigned the charge of Lynnwood Parish, Rockingham County, Virginia, and for the present is living in Philadelphia.

The Rev. Horatio Gates, formerly vicar of Coos Bay Missions, Coquille, Ore., has accepted the call to be general missioner in the Diocese of Oregon, with residence at Carvallis, Ore.

The Rev. John J. Cowan, formerly of Cristobal, Canal Zone, has entered upon his work as minister-in-charge of St. Barnabas' Church, Dunsmuir, Cal.

The Rev. William Charles Pearson, formerly minister-in-charge of the Holy Spirit Indian mission, Orleans, Cal., has accepted the charge of Emmanuel Church, Grass Valley, and Trinity Church, Nevada City, Cal., with residence at Grass Valley.

DEATHS.

A cable from Port au Prince, Haiti, received September 27, announces the death by drowning of the Rev. Paul Holly. Mr. Holly was a grandson of the late Bishop Holly and was ordained to the diaconate in June 1927, after a course at the Philadelphia Divinity School.

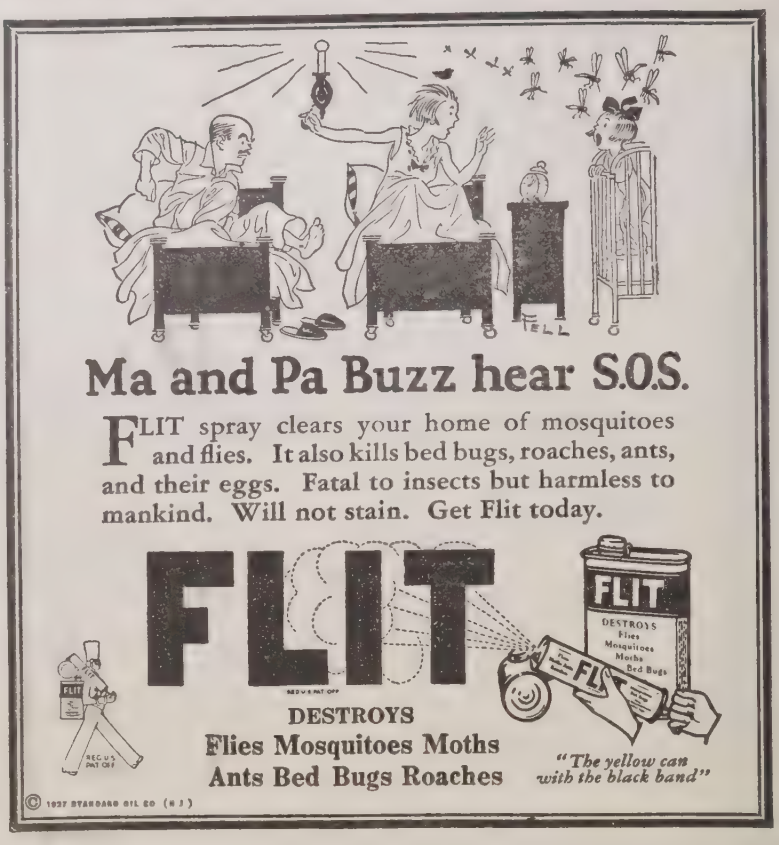
It's Because It's A Plan

You wouldn't build a home, nor go on a journey, nor start a business without a plan.



Without a plan your house would be faulty, your journey futile, and your business would fail. And so with saving money. Lay a plan to have a certain amount in a certain time. Measure the distance you will go by your power, so to speak, and your goal will be reached.

What better plan for results than one which invests each $100, as saved, into first mortgage bonds yielding 6 per cent return

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Prayer for everything brings wearying care for nothing.

God's addition to what we ask gives life its unending round of joyfulness.

The nearest way to your neighbor on earth may be by the throne of grace in heaven.

God's special blessing for us, always hinges on our desire to bless others.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

Yesterday says, "Learn of me". Today says, "Use me". Tomorrow says, "Leave me alone".

The highest perfection of human reason is to know that there is an infinity of truth beyond its reach.—Pascal.

It is not so much where you live
As whether while you live you live
And to the world your highest give.
—Oxenham.

"God is willing to let us suffer today, that we can give it to ourselves, or set or do some noble service for the world tomorrow."

Dreams are they? But ye cannot stay them,
Or thrust the dawn back for one hour!
Truth, love, and justice, if ye slay them,
Return with more than earthly power.
—Alfred Noyes.

"If we pray at all, we must be poor helpless, and resigned; neither thinking we have already what we ask, or that we may get some great rich good, ting a time, or prescribing a measure to God."

God can find a safe refuge for His servant in most unlikely circumstances; and when faith seems to fail, when most we might have expected it, God will show that He has His own where least we would look for them.—Dr. Edersheim.

Faith is not shutting the eyes to believe something that is not true. It is opening them—opening eye and ear and heart and the whole nature, and submitting them to that for which they were made. It is to have the ear of the learner, the heart of a child, to listen to the Father's Voice.—Hugh Black.

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 15, 1927. No. 42.

HOPEFUL

Obviously, Mr. Gwen Bristow is a very, very, superlatively Superior Person. He contributes to the New York Churchman of August 20 more than a page of print on "Fundamentalism in the South", with the sub-title, "Where Liberalism is Budding". He begins by asking, "Is the South hopelessly in the grip of Fundamentalism"? just as if asking whether we are given over to Voodoo exercises or devil worship and cannibalism. He concludes, hopefully, "Liberal Southern thinkers believe the time is ripe for a new birth of liberalism in thought". He does not suggest sending us a few missionaries, like the highly cultivated young citizen who made the anarchist speeches in Boston in honor of Vanzetti and Sacco, or some pages of atheistical literature, but his general idea seems to be that something of the kind might be good for our benighted souls.

He is quite patronizing in his indicated pity for our "stunted thought" and causes thereof. What he regards as full grown thought he does not define, but he gives a clue in the remark that the younger generation of this section seeks a God who will be not a threat, but an inspiration. From this may be gathered belief that Mr. Bristow's liberalism consists of a God who cannot, or will not, punish evil doing. This is somewhat more advanced than the conception of the ancient heathen, gods who might be placated and bribed by gifts.

Solomon has been regarded by thinking people of some centuries as a sensible man, with knowledge of human nature and facts. He said "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom". Mr. Bristow seems to differ from this opinion. In his view, we may assume, "thou shalt not" in the commandments—if the commandments are to be regarded at all—means merely a recommendation that it may be unwise and unethical to do murder or steal or bear false witness or covet the neighbor's goods. In brief, the teaching of liberalism seems to be reduction of the Almighty to a kind of gentle and disinterested and helpless advisor, or "inspiration", and to raise man to the dignity of doing right always, repenting of his sins and undoing his wrongs done from his own high sense of duty, without fear of punishment for evil doing or hope of reward for good living. The unavoidable logic of this doctrine leads to abolition of all human punitive and restraining law. Man is too noble a creature to be degraded by subjection to any fear. Liberalism is to persuade, or inspire, everybody to eschew misdemeanors and felonies. Something of the kind is being tried in Russia, where the government denounces all religion as opiate for the people and makes it a crime. Yet, the government, while forbidding fear of God as unworthy of man, seems to use firing squads quite freely to induce fear of itself. But we cannot expect liberal thinkers to be entirely logical and consistent always.

Mr. Bristow presents a study of Southern conditions and the causes of deep-rooted fundamentalism here. He traces it back to the Colonial aristocracy and its dislike of changes. The facts are that when the great change came, with the War Between the States, Southern people, of all classes, accepted it and adapted themselves to it with astounding rapidity. Nowhere in history is there record of a people so bitterly defeated in war, so impoverished, with country so devastated, revolution of its life and civilization so sweeping, problems so huge and complicated to face, recovering so quickly and triumphantly. The recovery was under leadership and guidance of pious men, of the faith of their fathers, so scornfully derided by Mr. Bristow. In matters of taste there is no disputation, but, however Mr. Bristow may think, Southern people prefer the example and faith of Robert E. Lee, for instance, to that of Colonel Ingersoll. Going back for another instance, they persist in regarding John Marshall as a better man to follow and imitate than Mr. Darrow, of Chicago.

Coming to essentials, what harm do we people of the South do anybody by being fundamentalists? Why this soulful hope that we may become otherwise? We are not trying to tear down the government or to invade or despoil anybody. We are doing our duty as citizens in peace and war, doing full share to add to the country's power and wealth. We are the cleanest strain Americans on the continent and our section is a bulwark of sane policies for the republic. Our Churches are alive and active, doing powerful and constant work in reclaiming sinners, maintaining righteousness, relieving suffering and reducing crime. These being facts, it is somewhat puzzling that Mr. Bristow and his co-laborers undertake to discuss us as a people sitting in darkness and menaces to the world. It is not at all likely that we will be pulled or pushed from our old, safe, consecrated ground by these liberals, but their solicitude for us is inexplicable, except on the score of conscious and craven weakness and frantic desire for reinforcement. They are not likely to get it from this part of the country, but if they like to be hopeful for our conversion to their distinctly confused notions, we have no special objection. Let them continue to be hopeful. It would be a pity to leave them with nothing at all for which to be hopeful.

CONFESSION OF SIN

It is noticeable that in regard to many matters vital to Christian welfare, Satan swings many people either to abuse of the doctrine or to disuse. It is particularly so with confession of sin. Wrongly practiced in the Roman Church, the principle of it as emphatically taught in Scripture is, we fear, very generally lost sight of by Protestants. We are far from making a plea for the confessional and would protest against its introduction into this Church. Wrongly performed, at least the Roman Catholics show a recognition of the principle; whereas in Protestant Churches it would seem that confession is not practical, either to man or God.

Its Importance in the New Testament.—In the account of John's baptism, Matthew says: "They were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Vincent's Word Studies has this to say of the phrase "confessing their sins": "The words imply (1) that confession was connected with baptism. They were baptized while in the act of confessing; (2) an open confession, not a private one to John. In Acts 19:18 we read: "And many that believed came and confessed and showed their deeds." James says: "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another"; (3) An individual confession, possibly a specific one (see Luke 3:10-15).

One of the rules of life.—Dr. F. B. Myer, at a Bible conference recently in this country, gave seven rules that he followed:

1. Practice God's presence.
2. Read Scripture devotionally.
3. Confess sin definitely.
4. Trust in the Lord.
5. Put Christ between you and temptation.
6. Seek fresh anointing.
7. Look homeward.

We give these because the purpose of this article is to quicken our spiritual life. And of these seven rules, the one that is most often left out and for want of which our spiritual exercises often fail is, we believe, the one calling for confession of sin definitely.

What God says of it. How clearly God has spoken on this point. In Leviticus 16:21, He says:

> "And Aaron shall place both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness."

And so through the Old Testament God says "if they shall confess their iniquity"—"they shall confess". There is that striking verse in Proverbs 28:13: "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy."

Then we have the well-known verse in 1 John 1:9: "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Confess sin definitely. How many do it? How much real self-examination in the light of God's Word is practiced? Let a man examine himself. Failure to do this and consequent unworthy reception of the Lord's Supper resulted, as Paul tells us, in many being weak and sickly and many sleeping. Unconfessed sin is today, we are persuaded, one of the most fruitful causes of the spiritual paralysis and deadness that exists. Note David's distressed condition in the Thirty-second Psalm. He is feverish, his moisture is turned into the drought of summer until he acknowledged his sin then the songs of deliverance begin. We cannot bear fruit except we abide in Christ. Dr. Scofield says: "To abide in Christ is on the one hand to have no known sin unjudged and unconfessed; no interest into which He is not brought; no life which He cannot share."

John Wesley carefully examined himself each night as to the day's walk with God. Oh! that we might sit alone as the sparrow on the housetop and judge ourselves by His Word and Spirit, that like the Psalmist in the night season we would commune with our own heart and search out our spirit!

Heart cleansing can only come by heart searching, and there is no fellowship with God until this is done.

Yet few people confess their sins. They go through the daily round of activities and the matter does not cross their minds, their consciences are asleep. Some are too proud, some too indolent to confess. Yet all men and women in the world must confess, for all have sinned. One of the greatest theologians, Professor James Denny, D. D., says:

> "There is power in the blood of Jesus to cleanse us from all sin, and there is no power to cleanse us anywhere else, but it needs the condition of openness and sincerity. We cannot be cleansed from sin we do not confess. We cannot be cleansed from the sin we excuse. We cannot be cleansed from the sin to which we are secretly resolved to cling. There is no such thing as negotiation, transaction or compromise possible in the relations of God and man. Everything is absolute. We may take the Gospel or leave it, but we cannot bargain about it. We may be cleansed from all sin, or from none, but not from some on condition of retaining others. Renounce with all your heart everything secret and insincere. Let there be nothing hidden in your life, no unavowed ends, no prevarication, no reserves. Insincerity, the dark atmosphere in which so many souls live, is in its turn one of the forms of sin from which the blood of Christ cleanses; and as we confess it, and disown it, and bring it to the cleansing blood, it also loses its power. This is the way in which all the wealth of the Gospel becomes ours."

We close with some thought from Bishop Ryle on the subject: "To whom ought confession of sin to be made?" It ought, he says, to be confessed to God and yet as Luther said: "I dare not have anything to do with an absolute God. The gospel reveals one who is exactly suited to the wants of souls who desire to confess sins. Sin then ought to be confessed to God in Christ. We have a great high priest who is passed into the heavens. The word priest as we know it in the Old Testament is now applied only to Christ. He is as Bishop Ryle says, a High Priest of almighty power, infinite willingness to receive confession of sin, of perfect knowledge, of matchless tenderness and sympathy. There is no warrant for confessing to priests or ministers. St. Paul writes three epistles to Timothy and Titus about ministerial duty, but says nothing about receiving confession. St. James says confess our faults one to another, but says nothing about confessing to ministers. Past experiences condemn auricular confession as a "practice of most vile and evil tendency". Facts, stubborn facts, abound to show that the practice of confession to ministers has often led to the grossest, most disgusting immorality. Wylie on Popery has said: "There is no better school of wickedness on earth than the confessional. History testifies that for every offender whom the confessional has reclaimed it has hardened thousands; for one it has saved it has destroyed millions".

We have seen that all ought to confess and that we are to confess to Christ. Confess sin definitely. Have you done it? Oh! let us open our hearts to Him, keep nothing back. If we confess our sins He forgives and cleanses from all unrighteousness.

R.

A Christian household should look back on the family at Bethany as a pattern for themselves, for there they may trace all human workings, yet beautified and chastened (as they should be) by their Saviour in the midst Here, each sister had her place; we see here the beautiful harmony of love and strength, of the bold and the reserved, of the active and devout. The gentle Mary looks up with a loving pride into her brave sister Martha's face, and feels her support. The elder sister has learned much from the divine lips, and, active as of old, has been calmed by trust. Thus we should recognize each other's gifts—learn of one another. Those very things in others, which we brand as faults, may be the very gifts of God which we do not possess ourselves. The very things that we call extravagancies in others, may be the things in them which make up for the deficiencies in us. Religion will not rub out the color of your life, it will hasten them and tone them into a beautiful harmony with what surrounds them. —T. M. Tidy.

WHY THE HOLY SPIRIT

By Kenneth Mackenzie

A DARK, deep mystery clouded the minds of the disciples in the concluding hours of our Lord's life on earth. It was not alone the unfathomable secret of His insistence upon the need of His leaving them; but that another should come to take His place. And we discern the quality of their guileless simplicity in the outburst of bewilderment, "What is this that he saith unto us, 'A little while and ye shall not see me; and again a little while and ye shall see me; and Because I go to the Father'? What is that he saith, A little while? we cannot tell what He saith.' "

This mystical atmosphere enveloped them all through the terrifying hours of the crucifixion, His entombment and even the victorious resurrection. For after that august event, He had to remonstrate with them for their unbelief. For all that He had made so comprehensively clear to them in language, became proportionately dense to their spiritual perspective. We may discern His appreciation of this by His breathing upon them of the Spirit which possessed Him, ere Pentecost had arrived (John 20:22). It was as though He would help them sufficiently to enable them to hold spiritual balance in the interim.

In our psychological age, when truth is so often filtered through the meshes of intellectual analysis, we may well challenge sincere thinkers as to the validity of this record. No precedent having been established, and these were "ignorant and unlearned men" (Acts 4:13), how are we to account for the insertion of this inexplicable chapter in our Lord's life and ministry? Sufficiently strong would have been the testimony without this entangling feature. A thing they could not understand, which they were willing to confess was beyond the scope of their comprehension, cumbers the recital of what would otherwise be a smooth narration. How could these men conceive of this mystery, if it had no foundation in fact? Why should they admit it into their story and involve themselves in a voluntary humiliation?

They give the answer in the evident clearing of their spiritual sky on the day of Pentecost. This now present and official Paraclete makes them new men, clarifies their vision, energizes their beings, enthuses them with an almost intoxicating exhilaration. And the entire New Testament bears out this initial experience.

If the alarmed multitude cries out to the Apostle Peter, "Men and brethren, 'What shall we do' "? the answer is definite. "Repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:37, 38). Step by step in the history of the Church, the reception of the Holy Spirit as the quickening and vitalizing force, is the goal of ministry and persuasion. The visit of Peter to the household of Cornelius (Acts 10); the setting apart of Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13); the test of the Ephesian believers (Acts 19); the burden of the apostolic writings, all witness to the fact that enlightenment and power for Christian living must come from the personal acceptance of this same Paraclete of whom our Lord gave definite provision. And this always to be characterized by child-like faith and simplicity; indwelt by sincere appropriation, vindicated by lives of purity, sweetness and spiritual joy. Perhaps the exhortation of St. Paul is sufficiently expressive, "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess; but be filled with the spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God" (Eph. 5:18-21).

If we hear teachers, preachers and writers assert a seeming reverence for the Holy Spirit, admittedly operative and experimental, we have occasion to ask what is meant. To many, the Holy Spirit is but the Zeitgeist ("The Spirit of the Age") of philosophy, the atmosphere that makes for righteousness, a general sense of the divine fellowship, that has for its basis the individualistic interpretation of life which is fast becoming the vogue. In other words, the trend is to make of the Holy Spirit what self-will dictates, resting in the composure of anchored finality. Meanwhile, the process laid down by our Lord is repudiated. To this stubborn problem we may briefly apply our thought.

Evidently, He was including the inspiration of the Holy Spirit when He declared to His disciples (Matt. 11:27), "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son and He to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him". There is a knowledge of our Lord Jesus which is the prerogative of the Father to impart. St. Paul implies this in the statement of 1 Cor. 12:3, "No man calleth Jesus the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost". Undoubtedly this essential is embraced in the plea of Luke 11:13, "If ye being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him"? We may not lightly regard this exalted bestowment. It challenges attention; and ultimately, decision. Destiny is involved in the soulful assent.

The unfolding of the subject brings us to the crucial point of St. Paul's position, which far from being one of self choice, captured his every faculty in the profound insistence of his divine calling through the revelation of Jesus Christ (Gal. 1:11). An illustration may be helpful. On his entering Athens, he was possibly moved to reach these idle "philosophers" by an appeal to their intellect. We know the story in Acts 17. Significantly, there was no Church founded in that community. "We will hear thee again of this," was the tolerant retort to his searching message. And he returns from them humiliated by their ridicule.

His next place of ministry was Corinth. In his review of the approach which he made to that proud, opulent and intellectual city (1 Cor. 2:1-16), he describes his changed attitude. Not with excellency of speech, "enticing words of man's wisdom", "determined to know nothing among them save Jesus Christ and Him crucified", that their "faith should stand not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God", he contends that only by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit who "searches all things, yea, the deep things of God", and "the hidden mystery" be known. As we follow him in this discourse, well suited to the present generation, we find his unqualified reprobation of worldly wisdom in the comprehension of Christian doctrine, by the memorable statement, "The psychical man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know, because they are spiritually discerned".

Here then, is the criterion. There can be no knowledge of God which is not the province of the Holy Spirit of God to convey; that knowledge of the Son through the Father, that knowledge of the Father through the Son, can come only through the same attitude of mind and heart as prepared the first disciples for their Pentecost. And through them to us, the stream of unfolding has uninterruptedly continued; the fact, the method, the experience are identical.

But the Holy Spirit cannot and will not convey the knowledge of the truth to the spiritual consciousness of men until the recorded and related sequences of the divine purpose are accepted. We who make this pronouncement are not arbitrary propagandists of an inclusive teaching. It is clearly and dogmatically defined in the Word of God. To those who would compel the Word to shape itself according to their individualistic penchant, we have nothing to say. We can only address those who are willing to do the will of God as revealed in His Book.

We behold then, the following inter-related factors: The Son of God came into the world by the determination and operation of the Holy Spirit (Matt. 1:20; Luke 1:35); His ministry was effected by the inspiration, direction and enduement of the same Spirit (Matt. 3:16, 17; 4:1; 12:28; John 3:34; 5:19; Acts 10:38). His crucifixion was the foundation upon which the coming of the Holy Spirit should be effective. It was not only expedient that He should go away (John 16:7), but that He should go in the way He did; none other would be efficacious; for it must needs be that by means of His death and resurrection He would convey to His own the dynamics of His illimitable life (Luke 24:44-48; Eph. 1:15-23).

They are far afield who would charge us with offering the "manna of yesterday for the hunger of today". It is just in this resistance that the great wrong against society is being wrought. The love of novelty, the specious adaptation of religious thought to advancing intellectualism, the self-consciousness of modern individualism have all conspired to rob the Holy Spirit of His divinely appointed office; and thereby men are really groping in the dark, candle in hand, thinking they have the light of the sun.

Finally, we must urge that to regard the Holy Spirit other than a person, intelligent, volitional and affectionate, is to miss the comprehension of the divine mystery. Unless He can come into the life as Our Lord did into the lives of His own, only in that larger sphere of activity which is His to occupy, we shall not only miss the profound truth, but rob Him of His cherished joy in being to us what our Lord designed He should be. He is here to bring us to a new birth, infuse into us a new vision, to inspire us with a new dedication, to enthrall us with a new hope, to enrich us with a new love, to endow us with a new power; only it will be the same old conferment which has possessed the "saints, apostles, prophets, martyrs", which have preceded us. For, "We all, with unveiled countenance, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transfigured into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Lord, the Spirit" (2 Cor. 3:18).

WINNING MEN TO CHRIST

Promoting Lay Evangelism Through the Brotherhood of St. Andrew

By Leon C. Palmer

ALL who are interested in evangelism as the fundamental task of the Church and are thoughtfully planning their work with this principle in mind recognize the fact that the real success and ultimate results of the Bishops' Crusade depend upon its continuation and conservation, especially through enlisting the laymen of the Church. For over forty years the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been, in a quiet way, promoting personal evangelism and now, under its new and enlarged program, it is proposed to serve with increased efficiency in the Church-wide promotion of this basic element in Christian life and service.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew is based upon three fundamental principles, and the first of these is that every Christian ought to be at work for Christ. "To every man his work." In Baptism and Confirmation we solemnly promise "to continue Christ's faithful soldier and servant" unto our life's end. There is a definite evangelistic responsibility resting upon each and every one of us. Our Lord called His followers to service. "If any man will serve me, let him follow me." "Be ye doers of the word, not hearers only." We are saved to serve.

The Brotherhood rule of Service is "To make at least one earnest effort each week to lead some man nearer to Christ through His Church". This is a reasonable aim. It would seem to be the least that a Christian man should be content to undertake for his Lord and Saviour. In fact, the Brotherhood rule adds nothing to what is already implied in Baptismal and Confirmation vows; it simply supplies a definite and practical plan for carrying out these Christian obligations.

The second fundamental principle upon which the Brotherhood is based is that personal work is the most effective work. "One of the two that heard John speak and followed him was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother. He first findeth his own brother Simon and saith unto him, 'We have found . . . the Christ' . . . He brought him to Jesus."

Individual work for individuals is the simplest, surest and most fruitful method of spreading the Gospel and winning the world for Christ. Other methods of Christian service have their place and value, but nothing can take the place of personal work.

All of our Lord's apostles of whose call we have any record in Scripture were won by personal work, by individual invitation. If there were but a hundred Christians in the world today, and each one should this year win just one person to Christ; then next year each of the two hundred win one more, and so on, each year each one winning one, in only twenty-five years every human being in this world would be a Christian.

In a recent Brotherhood Convention address, Canon Shatford, of Montreal, said: "There is ample evidence of the possibility of saving the human race. There is nothing in history so wonderful as the spread of Christianity. In 1800 there were two hundred million Christians; today there are over six hundred millions; trebled in a single century, because the last century was missionary."

The third basic principle of the Brotherhood is that it is our Privilege and Duty to Pray for Others. "Pray for one another." There is an old and true saying "To pray is to labor". Sometimes our highest service and most fruitful work for Christ is through intercessory prayer. In 1 Samuel 12:23 we read, "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you". If we fail to pray for others we are not only failing our Christian duty to them, but we are also sinning against God Himself.

Our Lord prayed for Himself and His associates. He prayed for His disciples, both individually and collectively. He spent long hours in prayer, many times arising before day in order to have a quiet opportunity for prayer. Sometimes He spent the whole night in prayer.

St. Paul in nearly every one of his epistles speaks of praying for those to whom he is writing, and asks their prayers for him.

Early in life George Muller, of Bristol, England, began praying for five friends of his. After five years one of them was converted. Twelve years later two others followed. Twenty years more pased before the fourth one yielded; and six weeks after Muller's death the fifth one became a Christian, after Muller had prayed for him more than half a century.

Prayer links our impotence with God's omnipotence. The shortest way to the heart of another is via the throne of God.

> Pray for my soul. More things are wrought by prayer
> Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice
> Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
> For what are men better than sheep or goats
> That nourish a blind life within the brain,
> If knowing God, they lift not hands in prayer
> Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
> For so the whole round world is every way
> Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

The Brotherhood rule of Prayer is to pray daily for the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men, especially young men, and for God's blessing upon the labors of the Brotherhood.

How to Organize a Brotherhood Chapter.

The rector should call together by personal invitation, a few of his most earnest laymen, selected from all the various elements of the parish, explain the purpose and plan of the Brotherhood (using the "Handbook", which he has secured and read in advance' and make a direct appeal to them to undertake this worth-while work for God. After full discussion a tentative organization (known as a Probationary Chapter) may be formed by vote of those interested, either at this meeting or at a second meeting arranged for at this time. A Probationary Chapter simply agrees to give the Brotherhood a fair trial; it is not under obligation to continue. If at the end of two or three months the Probational Chapter decides to go on with the work, the National Office is notified and a Charter may be issued. But, if after giving it a fair trial, it is not desired to continue, there is no obligation to do so. Full information as to how to form the Probationary Chapter, officers, constitution, programs, and plans for work will be found in the "Handbook for Senior Chapters" (price 25 cents) to be secured from the National Office of the Brotherhood, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

Activities of a Brotherhood Chapter.

To carry out the objectives of the Brotherhood as expressed in the Rules of Prayer and Service, each Chapter takes up whatever lines of corporate effort and helpful service that they, in conference with the rector, may find most needful and practicable. Typical activities are: Monthly Communion of the men of the parish, organization or promotion of a Men's Bible Class, formation of a Junior Brotherhood Chapter, ushering and hospitality at Church services, hotel work, mission work, lay-reading, Sunday-school teaching, jail and hospital work, distribution of reading matter, securing candidates for Baptism and Confirmation, inviting men to the Holy Communion and other Church services, calling on men in their homes, promoting family devotions, etc. The National Office will supply literature and advice concerning any work that Chapters desire to undertake.

Relation to Other Organizations.

The relation of the Brotherhood Chapter to other parish organizations is that of friendly cooperation and helpfulness. The harvest truly is plenteous and the laborers are few; no one organization can or should attempt to do all the work of the parish. Each has its own place and its own opportunity for service. A Men's Club and a Brotherhood Chapter do not conflict. Indeed, a Men's Club increases the need of the Chapter. The members of the latter will naturally be active members of the former, and will find in the larger inclusive organization, a fruitful field for their own more intensive work. On the other hand, a Chapter as an inner circle, will stabilize a Men's Club, prolong its life and increase its usefulness in the work of the parish.

In Conclusion.

Will you organize a Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in your parish? Do not wait to get a large number; begin with a few, perhaps four or five. Others can be brought in later. "Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them." Eternity alone can tell the result of faithful, prayerful, organized cooperation in personal service for Christ. Do not delay. Do not postpone this until "a more convenient season". "Yesterday is gone; tomorrow may never come; today is yours; DO IT NOW."

"Good helping me,
I will do my best
With what I have
Where I am
Today
For Jesus Christ."

THE SPIRIT AND FIBRE OF THE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY

By the Reverend Warren L. Botkin

Rector St. John's Memorial Church, Parsons, Kansas.

IT is the peculiar distinction of the Church to carry on the work of the Lord Jesus Christ; to unfold and carry out the plan of bringing the kingdoms of this world into the Kingdom of our God.

It is truly a stupendous undertaking, but it is not impossible, nor is the plan hopeless of fruition. The traveling soul may ask, "how long"? but believing Faith will answer, "how certain"!

If it was true for a time that "The Church was as lifeless as a painted picture", that time is gone; for the impetus given to Christian Missions through the Bishops' Crusade and the stirring appeal of its leaders to lay and clerical evangelism, has roused the Church from its lethargy to a keen sense of obligation and responsibility.

The great call of the Church today is to its man-power. The Cross must be lifted high, the good-news of redemption must be declared, the plan of salvation must be revealed, the power of Christ must be disclosed.

"Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

He needs to be a man with such a combination of virtues, qualities and training, such as no other business or profession even dreams of. He needs to be a man of vision and vigilance; a man of pioneer courage, intrepid faith and tireless energy; a man of singular patience, Christ-like sympathy and love. He must be a man of tact.

It is furthermore essential that he be an engineer of social reconstruction, to say nothing of an adaptability to every detail in human interest.

Who is sufficient for these things and who is able to do them Only he from whose heart the dross has been taken and the gold refined. Only he who heard the call early in life to prepare for it and went straight to his task with a burning heart. Only the man who can see the worth of a human soulw in the light of Calvary's Cross, and for conscience sake, seeks to affect a reconciliation. Only the man who sees his work as the stuff to try his soul upon, and who further sees it in the light, that it is God's work he is doing, who with diligence and deepest of consecration tries to emulate the life and labors of his Lord. These are the qualities that make victory incarnate in the man.

He must know himself, his capacities and limitations; he must know folks, know their needs, and how best to supply them. His mission is the cure of souls. He needs to have a fertile brain rooted in history and grounded in theology; he needs to know the Church and her Sacred Classics to be able to teach effectively; but above all, he needs to know Jesus Christ the Son of God.

In facing his task the true missionary will not depend upon any one virtue or quality to do his work. He must have more than a mere rapture and good intention; he must have a deep and abiding conviction, a capacity for isolation, fortitude, a sense of humor, an executive ability and an adaptability to emergencies and revolutionary ideas.

A still further emphasis is this: Faith works best with valiant service; love with sacrifice; hope with perseverance; charity with well-directed generosity, and men with God.

We need an actual and vital sense of the Unseen. We cannot say with Christ, "All that the Father hath given me, will come unto me", until we, like Christ, have risen in the early hours to commune with God, and learned His manner of giving them into our hands.

If the early disciples had need to be taught, "In patience ye shall win your souls", we, too, must understand that we enter into our greatest possibilities through patience, meditation, trust, faith, devotion and an utter abandonment to His will.

What great change has been authorized that we should consecrate less than our all, dedicate less than a whole life, or hope to see the full fruition of the divine plan, until we have "done all that is required of us"?

To substantiate this view in a most emphatic manner, we offer the words of our Blessed Lord when He said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind . . . and thy neighbor as thyself".

Training is invaluable to the missionary, with special attention being paid to the nature of his particular calling, but it is the inner persuasive element that makes the life dominant and effective. To know Jesus Christ the Son of God, to follow Him in all His leadings, to emulate His earthly ministry, to worship Him in spirit and in truth, and to so live that others will be inspired to know the missionary's God: these are the prime requisites.

Anything less than a perfect ideal is too small to compel the attention of real men. To magnify or to excuse our imperfections is to thwart the cause we labor for. To make futile comparisons, or to compare our lives with the imperfect standards of others, is to do so at the expense of a greater usefulness. Simon Peter sank beneath the waves when he looked at his remarkable standing, but while he kept his faith and vision riveted upon the Sublime Christ, he was even as his Lord. In the same manner we need to keep our faith and vision riveted upon our Blessed Lord if we would meet successfully the task confronting us, and develop the highest type of spirit and fibre of a Christian missionary.

What Is A Modernist

The following definition of a Modernist taken from the Boston Transcript, could not be improved upon:

1. The Fundamentalist holds that the Bible is the Word of God; the Modernist holds that the Bible contains the Word of God.

2. The Fundamentalist holds that Jesus Christ was the Son of God in a sense in which no other is; the Modernist holds that Jesus Christ is a Son of God in the sense that all men are.

3. The Fundamentalist holds that the birth of Jesus Christ was supernatural; the Modernist holds that the birth of Jesus Christ was natural.

4. The Fundamentalist holds that the death of Jesus Christ was expiatory; the Modernist holds that the death of Jesus Christ was exemplary.

5. The Fundamentalist holds that man is the product of special creation; the Modernist holds that man is the product of evolution.

6. The Fundamentalist holds that man is a sinner, fallen from original righteousness, and apart from God's redeeming grace, hopelessly lost; the Modernist holds that man is the unfortunate victim of environment, but through self-culture can make good.

A STATEMENT FROM THE CONTINENTAL MISSIONARY BISHOPS

At the meeting of the Council of Continental Missionary Bishops September 20 and 21 last, the matter of the article in The Churchman by the Rev. Irving St. John Tucker, "Massacring the Indians—1927", and an editorial, "Indian Superstition", were brought to the attention of the Council. A committee consisting of Bishops Burleson, Howden and Mitchell was appointed. This committee proposed the following resolution and statement:

"Whereas, There appeared in The Churchman, issue of July 2, an article entitled "Massacring the Indians—1927", which makes a violent attack upon the policies and motives of the Indian Bureau and Commissioner Burke, containing statements which we are convinced are erroneous or distorted; and,

"Whereas, In the same issue the editor of The Churchman, under the heading, 'Indian Superstition', seems to support this article, and closes by saying that 'Those who know the Indian intimately and who speak without prejudice or fear of discipline from "higher up" are at one in saying that the Indian will never give up his traditional religious rites';

"We, the Council of Missionary Bishops, whose jurisdictions include the large proportion of our Indian work, and also the special areas where it is alleged that these atrocities are being carried on, feel compelled to enter our earnest protest against the misrepresentation above recorded. It is most unfortunate that our Church people should be misled by one of our own journals as to the status of affairs in the Indian country, and the policies pursued by those in authority.

"In order that we may discharge what we feel to be our duty in this matter we append the following statement:

"The character and temper of the article in question, of which the Rev. Irving St. John Tucker is the author, are shown in its opening statement which is as follows:

" 'For sheer, cold-blooded, long-drawn-out horror, the massacre of the native Americans in the government school, as carried out by the Indian Bureau with the benevolent intention of assimilating their lands, has never been equalled since the days of Cromwell in Ireland.'

"Without doubt mistakes have been made in the exceedingly difficult and delicate problem of securing fair treatment for the Indians. Many of us have had occasion to enter protest against certain acts, and doubtless shall again; but, relying upon the experience and testimony of those among us who have intimate knowledge through many years of service, we desire to say very definitely that there is no adequate justification for the extravagant and outrageous assertions in this article.

"Further, one of our number, the Bishop of New Mexico, in whose jurisdiction the chief outrages are alleged to have taken place, testifies that the incidents cited have either been misunderstood or distorted; that in his frequent visits he has seen nothing to justify this attack, and that of his own knowledge the conditions among the Navajos are vastly better in every way than they were at the beginning of his episcopate, and that instead of any decrease the Navajo population has been steadily increasing. He says, 'The whole article is made up of half-truths, or conclusions based upon ignorance of the specific problems involved, which have been either misunderstood or, for some reason, distorted'.

"It is not our province to undertake a defense of the Indian Bureau, or the Commissioner, further than to say that in our judgment Commissioner Burke is laboring earnestly and conscientiously to defend and advance the interests of the Indian people, and we deeply regret that this attack should have been made upon his personal integrity and official administration.

"With regard to the closing paragraph of the editorial, that 'Those who know the Indian intimately, and who speak without prejudice or fear of discipline, are at one in saying, etc.', we could cite many who know the Indian intimately, by having given their lives to his service, who would say exactly the opposite. We know that they can and will give up their traditional religious rites; that they can and do become earnest and faithful Christians, setting a worthy example to their white brethren. To allege the contrary is to deny the whole basis of missionary enterprise, which we cannot believe the editor of The Churchman intended to do."

It was further:

"Resolved, That copies be sent to Commissioner Burke, the Church papers, The Spirit of Missions and the Department of Publicity of the National Council for whatever use they might desire to make of it and that the Secretary be instructed to sign the Resolutions with the name and title of each Bishop present."

The following were present:

WALTER MITCHELL,
Secretary.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form, wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 3.

Topic—The Wonderful Love of God.

(Read 1 John 4:7 to 21.)

1. He loves every believer.—John 3:16.
2. He first loved us.—Rom. 5:8; 1 John 4:19.
3. While we still knew Him not.—Eph. 2:4, 5.
4. He wants us to comprehend the extent of His love.—Eph. 3:18.
5. He loves us freely.—Hosea 14:4.
6. He loves as a father.—John 16:27.
7. He loved "me" and gave Himself for me.—Gal. 2:20.
8. His love made us citizens of Heaven.—Eph. 2:6.
9. His love washed us from our sins.—Rev. 1:5.
10. His love saved us.—Titus 3:4, 5.
11. Through His love we shall never perish.—John 3:16.
12. His love keeps us secure.—Rom. 8:37.
13. We cannot be separated from His love.—Rom. 8:38, 39.
14. It is an everlasting love.—Jer. 31:3.
15. His love will chasten if necessary.—Heb. 12.6.
16. The Heavenly Father loves every believer as His own Son.—John 17:23.

"Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down His life for us.—1 John 4:16. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."—1 John 4:10.

What marvelous Grace; What love He bore;
That we might live,
And be with Him, forever more. —J. T. B.

CLAIMS OF SCIENCE QUESTIONED.

Mr. Editor:

Re Mr. Morris' timely article in your issue of the twenty-fourth ult., perhaps as a follower of scientific progress since the age of twelve, when, with my school principal, I attended the same science night classes as he, and took the same examinations, I may be allowed to follow up his able article in a small way.

How does Sir Arthur Keith, President of the British Association for the Advance of Science, know that a million years ago, biological forces—and none other—working on the lines of blind, incalculable chance for untold millions of years before, implanted millions of designs and patterns in foetuses as numerous brought to being? that these chance-begotten designs were consistently making for upward progression till a million years ago, when primeval man emerged? Is he giving us fact or fancy?

Is he not attributing without proof millions of astounding miracles to blind chance far surpassing in magnitude, number, wonder and unaccountability any recorded in the —to him—foolish old Bible? Is all truth confined to the conclusions of five unaided, fallible human scribes? If man is the only designer working in the Universe of chance known to science, does he, too, design without foreknowledge or intention? If he be the product of chance himself, must not all his works be the product of chance which knows neither sequence nor coherence?

No wonder scientists require untold millions of years for these countless millions of automatic, chance, miraculous designs to evolve in orderly progression in untold millions of individuals. Has any mathematician ever proved that to be possible, let alone certain? Why don't scientists take the bull by the horns, and postulate an unlimited number of space-time Universes a la Einstein, in place of a few paltry hundred millions of years? The Old Book says, "Of making of books there is no end". Perhaps it meant theories.

The Relativity Universe is given as a hollow sphere three hundred million light-years in diameter, whose inner spherical surface is called a "continuum, and, marvelous to relate, this inside has no outside beyond! These desperate theories remind one of the exclamation of an eminent scientist when pestered with facts inconvenient for his theories: "Confound facts! Give me theories!"

For many years now, Monte Carlo gamblers have vainly tried to evolve a system or theory whereby to tell at which one out of a few numbers a lifeless wheel will stop when set spinning. If such a simple problem on the workings of chance cannot be solved, how shall scientific theorists—we will not say gamblers—succeed in solving the workings of a chance universe?

DESPISE NOT THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS.

Mr. Editor:

In 1882, there were in the Sunday School of Christ Church, Nelson County, Virginia, not more than about thirty scholars, not more than half of these were boys. Of this number four entered the ministry. All of them were blessed with fruitful ministries. I speak of the Ribbles (F. G., J. F. and W. Wallace) and W. A. R. Goodwin.

I write this statement not only because of the interesting fact, but more to encourage those who are engaged in work for the King and lose heart because they do not see the fruits of their service and prayers.

One of the chief hindrances to joy and success in their God-appointed work is a want of patience in anticipating results; specially is this true of those who have not, as yet, a background on which to draw.

Another example is furnished by the late Bishop Dudley. As I recall the statement made in an address or sermon in Richmond, it was in substance as follows. He was one of four boys in a class in St. Paul's Church; the teacher was an intelligent, devoted Christian woman. Time and again she became so discouraged that she sought to resign, in the hope that another could interest the restless boys. The sequel? Two of them became Bishops, a third a distinguished clergyman, and the fourth a prominent layman. "Ye have need of patience."—Senex.

Orange, Va.

Christ Church

Alexandria, Virginia.

The land on which the Church was built was given by John Alexander of Stafford County, Va.

James Parsons drew plans and agreed to build church for £600 in 1767. Project being incomplete, John Carlysle undertook the same and completed the building for an additional £200 in 1773. In this year, James Wren, architect for Falls Church, was paid £8 for writing tablets on either side of pulpit, and it was in this year (1773) the Vestry formally accepted the building, the first minister being Townsend Dade, who served until 1778.

The Rev. David Griffith, an intimate friend of Washington, was the next minister and served until 1789. During his charge the Act of Incorporation of the Protestant Episcopal Church was passed by the General Assembly in 1784, and also the galleries were built and the grounds were inclosed about 1786.

In 1790 the Rev. Mr. Bryan, afterwards Lord Fairfax, Baron of Cameron, became minister. His successor, the Rev. Thomas Davis (1792-1811), conducted the funeral services of General Washington, December 16, 1799.

During the rectorship of Mr. Davis, George Washington Park Custis in 1804 presented a Bible to the Church, which is still a valued relic. First organ was installed in 1810.

Cut-glass chandelier under rear gallery, ordered from England, costing $140 and installed in 1818.

Tower completed and bell hung 1818.

For many years the church yard was used as the town burying ground regardless of creed until 1807 when burials were restricted to Church members.

Colonel Philip Marsteller, one of Washington's pall-bearers, is buried in yard. Grave unknown but supposed to be under sycamore tree near west gate. Tombstone of Colonel Charles Sims, another pall-bearer and friend of Washington, leans against each wall of building, but does not mark grave, which is unknown. He was one of the founders of the Society of the Cincinnati and Mayor of Alexandria, when the town was captured by the British in 1814.

The yard contains many interesting stones, the oldest of which is in memory of Isaac Pearce, who died in 1771.

The Rev. Mr. Meade was minister until 1813, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Oliver Norris, of Maryland, who served until 1825.

From 1825 until 1834 the changes in ministers were numerous when in 1834 the Rev. Charles B. Dana was called and served until 1860; he was succeeded by the Rev. Cornelius Walker, who at the breaking out of the War Between the States became chaplain in the Southern Army.

In 1861 Federal troops occupied the town and while other Churches were used as hospitals, Christ Church was used for Divine services, army chaplains filling the pulpit. During this transition period the original silver plate marking Washington's pew as well as the birth, marriage and death records from 1765 to 1860 disappeared and have never been found.

In 1866 the Church was restored to its old vestry and since that time its pulpit has been occupied by men of outstanding character, such as Bishop A. M. Randolph, Dr. Randolph H. McKim, Dr. Wm. M. Dame, Dr. Henderson Suter, Dr. Berryman Green, present Dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, and our present rector, Dr. William Jackson Morton.

At the entrance of the church you will see the bronze tablet to the memory of Washington's pall-bearers given by the Mt. Vernon Chapter, D. A. R., in 1912.

Within the Church on the east wall hang two memorial tablets to Washington and Lee. It is but a step further to the pews once occupied by these two great men, whose lives were so closely connected with the old church, where Washington in his manhood worshipped and where Lee from boyhood attended and was confirmed.

The pipe organ, having approximately six thousand pipes, was a gift of the Carnegie Foundation. Built by Hilgreen, Lane & Co., at the cost of $11,000, complete.

Services are held each Sunday at eleven A. M. and eight P. M. All visitors are welcomed. All pews are free. Gates are closed Sundays except during the hours of worship.

The church is opened to tourists during the week days from nine A. M. to five P. M. from November 1 to March 31, and from nine A. M. to six P. M. from April 1 to October 31.

Cox, rector Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond, and the Rev. A. C. Zabriskie, instructor in Church history at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

Consecration of the Bishop of Oklahoma.

On Sunday morning, October 2, the Rev. Thomas Casady was consecrated Bishop of Oklahoma in All Saints' Church, Omaha, Nebraska, of which he had been rector for the past seven years.

The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop, was consecrator, and the Rt. Rev. Theodore Nevin Morrison, D. D., Bishop of Iowa, and the Rt. Rev. Hugh Latimer Burleson, D. D., Bishop of South Dakota, were co-consecrators. The presenters were the Rt. Rev. Ernest Vincent Shayler, D. D., Bishop of Nebraska, and the Rt. Rev. Harry Sherman Longley, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Iowa. The Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Colorado, was the preacher. The Rt. Rev. W. Blair Roberts, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of South Dakota, read the epistle, and the Rt. Rev. George Allen Beecher, D. D., Bishop of Western Nebraska, the gospel. The Rt. Rev. Eugene Cecil Seaman, D. D., Bishop of North Texas, read the litany and suffrages, and the Rt. Rev. Frank Arthur McElwain, D. D., Bishop of Minnesota, the certificate of ordination. These with the Rt. Rev. Robert Herbert Mize, D. D., Bishop of Salina, all joined in the laying on of hands.

The attending presbyters were the Ven. Franklin Davis, Archdeacon of Western Oklahoma, and the Rev. Hugh Llwyd of Muskogee, Okla. The Very Rev. Stephen Essex McGinley, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, was registrar; the Rev. Bertram L. Smith, rector of St. Barnabas', Omaha, master of ceremonies; and the Rev. Frederick D. Butler, of St. Paul, Minn.; the Rev. Arthur Edward Saunders, of Tulsa, Okla.; the Rev. John C. Donnell, of Okmulgee, and the Very Rev. Marmaduke Hare, D. D., of Davenport, Iowa, were marshals. The canonical testimonial was read by the Hon. Preston C. West, chancellor of the district of Oklahoma; and the consents of the standing committees by the Rev. Joseph Carden, of Ardmore, Okla.

Bishop Johnson, in his sermon, stressed the Catholic ideal, and said, in part:

"We come today to consecrate an overseer. Not the leader of a party, not merely the Bishop of Oklahoma, but an overseer of the flock of Christ, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear, to minister to all for whom Christ died, to minister to any who will accept our ministry, not to be ministered unto, but to minister. To set forth a great ideal, rather than a petty program. We are to represent the ideals of Christ."

Church Army Extension.

The Church Army has established a Training Centre at the Bishop Mc. Vickar House, 66 Benefit Street, Providence, R. I., where keen young American laymen may be trained for Lay Evangelism within the Protestant Episcopal Church of America.

The faculty is being chosen from clergy within easy reach of Providence, who will give instruction in such subjects as Prayer Book History, Church History, Study of Old and New Testament, Christian Evidences, etc.

The practical side of the training will be in the care of the Church Army.

The industrial parishes in and around Providence will form an excellent field for actual work each week-end.

The immediate need is that of suitable men for training. Candidates should be unmarried and between the ages of twenty and thirty, and of the highest type.

Clergy are asked to recommend keen men willing to sacrifice much for the sake of Evangelism in the Church.

Enquiries are invited. Application should be made to: Captain B. F. Mountford, Diocesan House, 416 Lafayette Street, New York, N. Y.

The Washington Cathedral Campaign.

Stimulation of the religious life of the whole country through far-reaching dissemination of Christian teachings is the purpose of a nation-wide campaign, recently announced, to raise ultimately $30,000,000 for the completion and adequate endowment of Washington Cathedral and its associated institutions.

General John J. Pershing will head the effort as chairman of the national committee, with George Wharton Pepper, former United States Senator from Pennsylvania, as executive chairman, and Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon as treasurer. Associated with the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, and other prominent clergymen, are other laymen on important national committees, including the following: George B. McClellan, former mayor of New York; Herbert L. Satterlee, of New York; F. Trubee Davison, Assistant Secretary of War; Ogden L. Mills, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; William R. Castle, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State; Elliot H. Goodwin, former resident vice-president of the United States Chamber of Commerce; Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, of Chicago; Mrs. Charles W. Henry, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Henry White, of New York.

For the present, it was stated after the autumn meeting of the Cathedral Chapter, campaign activities will be centered upon the raising of $6,800,000 needed to complete the next step in the Cathedral development program. This includes the construction of the choir, crossing, north and south transepts and north porch, with sufficient endowment to make these new units of the Cathedral effective for service.

The Treasurer's Statement.

You did keep us from paying a visit to the loan department of the bank on September 30, and we thank you for your help.

The October statement is not, however, as good as it might be. Receipts to date are $40,253.32 less than for the same period last year and only nineteen are in the honor column as compared with twenty-one a year ago. Four Missionary Districts—Porto Rico, Haiti, North Texas and Alaska—have already met their full yearly budget quota.

The worst factor in the situation is that with seventy-five per cent of the year elapsed, only forty-eight per cent of the budget quotas have been paid.

Our people have now returned from their vacations. Many of them have a package of over-due and unfilled duplex envelopes. An unpaid pledge keeps many a person away from Church.

Let's make a real effort to have all these back pledges paid by November 1. Get busy with your parish treasurers.

LEWIS B. FRANKLIN,
Treasurer.

Hobart College Opens With Record Registration.

The formal opening of the one hundred and sixth year of Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., was held in St. John's Chapel, on September 21, with a total registration of three hundred and two students. This registration is a gain of forty-three over last year, and is the largest in the long history of the college.

The Rev. Irving A. McGrew has been appointed "Student Pastor" and "Assistant Chaplain". He reports that there are now twenty-six men in college who are studying for the ministry of the Episcopal Church and that one hundred and thirty of the men registered are Churchmen. Twenty-seven of our clergy influenced members of the new class to enter Hobart while thirteen others came because of the relation of the college to the Church. Sixty-eight freshmen gave the academic standing of the college as the reason for their coming to Hobart.

The Student Pator has arranged for meetings of the local clergy with the students of their denominations and he would be glad to hear from the rectors or parents of any of the men at Hobart.

The registration at William Smith College, Hobart's separate department for women is one hundred and fifty-eight.

Church Services in Hankow.

The English services at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Hankow, were left to the care of our staff in January, when the English priest in charge (regularly employed by the congregation) was offered a place as locum tenens in the Diocese of Singapore. He expects to return in January. Bishop Holden who has carried on most helpfully in this charge has now left to find some way of returning to his Diocese of Kwangsi-Hunan. So Bishops Roots and Gilman have been holding two services a Sunday there, preaching to a church full of British sailors, with a few civilians, both British and American. American ships in port had, for some time, a chaplain on board who was most friendly with the Chinese clergy.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Church School Conference.

The annual dinner conference for rectors, officers and teachers of the Church Schools of Brooklyn and Queens, took place Tuesday evening, October 4, at St. Ann's Parish House, Brooklyn.

The speakers were the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Mexico; Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, and Miss Frances R. Edwards. An exhibition of hand-work, books, charts, etc., with a devotional service in the church made this a conference to be remembered. The hall was filled to its capacity, and a similar one for Nassau and Suffolk will be held in Garden City on October 17.

The Hospital Campaign.

The whole diocese is teeming with the tremendous undertaking of raising one million dollars for a new St. John's Hospital. All sorts and conditions of people are coming in on this campaign, Jew and Christian alike. A gentleman went into a little cigar store kept by a Jew; he had never been there before; he bought a few cigarettes, and just mentioned this work in which he is deeply interested; the Jew listened most attentively, and said: "I'll send you something." Two days later the gentleman received a check for seventy-five dollars from this man. On Friday, October 7, a dinner was given for the workers; speeches were made by General Wingate, Judge Callaghan, Postmaster Firmin and others.

A Young People's Fellowship Conference will be held October 21-23, at the Cathedral at Garden City, L. I. Bishop Stires will preach on Sunday, the twenty-third. An advisory council for this organization has been formed and on this there is a group of five clergymen.

M. E. S.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan

Opening of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, N. C.

A simple service with a talk of welcome by Bishop Cheshire marked the beginning of the eighty-sixth session of Saint Mary's School. In addition to the Bishop, the rector, the Rev. Warren W. Way, and the Rev. Messrs. Barber, Lane, Goold and Lackey of the local clergy were present in the chancel of the chapel.

The Bishop's address was largely of an historical nature. He explained that he was acting for the newly-appointed president of the Board of Trustees, Bishop Penick, who was not able to be present. In his name he extended a welcome to teachers and students. Bishop Cheshire declared that after Thirty years of service as President of the Board of Trustees he felt that the time had come for a change of responsibility to a younger man. He spoke of the great changes that had come about at Saint Mary's in these thirty years and sketched the work accomplished by the various rectors of the school during that time. He mentioned first Dr. Bennett Smedes, of blessed memory, who had inherited the school from his father and under whom the school had become the property of the Dioceses of North and South Carolina; of Dr. Bratton whose lovable personality renewed and kept alive the old spirit of St. Mary's; of Mr. DuBose who felt strongly the necessity of doing away with the debt incurred in the purchase of the school property and of his sincerity and faithfulness in the administration of the affairs of the school; of Dr. George W. Lay, as a wonderful organizer and a well-equipped school man who put the school upon a strong scholastic basis and with courageous determination undertook the difficult task of the erection of the Wing buildings; finally of the present rector, the Rev. Warren W. Way, and his plans for the further development of the school. Bishop Cheshire in closing alluded to the duty of the present faculty and student body in shouldering the heritage of the faithful laborers who have gone before.

Saint Mary's has this year a big enrollment of almost two hundred resident students, about half of whom are North Carolinians, the other half coming from eighteen other states. Extensive repairs and improvements in equipment have been made in the buildings and grounds during the summer. The outlook for the 1927-28 session is a bright one.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary in Annual Session.

The Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese had an interesting meeting in Emmanuel Church, Covington, October 4-6, 1927.

The program opened with Quiet Hour on Tuesday afternoon, conducted by the Rev. Dennis Whittle ,the new rector of Emmanuel.

Tuesday evening there was a mass meeting, at which the missionaries made addresses on the work and conditions at their respective stations. These speakers were Deaconess Maria P. Williams of Dante, Deaconess Blanche Adams of Keokee, Miss Mabel R. Mansfield of Grace House on the Mountain near St. Paul, Miss Caryetta L. Davis of St. Peter's-in-the-Mountains near Callaway in Franklin County, Miss Ora Harrison of St. John's-in-the-Mountains at Endicott, also in Franklin County; Miss Sallie Logan, who spent nine months at Splashdam in Dickenson County; Miss Ella Pier of Christ Mission in Amherst County; Mrs. William Wilkins, of the Missions in Wythe County, and Mr. John A. Wilson, Jr., of Trinity House at Richlands.

Wednesday morning Bishop Jett celebrated the Holy Communion, being assisted by the Rev. Mr. Whittle. This was followed by the business session, with Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, of Roanoke, President of the organization, in the chair. At this time the Bishop addressed the Auxiliary and Mrs. Loving delivered the annual address of the President. At the close of the Wednesday afternoon meeting the ladies were taken in cars for a visit to the Boys' Home, just outside of Covington.

The feature of the mass meeting on Wednesday evening was an interesting address by the Rev. Amos Goddard, Headmaster of St. John's School at Kiukiang, in the Missionary District of Anking, China.

On Thursday morning the Rev. Mr. Whittle celebrated Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. H. H. Young, Dean of Associate Missions, after which the final business matters were transacted and the annual session was brought to a close.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows:

Honorary President, Mrs. Robert Carter Jett, of Roanoke; President, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, of Roanoke; First Vice-President, Mrs. John Ecker, of Lexington; Second Vice-President, Mrs. Philip C. Pendleton, of Clifton Forge; Secretary, Miss Julia P. Leache, of Roanoke; Treasurer, Mrs. Gordon H. Baker, of Roanoke; Supply Secretary, Mrs. Franklin Hanger, of Staunton; Secretary of Church Periodical Club, Miss Mary S. Bell ,of Lynchburg; Educational Secretary for James River Convocation, Mrs. Thos. D. Lewis, of Amherst; Educational Secretary for New River Convocation, Mrs. K. A. Grandstaff, of Bristol; Correspondent for the Southwestern Episcopalian, Mrs. John L. Sneed, of Pulaski.

The Custodian of the United Thank Offering is elected after each General Convention to serve three years. This officer is Mrs. W. E. Mingea, of Abingdon.

Mr. Guerry Assistant at St. John's, Roanoke.

As of September 15, the Rev. Sumner Guerry assumed his duties as assistant to the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, rector of St. John's Church, Roanoke. Mr. Guerry, a son of the Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina, is an alumnus of the University of the South and Virginia Seminary, having been ordained to the diaconate at the latter institution by Bishop Guerry in 1921. He then went as a missionary to China and was ordained priest by Bishop Graves in 1922. For five years he was in the Missionary District of Shanghai, for the greater part of this period being located at Yangchow.

Mr. Guerry was in the army during the World War and held a commission as First Lieutenant of Infantry at the time of the Armistice. His address is Box 1057, Roanoke, Virginia.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of The Woman's Auxiliary.

The first monthly meeting for the season of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington, was held on Tuesday, October 4, at St. Barnabas' Church in Queen Anne Parish, Leland, Maryland. This was an all-day session and served to create new interest in the St. Barnabas' Branch, which has been more or less inactive in the past. The Rev. J. C. M. Shrewsbury, rector of Trinity Church, Upper Marlboro and acting minister of St. Barnabas', which has been without a rector since last spring, celebrated the Holy Communion at eleven o'clock. A business session followed the service, and was conducted by Mrs. Hind, Diocesan President, and this was followed by a box luncheon. Another business session which began at ten o'clock, concluded the day's program.

Cathedral Canons.

Bishop Freeman has announced the recent appointment of seven local clergymen as honorary canons of Washington Cathedral and believes that this will serve to link the Cathedral more firmly with the diocese in a close and continuing relationship. The new appointees are the Rev. Charles T. Warner, rector of St. Alban's Church; the Rev. George Fiske Dudley, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church; the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Lafayette Square, and the Rev. Herbert Scott Smith, D. D., rector of St. Margaret's Church; the Rev. Ze Barney Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, and the Rev. D. Wellington Curran, D. D., Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Washington.

A course of lecture-sermons on the great religions of the world which was given by Dr. Phillips, of Epiphany Church two years ago, will be repeated this year, beginning October 9, at the evening service.

Dr. Phillips' scholarly and attractive presentation of this series drew numbers of people to hear them two years ago and the course is being resumed now by Dr. Phillips, in response to many requests from people in and outside of the congregation of Epiphany Church.

The fall service for the presentation of the United Thank Offering of the Diocese of Washington will be held in the Church of the Ascension on October 23, at eight o'clock. It is expected that Bishop P. M. Rhinelander will make the address on that occasion.

Dr. Gayner Banks, head of the Society of the Nazarene, is holding a mission in Emmanuel Church, Anacostia, during the week of October 9. There are four services a day, beginning with a seven-thirty service of Holy Communion and ending with a large service in the evening at eight o'clock.

The French services, which were held during Lent last year at St. John's Church, will be held again during the coming season, on Sunday afternoons at four o'clock. The entire service of evening prayer, hymns and sermon will be given in French and is being planned in response to requests from a number of French people in Washington who attended the services last year.

The Rev. Earle G. Lier has been taken on the staff of Epiphany Church to be in charge of the work at Epiphany Chapel and will, with Mrs. Lier, be in residence in the parish house of the chapel, within a few weeks.

Mr. Lier is a graduate of the Princeton Theological Seminary and was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Freeman last autumn, and will be advanced to the priesthood soon. Mr. Lier is doing some post-graduate work at the Virginia Theological Seminary and has already begun his work at the chapel.

Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.

Emmanuel Church, Middleburg.

On Sunday, October 2, the new chancel and pipe organ in Emmanuel Church, together with many other gifts, were dedicated by the rector, the Rev. D. Campbell Mayers. This ivy-clad brick building was erected in 1842, and later on was enlarged by the addition of a frame chancel and vestry room. In the process of time the church had fallen into considerable disrepair. In 1926, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Davis, of New York, presented a pipe organ to the congregation and its acceptance necessitated an addition to the church. Plans for renovating and enlarging the building with a brick addition were accepted by the vestry and building committee, and for the past six months the work has been going on under the immediate supervision of the rector. The addition provides for an organ chamber to the left and an alcove to the right; a recessed chancel with the rector's room to the left and a room for the altar guild to the right, with a stairway leading to a commodious room, to be used for the Church School, Auxiliary, and other parish activities.

The interior of the church is finished in the Colonial style, with certain modifications. The building is heated by steam, and the illumination with electricity is especially pleasing; the only lighting fixtures that are visible are an antique crystal chandelier and the sanctuary light to match. The other lights concealed behind the arches, give a soft golden glow. The organ was built by Mr. Moller and is very satisfactory and possesses an exceptionally sweet tone. The chancel furniture is of black walnut, many pieces being memorials.

A splendid pair of box-wood trees have been planted at the front door and add much to the dignity of the edifice. The grounds have been graded and terraced, and a pair of brick pillars with old iron gates have been erected at the entrance. The aim of the building committee was to alter the appearance of the building as little as possible, and on approaching the building no one would suspect that such extensive changes had been made.

With the rehabilitation of the old rectory six years ago, when it was put into perfect repair, the Middleburg congregation now has a plant which is a credit to the parish and the diocese.

This church has as a part of its congregation the girls from the Foxcroft School who attend the services three Sundays in each month, and generously support the work of the parish. Each year a number of girls are presented for Confirmation.

The church was crowded beyond its capacity at the service of dedication. Letters were read from the Bishop of the diocese, and from Bishop Darst, a former rector, and from others. The Rev. T. D. Harari, friend and neighbor of the rector, was present and made a short address of felicitation, and sang the Twenty-third Psalm in Arabic, playing his own accompaniment on the organ. He also assisted at the celebration of the Holy Communion.

Annual Meeting of The Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The annual meeting of the New York Diocesan Assembly of The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, was held on Saturday, October 1, at Christ Church, Bronxville, President Harry E. Hanhausen, conducting the business session.

After the business session the General Secretary, Leon C. Palmer, spoke on "Practical Methods of Personal Evangelism for Laymen". At Evening Prayer the sermon was preached by the Very Rev. H. C. Robbins, Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

The service was followed by a fellowship supper with brief talks by the rector and Captain B. F. Mountford of the Church Army, who announced that he was joining a Chapter of The Brotherhood of St. Andrew and wanted to be received as a Brotherhood man.

Lay Cornerstone of New Parish House.

On Saturday, September 24, the cornerstone of the Parish House of All Saints' Mission, Irondequoit, was laid by the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese, assisted by the Rev. Francis A. Ransom, rector of St. James' Church, in the presence of a large gathering.

This service made one realize what has been accomplished in so short a time. On November 1, 1925, All Saints' Day (from which this church derives its name) services were held for the first time in the Masonic Temple on St. Paul Boulevard; and it is gratifying to know that the new parish house will be ready for occupancy All Saints' Day, 1927.

The site of the building is a beautiful spot at the corner of Chestnut Hill Drive and Winona Boulevard, and is the gift of Messrs. Silas and Walter S. Colt. The town of Irondequoit adjoins the city of Rochester on the east side of the Genesee River, immediately north of the city. The steady increase in attendance and interest proves that All Saints' Mission fills a definite want in this rapidly developing section.

Funeral of Rector's Wife.

Funeral services for Mrs. Blaine Campbell Davis, wife of the Rev. William L. Davis, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Pittsford, who died in Rochester, on September 27, were held Friday afternoon at Christ Church. The officiating clergymen were the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., and the Rev. L. G. Morris, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Rochester.

Mrs. Davis was the oldest child of the late Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Putnam Campbell, of Williamstown, West Virginia, and was born there on September 27, 1872. She lived there until her marriage to the Rev. William L. Davis, of Rochester, in 1896, who later was archdeacon of Rochester seventeen years.

Seven years ago on November 1, Mr. and Mrs. Davis came to Pittsford, where Mr. Davis assumed his duties as rector. Mrs. Davis was always identified actively with religious work, and for years conducted a large Bible class in Christ Church, Rochester, and continued her interest and work in Pittsford.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Clergy Conference.

Preparation for the fall activities in the Diocese of Georgia has started earlier this year with the annual clergy conference held the first part of October instead of November, when it is usually held. The Rev. Charles H. Lee, D. D., of St. Simon's Island, Executive Secretary of the Field Department, who was appointed last May on the resignation of Miss Edith D. Johnston, who held the office for six years, arranged the conference, which was held at St. John's Church, Savannah, October 4 and 5. All of the clergy were present except two, making sixteen white and four colored, and seventeen white and four colored delegates were present, besides a number of local communicants who also attended. The conference was one of the best ever held in that there was more lively discussion and exchange of methods than heretofore.

The Rev. John M. B. Gill, rector of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, formerly a missionary to China, who represented the National Council, was the only outside speaker. Mr. Gill gave the address at the opening service on Tuesday evening, and spoke once at the conference the following day on the General Church Program. The other speakers on the program were the diocesan clergy who spoke on assigned topics on methods. The Bishop of the diocese presided and gave the address at the celebration of the Holy Communion on Wednesday morning.

The Diocese of Georgia has always paid its budget quota, and there was evidenced at this conference a desire to pay the quota in full next year. The rectors of the large parishes that have met their entire quota, thus paying the bills of those which have not paid their budget quota even, made an earnest plea to the representatives of the delinquent parishes to do this much in the way of progressive work in the coming year.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor.

Laying of the Cornerstone of St.-Mark's-On-the-Hill, Pikesville.

The cornerstone of the new Church of St.-Mark's-on-the-Hill, the Rev. Roger Walke, rector, was laid amid impressive ceremonies on Sunday, September 25, by the Bishop of Maryland. The church will be of native stone, harmonizing with the parish house, which was newly erected and completely equipped. The plans of the architects, Messrs. Taylor and Fisher, called for a cloister connecting the church and parish house, and a massive tower dominating the group, giving the whole, with its situation on a hill surrounded by splendid trees, the old world atmosphere of an English country church. The tower and cloister are to be built later.

St.-Mark's-on-the-Hill has made a remarkable growth. Eight years ago the property consisted of one acre of land on which stood a small frame church and frame rectory. Today there are three acres of land, a handsome rectory, a complete parish house, and the church in process of erection. When the church is completed next spring the property will have risen in value from $20,000 to about $150,000.

Bishop Murray took occasion to say at the time of the laying of the cornerstone that not only had this congregation done great things for the parish, but that during his entire episcopate he had never asked anything of St.-Mark's-on-the-Hill for the diocese or the General Church without having his request fully met. A rough estimate shows that during the last eight years some $40,000 has been given to Church objects entirely outside of the parish. The best thing about it all is that all members work and give as they are able. Neither Parish, Diocesan, nor National Church contributions represent a few gifts, but the multiplied gifts of all the two hundred men, women and children who compose the congregation of St.-Mark's-on-the-Hill.

A Notable Achievement.

The Rev. C. Henckell, rector of Grace Church, Birmingham, celebrated in a happy manner the ninth anniversary of his rectorate. After four years of building, overcoming seemingly insuperable obstacles, on the evening of the Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity Dr. Henckell and his congregation had the joy of seeing the new church building formally opened. Bishop Coadjutor McDowell was in charge of the service. With him in the chancel, beside the rector, were the Rev. Messrs. Chas. Clingman, Oscar deW. Randolph, V. C. McMaster, Edmonds Bennett and G. W. Ribble, all of the Birmingham District. The Bishop preached on the miracles of faith, as illustrated by Dr. Henckell's remarkable achievement under God.

The gift of a handsome U. S. flag, was blessed by the Bishop at this service. He also presented to Dr. Henckell a well-filled purse, as a personal gift from his fellow clergy of the district, with the request that he use it in taking a well-deserved vacation.

The building of this handsome stone church is of the romance of religion. Backed by a small congregation, composed of people of moderate means, with no funds in sight, and even in the face of opposition, the rector undertook to build. The first notice to the public was a single wagon load of stone that was one day dumped on the lot, on top of which was placed a small U. S. flag. Gradually other material followed, gifts of those who caught the rector's spirit. The cornerstone was laid in July, 1924. The imagination of the neighborhood was arrested. Gifts flowed in from men of all faiths, even Roman Catholics and Jews, as well as from men of no declared faith. The steel girders of the roof were given by the Men's Club of the Church of the Advent. Floor joists were bought for $1.60 by individuals wishing to help, etc.

The windows were all given as memorials, one of them being to Edith Cavell, martyr of the great war. One good woman, now deceased, had hidden $1,000 in a flower pit for safe-keeping, and had forgotten its hiding place. She found it after many months in a badly decayed condition. She presented it to the rector for the building fund. It was forwarded to Washington, and in return $990 were received. When the donor died she willed an additional $500 to the building fund.

In the steeple is a mellow old bell of honorable history, the gift of Gen. Joseph F. Johnson. For a long while, as it lay on the ground until it could be hung, passing school children, ignorant of that history, cast stones at it to hear its sonorous tones.

The pay-as-you-go plan has been followed throughout. The church still lacks ceiling and a heating plant. When these are added it will be ready for consecration.

Diocesan Conference.

The first conference of clergy and laity in the diocese was held in Little Rock, Ark., October 4 and 5.

The first day's conference was held in Christ Church, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., rector, the program being as follows:

7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion, celebrant, the Rt. Rev. Edwin Warren Saphore, D. D.

9:15 to 12:30 A. M.—General Church Program—Dr. Loaring Clark.

2:30 to 4:30 P. M.—Executive Council—T. E. Wood, Active Chairman.

8:00 P. M.—"A Priest in the Church of God"—Dr. Loaring Clark.

The conference on the second day was held in Trinity Cathedral, the Rev. John Williamson, Dean, with the following program:

7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion, Celebrant, Dr. Witsell and Dean Williamson.

9:15 A. M.—Diocesan Plans and Every Member Canvass—The Rev. Samuel H. Rainey, rector St. Mary's Church, El Dorado, Ark.

11:15 A. M.—Summing Up—The Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., Representative of the National Council.

2:30 P. M.—Woman's Auxiliary—Mrs. A. N. Tanner, Helena, President.

8:00 P. M.—Dr. Loaring Clark.

Representatives from every parish in the diocese, with but three exceptions, were in attendance and the conference was fraught with intensive interest and consecrated zeal. The conference will become an annual event in this diocese. The hearts of those in attendance were much cheered by a message from the bedside of the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, who has just undergone a serious operation at Rochester, Minn., to the effect that he had stood the operation well and was resting easy.

Dr. Clark will hold conferences of two days in several of the parishes of the diocese the present month and his messages are awakening Churchmen to the necessity for organization in the work of the Every Member Canvass to be conducted in November.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Lay Cornerstone For New Church.

Trinity Church, Monessen, the Rev. Bernard C. Newman, rector, laid the cornerstone for the new church and parish house on Saturday afternoon, October 8. The Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, officiated, with the cooperation of the Rt. Worshipful Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, Free and Accepted Masons, and the local chapter.

The new church plant is a decided improvement over the old church site, and although the parish house will not be completed at present, represent an investment of $65,000.

Noon Day Services.

The Rev. P. G. Kammerer, Ph. D., rector of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, has announced that at the noonday services on Wednesdays, the speakers will be a representative group of ministers from other denominations. The services are broadcast and will permit many of the radio congregations to hear pastors from all denominations give their messages from the pulpit of Old Trinity.

Change in the Hour of the Evening Service at Calvary Church.

Beginning with the first Sunday in October, the rector of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, has changed the time of the Sunday evening services from a quarter before eight to seven o'clock for the entire month. This is being done in order to avail himself of the opportunity to broadcast the services through the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company. This company, as many know, is part af a wider circuit of radio broadcasting. The former hours of broadcasting church services on Sunday night has been taken over by the entire circuit for other purposes. At the present time the earlier hour from seven to eight is still open for the use of KDKA. Through the generous interest and cooperation of Mr. H. P. Davis and other officials of the Westinghouse Company, this hour may be used for the broadcasting of Calvary's service. With the almost universal interest in radio and the advantage of a Sunday night opportunity, it has seemed good to Dr. van Etten, the rector, after consulting the vestry, to make a trial of this opportunity at least for the Sunday nights of October.

The Home Committee of the Department of Religious Education under the direction of Mr. Harvey Smith is making an effort with the aid of the clergy of the diocese and the several newspapers to compile a list of isolated communicants in order to send them religious material and other periodicals that will keep them in touch with the progress of the work of the Church.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

The Centennial Endowment Fund.

One million dollars is the goal set by Bishop Page for the Centennial Endowment Fund for the Diocese of Michigan, the campaign for which will be conducted November 11-23. The object of the fund is to provide, through the annual interest, for several of the outstanding needs of the Diocese. Sixty-five per cent will be used for physical equipment, especially in needy parishes of the Diocesan Mission Field; ten per cent for extension work in the University of Michigan, where there are some eight hundred Episcopal students; ten per cent for the increase of the Episcopal Fund; ten per cent for the Bishop's discretionary fund; and five per cent for a Poor and Indigent Fund. A small group of laymen have underwritten the entire cost of the campaign. The mechanics will be administered by the firm of Wells, Ward, Dreshman and Gates. The executive committee consists of the Bishop and Messrs. Wm. T. Barbour, Chas. M. Rochm, Sidney T. Miller, Elliott S. Nicholls, Frank W. Blair, Fred L. Wardell, Matthew B. Whittlesey, G. Ogden Ellis, C. R. Wells, John A. Fry, Revs. R. W. Woodroofe and John Dysart.

Diocesan Normal Schools.

Under the leadership of Mr. E. E. Piper, Superintendent of Religious Education for the Diocese of Michigan, the diocese this year will be served by four flourishing Normal Schools at strategic points—Port Huron, serving the "Thumb" District; Bay City, serving the Saginaw Valley; Flint, serving Lower Michigan; and Detroit, serving the metropolitan area. In these, close to five hundred Church School teachers of the diocese meet each month for training in the various departments of religious pedagogy.

A new parish house has been opened by St. Matthew's Church, Detroit, the Rev. E. W. Daniel, rector. The building, designed by Lancelot Sukert, contains living apartments for the rector, as well as a large dining-room and kitchen, offices, auditorium-gymnasium and ample accommodations for the Church School.

Ground was broken for a new church for St. Columba's, Detroit, Sunday, September 4.

Camp Frisbie.

Nearly four hundred boys, from forty different parishes and missions, were at Camp Frisbie, the boys' camp for the Dioceses of Michigan during July and August, 1927. Sixty-four of these were boys of high-school age attending an older boys' conference with a special vocational emphasis given by Mr. A. C. Crockett, Vocational Psychologist of the Detroit Board of Education. A feature of the earlier summer activities was the dedication of the Frisbie Memorial Chapel, the gift of Mrs. Henry Ford. A log building, sixty by twenty-six feet, with sacristy twenty by twenty, seating one hundred and sixty people,, it was designed by Lancelot Sukert to represent the type of Church structure in which our fathers of one hundred years ago were wont to worship. Mr. and Mrs. Ford attended the services of consecration, at which the music was furnished by the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit.

During the summer the choir and sanctuary of the Church of the Messiah, Detroit, were dismantled, and a beautiful tile pavement was laid. New sedilia, organ front and panelling were also installed. This represents the completion of a scheme started many years ago.

Miss Joan Grassly, a graduate of Goucher College and Master of Religious Education (Hartford), has accepted the position of Director of Religious Education at St. Paul's Church, Lansing, the Rev. Eric L. Tasman, rector.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Clergy Conference.

A clergy conference was held at Wrightsville Beach, near Wilmington, N. C., September 21, 22 and 23. On the first day, the Rev. Dr. W. H. Milton, rector of St. James' Church, Wilmington, lectured on the subject of the ministry; on the second day, the Rev. Walter R. Noe, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of East Carolina, spoke on the Church's Program and fall work; and the last day was used by Bishop Darst to discuss the plans for the "follow-up" of the Bishops' Crusade. Besides the above leaders, the Rev. Robert B. Drane, D. D., of Edenton, and the Rev. H. D. Cone, of Clinton, conducted devotions. The conference was well attended, and pronounced a success by all. Comfortable quarters were had in the Holiday House, which is owned by the diocese.

East Carolina is already planning to conduct preaching missions and conferences on evangelism in every place possible during the next Lenten season.

"Home Coming Day" at Historic Old Church.

Fifteen hundred people attended the annual Home Coming at old St. John's Church, Pitt County, North Carolina, September 11. The address of welcome was given by Dr. W. W. Dawson, of Grifton; the response by the Hon. F. C. Harding, of Greenville; and the Holy Communion was celebrated by the rector, the Rev. G. F. Cameron. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Harvey A. Cox, of Newport News, Va.

A picnic dinner was served in the oak grove in front of the church. The afternoon meeting was one of the best of the day. Short talks were made concerning the influence that St. John's Church has exerted upon the community and the surrounding country. The meeting authorized the rector to appoint a committee to formulate plans to beautify the grounds and preserve the old church. Those in charge hope to make old St. John's Church the standard for rural churches. It is already a community affair, as many as five different denominations compose its Church School.

Who Are the Blind?

Who are the blind?
The Homers, Miltons, and their kind
In darkness sealed,
Who sense the lyric truth concealed
And beauty furled
Within the wrappings of the world?
Or we with eyes,
Who see but stuff of weight and size?
Who are the blind?

Who are the blind?
The beggars by the road who find
The golden light,
Because they know their hapless plight,
And beg and pray,
As Bartimaeus did that day?
Or we, indeed,
Sight dazzled, with no sense of need?
Who are the blind?

Who are the blind?
The dark of eye? The dark of mind?
The dark of soul?
There is the blindness of the mole
With covered eyes,
And of the staring moth that flies
Into the flame.
No light, misuse, are much the same.
Who is not blind?

Judge Not.

There is no sin in the whole category of sins to which we are all so liable, even the best of us, as this sin of judging others. Jesus knew well enough the need to give warning regarding this tendency. He knew that within men and women is a little imp of depreciation of others and that, alas, seems only too often to find food for unfortunate judgments in the actions of men. So in this wonderful Sermon on the Mount, the sermon of all sermons that men admire without trying to practice, Jesus takes us to task and says, "Judge not, that ye be not judged".

The experience of mankind throughout the ages has been that the warning is sadly needed. Even some of the saintliest of men have felt with confusion and shame their own shortcomings in this regard. Let us hear two of them. F. D. Maurice always declared he dreaded a tendency to judge the lives of others. "Of all spirits," he writes to his mother, "I believe the spirit of judging is the worst and it has had the rule of me I cannot tell how long and how dreadfully". The great theologian, Godet, wrote in his journal at the time he was nineteen years old, "How difficult it is not to judge. That is perhaps the reef that lies nearest to the haven, the rock on which the best and holiest strike. They judge"!

The Gospel of Luke expands the text, "Judge not, that ye be not judged; condemn not, that ye be not condemned; forgive, and ye shall be forgiven." The true idea of the teaching of Jesus is brought out by the expansion. It is not that Jesus would object to our fair and proper estimating of our fellows. That is often both necessary and inevitable. In any case of competing interests, in any selection of men and women for positions of power and influence, a certain amount of estimating must be done. It is then only weakness to forbear to take the most careful and accurate estimate of a person's worth and ability. Jesus recognizes that times will come when we shall have to take stock of each other. He gives us a rule to guide us in that estimate. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Men and women themselves provide the material for our judgment. By their own actions they judge themselves.

The factor about which our Lord would be anxious is the spirit and attitude we adopt toward others. Do we rush into the opportunity to condemn others, feeling a secret satisfaction that we are not as others are? Which are we more careful about, the welfare of others or our practice and pleasure of judging? What is our motive? Are we seeking the help or the hurt of others, or are we even being thoughtless and foolish, without stopping to reckon the consequences of our judgments? Such are some of the questions that I believe that Jesus would have us put to ourselves on this difficult and very important and practical subject.

The one thing for which Jesus had no place in His scheme of things was the censorious spirit, the spirit of captious criticism that seems unable to forbear to seize, or even to create, opportunity to condemn the actions of others. This spirit is the very opposite to fairness and forbearance. Jesus looks for the spirit in us all that allows for human frailty, as He did Himself. He warns us against a readiness to condemn others and declares that this sort of thing has a reflex action: "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again." Even on the ground of a hgher selfishness,i He admonishes us to be careful. He really wishes us to guard against a bitter, harsh, censorious spirit because we are disciples of His and ought to seek to have His spirit. No person can study carefully the practice of Jesus and not see that He desires kindly judgment and not harsh condemnation. There is nothing more unlovely and contrary to His spirit than a self-righteous attitude in life, and woe betide us if we have it!

There are reasons which ought to be sufficient for all of us to refrain from unkind and unfair criticism of the lives of others. I would that we wrote these reasons upon the tablets of memory that in future days they may act as a check upon unconsidered and irresponsible condemnation of others. The first and most obvious of these reasons is "Remember your own resisted". Burns knew the truth of that which he sang. He had indeed learned in suffering what he taught in song. He knew the moral scale of humanity, its sharps and flats, its glories and its tragedies. So easily we forget all this and rush into judgment.

One of the weightiest reasons for restraint is that the censorious spirit is contrary to love. The real condemnation of harsh judgment is that the one who criticizes is simply thinking of his or her own satisfaction and is not trying to help the wrong-doer. We simply must, as professed followers of Christ, watch against enjoying the spectacle of another's fall. There can be nothing more deadly than that. We ought to feel the need for tears for the sins of others. That is a mark of the following of our Lord. For we are linked together. The sin of others is our sin. Jesus acted as if He believed that and so He took upon Himself our sins and carried our sorrows. With His stripes we are healed. So must we deal with our fellows, in that spirit of redemptive helpfulness and not in the attitude of a supercilious condemnation of their follies.

Some one has said, "The glory of Christianity is that it conquers by forgiveness". While we were sinners, we were reconciled to God by the life and teachings and death of His Son. That is the treatment that has been accorded by the Father of all men to our sins —and that is the treatment we must pass on to others!—Rev. H. D. Ranns, in The New Outlook.

Juan Collects a Bill.

(Bishop Creighton Sends a Little Local Color.)

Juan is a Spaniard, hard working, frugal and polite, who is "dueno" of the grocery and wine store just across the street from our house. He is short, stocky and agile. His eyes flash when he talks and his smile is beguiling. But Juan didn't smile yesterday. He was collecting a bill.

It was almost time for my Confirmation class from Hooker School to come for their instruction and I was thinking over my lecture. It is hard to think, however, when there is a disturbing chorus of excited voices in the street just below the study window; so I gave it up and went out on the terraza to see what it was all about. It was simply Juan collecting a bill from our Mexican neighbors.

He was shouting at the top of his lungs and gesticulating with all the energy of one of Don Quixote's windmills. So were our neighbors, all of them—the gentleman of the house, his wife, their criadas and, I think, several of their relations.

Quite a crowd had gathered and, encouraged by the audience, the debaters, sad to relate, came to blows. Not that the blows hit any one, but still they were struck. I am inclined to think that accuracy was not exactly desired. The torrent of words never ceased, however breathless the combatants became.

Juan was very much in the minority and at a disadvantage because the women folks and criadas kept pulling him away from their champion, the debtor. However, Juan was full of fight and always went back. A favorite gesture which became quite popular before the melee was over, was a wild slap into space and then a grab at coat lapels and a vigorous and vicious shaking.

How long this battle might have continued I do not know, but while it was at its very worst and the air was being soundly slapped amid terrific outcries, some one discovered a boy with an automobile tire which was promptly confiscated and forced between the combatants, much to their surprise and distress. Who can fight manfully with a big auto tire held menacingly between champions of virtue and debt?

The debtor's wife grabbed her husband in the very moment of his contemplation of this horrid interruption and shoved him into the house and then planting herself defiantly in front of him, she gave Juan a mean look of contempt.

I knew the fight was over and it was, with the exception of the one blow which landed. The impatient husband stuck his head out to shout one last imprecation at the distressed Juan, an imprecation which was lost in a gurgling choke as the protecting wife reached back gracefully with her elbow and brought it in violent contact with the Adam's apple of her spouse.

For a few minutes the street was quiet. Then Juan, resourceful Juan, persistent Juan, came back with two tecnicos. And the argument started afresh. A great crowd gathered. The windows and roofs were filled with an eager audience, autos and camiones stopped that the passengers might see, too. Then came two gendarmes running with their short muskets in their hands. The crowd was dispersed, all concerned were arrested, and the last we saw of the attempt of Juan to collect his bill, was several autos full of people on their way to headquarters to "tell it to the judge".

St. Luke—The Beloved Physician.

By Myrtle Humphreys.

St. Luke was a doctor and was evidently very gentle and compassionate, as he is called "the beloved physician". He was also an artist, and is thought to have been converted under the teaching of St. Paul. His home city was Antioch.

Apparently he was not an eye-witnes of our Lord's life, although this is not definitely known: but he gathered information from the apostles and wrote it all down systematically. He wrote the Acts of the Apostles and the Gospel according to St. Luke: and in the latter, he gives more information concerning the infancy and childhood of our Lord than any of the other gospel writers. Many have wondered how he knew so much about this part of our Saviour's life, but there is reason to believe that he was acquainted with the Blessed Virgin during her latter days; and owing to the fact that he was a doctor, she told him many things which she would not have told any one else.

Because St. Luke was kind to the sick, our Church names many of her hospitals in his honor. We have a large hospital in New York City, another in China, and still another in Japan; bearing the honored name of St. Luke.

St. Paul is thought to have suffered much ill health, and it may have been partly for this reason that St. Luke went with him on so many of his missionary journeys. No doubt it was a great comfort to St. Paul to have a doctor with him, especially one of so cheerful a temperament as St. Luke.

He was with St. Paul during the voyage to Rome when they endured so much hardship and suffering, and were finally shipwrecked and cast among barbarous people on the island of Melita.

When St. Paul lay in a dungeon at Rome, knowing he had only a short time to live, he wrote: "Only Luke is with me." Every one else had forsaken him, but Luke remained faithful until the end when St. Paul was led forth to die for our Lord.

Tradition says St. Luke died a martyr when he was very old. His day falls upon October 18, and the color for the day is red. Red is the color of blood, and so the Church uses red on a martyr's day, for the heroes who shed their blood for Jesus Christ.

"I Pray Not That Thou Shouldest Take Them Out of the World."

F. B. Stone.

Live in the world and yet apart;
Two masters? Christ says, No,
Choose you this day whom you will serve,
To all your Master show.

Live in the world and yet apart:
The world your choice will scorn,
But sacrifice must be as breath
To every one twice born.

No fellowship for men must lead
Us over God's clear line;
We must be followers of Christ
To share His life divine.

We must not let the world win us,
But we the world must win,
And bring it unto Christ to save,
And cleanse it from its sin.

We must set everything saide
That savors of the world;
For at the slightest compromise
Christ's banner we have furled.

Exalt our Master by our choice,
His banner lift on high;
Exalt our Master by our lives,
As unto sin we die.

School Preparations.

A friend who has no children says that all mothers are "school minded" at this period. Everywhere she goes people are furbishing up school books, getting stout shoes mended, letting down dresses, wondering who Johnny's new teacher will be and all the rest of it. Of course we are school minded, we can't help it.

Among the best preparations come the keeping of the children away from the woods and hikes where poison ivy may be picked up, getting the stone bruises and injuries well, establishing regular habits for the little folks who are to be on a schedule for the first time, getting every book and pencil before the final rush, putting the garments in order and generally acting as if school were the most delightful and necessary thing in the whole world. Last year a little girl had all the joy taken out of her life by thoughtless persons who teased her and represented school as a place of hardships and punishment. Crying she went day by day, and when it finally dawned upon her little mind that she had been deceived the term was well along. Some careless mothers say in the hearing of their little ones that they will be glad to be rid of them when school opens, while others confess their mistakes in government by promising that teacher will "straighten you out", thus making it very hard for the teacher to win their confidence.—Elizabeth Pound, in Presbyterian Banner.

The Manners of Jesus.

Jesus was a perfect gentleman. It made no difference to Him that Zaccheus was a Jewish publican, despised by the Jews. Jesus saw the possible manhood in him. He made friendly advances toward him and treated him as an equal; and He so trusted the innate nobility of the man that He offered to go to his house unbidden. Zaccheus rose to the occasion, to the great satisfaction of the Master, and the amazement of the populace.

As Christians we are expected to show the "manners of Jesus" toward those without, as well as to those within the household of faith. This makes religion attractive. Jesus won Zaccheus, and the woman of Samaria, and many others, by His Godlike manners.

Not all of us can spend large sums of money to promote the cause of Christ. Not all of us can preach His Gospel with eloquence. Not all of us can go to foreign lands to be missionaries of the Cross. But it is even more important for all of us to daily live the Spirit of Jesus, incarnating His Gospel in an attractive manner. This is within our reach—through meditation, through devotion, through absolute surrender of our will and powers to His Holy Spirit. "Ye are my witnesses."—Rev. A. W. Lewis.

De Crossin'—A Spiritual.

R. S. Stringfellow.

I'm a-comin', Mars Jesus,
Comin' down de road.
I gwine cross de Ribber Jordan
At de fo'd.
Oh! help me liff my cross,
An' lighten up my load,
I gwine cross de Ribber Jordan
At de fo'd.

I'm a-comin', Mars Jesus,
Comin' down de road,
I gwine cross de Ribber Jordan
At de fo'd.
At de fo'd You made for me.
On de Cross on Calvary,
I gwine cross de Ribber Jordan
At de fo'd.

Down de road, O Mars Jesus,
Where You once marked de way,
When they led You to de crossin',
On dat dark an' gloomy day.
O Mars Jesus, I'm a-comin',
Comin' down de road;
Oh! meet me at de crossin'
An' lighten up my load.

Refrain.
For I'm a-comin', Mars Jesus,
Comin' down de road;
An' soon I will be crossin'
At de fo'd.

His Debtors.

"What money is among men, love is to God. He says to you and me and every man: "As you thirst for gold, so do I thirst for love. I, your God, want your love, your whole heart's love. This is My due. This I claim. This debt I cannot cancel. Thou shalt love the Lord and thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind and with all thy strength. The fact that we do not render Him this love makes us His debtors perpetually."

For the Young Folks

That Kind of a Boy.

What kind of a man are you going to be
When the trials of life try to get you—
Your job seems too big for one fellow to swing,
While a host of small worries beset you?
Well, how do you take it when lessons are hard,
And the questions seem but to annoy?
For you'll find that the man who can bear it and grin,
Was that very same kind of a boy.

What kind of a man are you going to be
When your nearest friends try to persuade you
That cheating's all right if you're safe from the law,
And that breaking your word won't degrade you?
Well, how do you play when your side's losing out,
And the others mean tactics employ?
For you'll find that the man who in business plays fair,
What that very same kind of a boy.

What kind of a man are you going to be
In the mem'ries of those who outlive you?
What kind of a name are you going to leave,
And what kind of repute will they give you?
Well, how do your teachers and pals rate you now?
And at home do you add grief or joy?
For the man whom we love for his courage and cheer,
Was that very same kind of a boy!

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus as a School Boy.

M. L. G.

The children have gone back to school. All over this great country the school-houses are filled with eager, restless boys and girls. I think the Best Friend would like the school-rooms, the careful, patient teachers, the rows of bright young faces. He had only the schooling of a village Jewish boy. The Rabbi taught them, from the rolls of the Law and the Prophets, kept carefully in the Synagogue. And well He learned, for in the desert when Satan tempted Him, in the Temple Courts when the Pharisees would trip Him if they could, even on the Cross, there came to His lips the words He had learned long ago in Nazareth.

It has been said that He must have loved best the Psalms of David, His own royal ancestor, so often He quotes them; and second, perhaps, the book of Deuteronomy. But He knew all the Rabbi had taught, and could interpret it as no Rabbi ever had done, as the two disciples on the Emmaus road could witness.

For His teachers were not only nor chiefly the Rabbis and Temple Doctors. On the hillside, in the shop, upon the house-roof with only the stars above, He would learn the great lessons of the Father's care, the majesty of God's law and the purpose of His own life here on earth.

Happy will be the child who finds out these things, in some measure, during his school days. The scholar "thinks God's thoughts after Him", and there is no true education that does not lead the soul into knowledge of Him.

So do not be impatient with the long lessons, the difficult task. All truth is of God. The Best Friend said, "I am the Truth"; and at the end of every road of knowledge He stands, the Word of God, "by whom all things were made".

Tabby Ann's Revenge.

When Nan Lane was eight she went to spend the summer with Grandfather and Grandmother Lee, who lived on a farm. There were no children for playmates, but there were frisky little calves, and playful lambs and colts, and she soon made friends with them all.

Then there was Tabby Ann, the big gray-and-white cat, and her three cunning kittens. Nan always saw that the mother cat had a saucer of fresh milk for breakfast and plenty of meat scraps for dinner and supper. She tied gay ribbons around the necks of the kittens and always invited them to the tea parties of Lady Maud, her best doll.

One afternoon, in the midst of one of Lady Maud's frequent birthday feasts, grandfather returned from a visit to a neighbor, and called to Nan as he came up the steps:

"Guess what I have in my pocket for you, little girl."

"A red apple."

"No."

"A peach."

"No."

"A—why, grandpa—it's something 'live'."

"So it is, girlie. It is Zip, a new playmate."

He took from his pocket a tiny black-and-white Mexican terrier, no larger than a big rat.

The little dog bristled and barked furiously at Tabby Ann and her kittens.

The birthday dinner was soon over, for Zip ate every morsel of the sandwiches and cake, and whined for more.

That evening he chased the kittens until they hid in the wood-shed, and at supper time he devoured his own supper in double-quick time and swallowed Tabby Ann's before she could say, "Scat"!

Next morning Zip drove Tabby Ann from her saucer of fresh milk and drank it before Nan could reprove him for his greediness. He was so selfish and greedy that Nan had to feed the cat in the pantry with the door closed.

But worse even than his greed was Zip's way of taking all the petting and barking if Tabby Ann or her babies came near Nan. The cat and her kittens spent most of the time on the back porch, but mewed plaintively to show how they missed their little girl friend.

One morning Zip slipped into the pantry, drank Tabby Ann's milk, and ate her bits of meat before Nan could come to the rescue.

"Zip needs to be punished," said grandmother. But before Nan could decide upon a way of punishment he had followed the hired man to the barn, barking fiercely at everything he saw.

It was not long until the little terrier came running back with a big mastiff in pursuit. When he reached the back steps Zip turned and growled ferociously. The big dog was not to be driven away so easily. Thinking he had found a new kind of rat, he caught the little terrier by the neck and began to shake him vigorously.

Nan saw it all from the back porch and cried loudly for help. Grandmother had gone upstairs, and no one answered the call. Another minute and all would have been over for Zip. From the low porch roof, where she had taken refuge from the strange dog, sprang Tabby Ann, square on the mastiff's back. Her sharp claws dug into his thick skin with such force that he dropped the terrier to howl with pain. He ran from the yard and the cat leaped nimbly to the fence as he went through the gate.

"She saved your life, Zip," cried Nan as she took the frightened puppy in her arms. "You've got to be good to her from this on."

Zip only hung his head and wagged his tail, but from that day he was a different dog. He did not growl any more when Nan petted Tabby Ann and her babies, and they soon became such friends that they ate together without so much as a snap or a snarl. By returning good for evil, as a way of revenge, Tabby Ann cured the wee doggie of selfishness.—Ex.

Teddy Meets a Rainstorm at Camp.

"Yes, Mamma, I'm going to!" It was Teddy replying to a request of his mother to bring in his wood for the evening and to be sure and feed his pets. Three times she had to make the request that evening and three times she received the answer that he was going to do it.

Perhaps it was Mamma Bear's fault that Teddy had acquired this little habit inasmuch as she had not corrected it when he first started to put off doing things when told to do them. At any rate he surely had the habit fixed now and he carried it into nearly every part of his daily life. At school he was all the time putting off his examples until frequently he would be obliged to pass in his paper with only a part of the work being done. One year he failed to make his grade, and when he brought home his report which told that he would have to repeat the grade, the way Papa Bear growled was something awful. One good thing about it was that he did not blame the teacher. He was always just going to do things and yet never doing them.

One Saturday early in the fall the wood people had planned a nutting trip some distance up the lake, and they were going to start just about sunrise. Teddy's mamma called him real early so he would be ready and then made some tasty sandwiches that he could take with him. She was very busy with her other work, and before she knew it the boys were at the door already to go.

Teddy had not stirred from his comfortable bed, but when he heard the voices of the other boys he hustled right out of bed. The boys said they could not wait for him and started on. Teddy hurried as fast as he could and mamma helped him in every way possible. He rushed down to the lake, but the boat had disappeared around the little point of land and Teddy had to walk back home to content himself as best he might.

Mamma Bear said something to him about his "always going to do things", and for once she was glad that he had met his come-uppance. "I am sorry that you missed your nutting trip," she said, "after planning about it all the fall, but if it will only teach you to do things when you should it may be a good lesson after all."

He may have worked better for a few days, but it was not long before his old habit came back, for he brought home poor report cards, missed several good times with the boys, and caused no end of trouble for his parents by this always going to do things.

The particular year in question Teddy had made a little tent and had asked that when they went camping to what is now Craigville, he might sleep all by himself. It was a very warm day when the Bear family went on their annual trip down the Cape and after setting up tents and getting dinner, about the middle of the afternoon the family had a delightful swim in old ocean. Teddy pitched his tent right on the bluff where he could hear the pounding of the waves, but Daddy Bear had gone back in the tall pines nearly a hundred feet.

It was a clear moon light night and the soft murmuring of the waves made Teddy feel very happy. He lay in his tent and dreamed of the good times he was to have in bathing, playing in the fine sand, picking berries back in the pines, and all the charms of that spot which even white people have since learned to love and admire.

The next morning he had a plunge in the waves before Daddy Bear was up, and then in again with him just before dinner. It was a very busy day getting things adjusted for the camp and searching around to find the best berry fields. Night came on all too soon. As the fleecy clouds sped over the moon, Daddy Bear told stories until Mamma Bear said it was time to go to bed. Teddy bid them good-night, and as he left daddy told him to be sure and loosen his tent ropes as it might rain before morning and if it did the ropes would shrink and possibly pull up the stakes. Daddy Bear fixed things for the morning, in case it did rain during the night, and it was some few minutes before he was ready for bed. Just befor he fastened the flaps of his tent he called over to Teddy and asked him if he had loosened his ropes. "I haven't but I'm going to," was the answer he received.

The clouds flitted the faster across the moon and soon obscured it altogether. The waves seemed to grow louder. Shortly after midnight Teddy heard a soft little patter on his tent, but he knew it would not rain through for he had thoroughly treated it to shed water. He soon dropped off to sleep and then he was awakened by a downpour. He had dug a trench around his tent so it would not be likely to wash under.

A gust of wind came, and then something else happened. The tightened ropes tried to shrink and they just couldn't do it. They pulled the tent pins right up and over went the tent and left poor Teddy with the rain pouring down upon him. How it did rain and blow! He grabbed his clothes and blankets and ran for Daddy's tent. He thought he would never get the flap untied. By the time he got inside he was wet to his skin and his blankets were drenched. Daddy Bear rubbed him dry and then took him in bed with himself.

"I can't see why your tent should have pulled those stakes out, for I drove them down real hard," he said to Teddy as they were trying to go to sleep. "You loosened the ropes, didn't you?"

Teddy was still for a minute, and then he burst right out crying. He didn't need to answer now and Daddy Bear knew that he didn't need to ask any more questions. They fell asleep and it was rather late before they woke up. The sun was shining with all its beauty over the delightful country. Daddy and Mamma hung the blankets and clothes on the bushes to dry. Teddy had taken a little cold which grew worse during the day and that night. The Bear family would have gone home, but Teddy was not able to take the journey. In a day or two he was better but he did not get out of his tent until two or three days before it was time to go home. He watched Daddy Bear swim in the breakers but he was not able to have another swim.

He was feeling quite like himself when it came time to pack up. Just as they were getting into the boat he burst into tears and sobbed as if his heart would break. Mamma Bear was almost shocked and wondered what had happened, and then Teddy, stammering through his sobs, said, "I planned and dreamed all the spring for so much and thought I was going to have such a lovely time and I have gone and spoiled it all by that awful habit of always going to do things. I have learned my lesson, Mamma. I promise you now that I will never put off doing things when they should be done right away."

As far as I know, he ever afterward kept his promise.—The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

A Sore Disappointment.

Professor Harland T. Stetson, of Harvard University, went to Norway to observe the recent eclipse of the sun and has just returned to report that an hour before the critical event a dark cloud obscured the whole sky and he did not see a thing. He had traveled altogether 8,000 miles and set up a large telescope and the outcome, instead of being an observed total eclipse of the sun, was a total eclipse of his plans and hopes. Scientific men always run this risk in going off to observe an eclipse. Years ago one of them set up his telescope on a lonely island in the South Pacific, only to have an obscuring cloud spoil it all. He then settled down and patiently waited on the same island for four years until the next eclipse would occur at that place and after this long wait actually met with the same tragic fate. It is a heavy price to pay for scientific investigation, but these men run the risk and meet the cost without hesitation. Truth often comes high and we are all benefited by those who pay its price and win it for us. Our whole splendid inheritance has come to us through the labors of others and we have entered into their labors. So ought we to be willing to serve and wait and sacrifice in the interest of truth and righteousness and the kingdom of God that others after us may have a better world in which to live.—Presbyterian Banner.

The Grasshoppers' Croquet.

Four little grasshoppers one fine day
Hopped on the lawn to play croquet.
"We can't use mallets and balls," one said,
"But we'll play a game of our own instead.
We'll hop through the wickets ourselves and see Whether I beat you or you beat me."

So hippety-hop they went around
Through all the wickets upon the ground,
Till the one who was leading made a jump
And hit the home stake—bumpety-bump!
Then out came Johnny and Bess to play,
And the four little grasshoppers hopped away.

How Many Things.

"Seems to me I'm always doing things for mother," grumbled Jack, when she asked him to water the plants. "I've done lots of things this morning."

"How many?" asked Aunt Amy.

"Oh, I went on an errand, and I fed the chickens! There's always so much to do on Saturday. And now those plants!"

"How many things has mother done for you today? Suppose you make a list."

"I will," said Jack. He brought it later, saying, "I really didn't think it would count up so, Aunt Amy."

Deaths

DUFFY: Died, suddenly, September 12, 1927, in Dinard, France, the REVEREND PHILIP GAVAN DUFFY, son of the late Rev. F. P. F. Duffy, D. D., in his fifty-fourth year. Burial from St. Albans, Holborn, London.

R. J. P.

REV. CHARLES HOLLAND KIDDER.

REV. CHARLES HOLLAND KIDDER was born December 27, 1846, in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., died September 5, 1927, at Asbury Park N. J. Funeral service September 8th at Trinity Church Asbury Park, Rt. Rev. Albion W. Knight, Bishop Coadjutor of New Jersey, Rt. Rev. Paul Jones and nine other clergy in attendance.

The late clergyman was non-parochial. The interment was at Mt. Prospect Cemetery, Asbury Park. He is survived by his widow, Clara Miller-Kidder, and two daughters, Mrs. Howard Chase and Martha A. Kidder.

MISS AGATHA LEWIS TOWLES.

Entered into Life Eternal on Sunday, September 25, 1927, AGATHA LEWIS TOWLES, daughter of Dr. William Beverly Bowles and his wife Harriet Washington. She was a person of high mental attainments, of Christian character and bore uncomplainingly many privations. She was the last of her immediate family, but is mourned by her nieces and nephews and by a host of friends.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

IN MEMORIAM.

LUCY PARKE CHAMBERLAYNE BAGBY

Entered into life eternal at her home, in Richmond, Va., September 15, 1927, at the ripe age of eighty-five, LUCY PARKE CHAMBERLAYNE, widow of Dr. George William Bagby.

The daughter of Dr. Lewis Webb Chamberlayne, she was born at the old home, "Montrose", in Henrico County, Va., on June 8, 1842.

Sprung from a distinguished family her youth was surrounded by ease and comfort while her mind was captivated by the cultured and charming society of antebellum Virginia. But this was not to endure, for scarcely had she bloomed into young womanhood when the terrible War Between the States broke upon the country, with Virginia as the battle ground.

Patriotically offering her services to the Confederate Government this young girl was assigned duties in the War and Treasury Departments, and subsequently in the hospitals.

While so engaged she became acquainted with Dr. George W. Bagby, who had already earned an enviable reputation as editor and author. It was a case of love at first sight and in February, 1863, they were married. Hand in hand they lived through the fall of their beloved Confederacy and together faced poverty and privation and the terrible period of Reconstruction. With the passing of years children came to bless this union. So terrible, so bitter was the poverty throughout the South at this time that to provide for a large family called for heroic exertions. The whole South lay prostrate, preserving only its high ideals. Had Mrs. Bagby's nature been cast in a less heroic mold, she like many another might have gone down in defeat, overwhelmed by odds too great for human nature to surmount. But with splendid Christian courage she bravely faced the dark and uncertain future. One who knew her has written these noble words of her: "She never surrendered to adversity!" And so we find her caring for her family, working faithfully for the Church, and constant in her attendance upon those who were in need, sickness and sorrow.

After a long and painful illness Dr. Bagby died in 1883, leaving her the sole support of the family. She obtained a position in the State Auditor's office under the late Colonel Morton Marye, and this position she filled with remarkable ability for more than twenty years, during which time she reared and educated her children. With every moment so fully occupied it would have been but natural if she had turned her back upon matters of a public nature. It is amazing, therefore, to realize that she was one of the founders and the first Corresponding Secretary of the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, and for twenty years Chairman of the Jamestown Committee; that she was President of the Rosemary Library; that she was the founder of the Needlework Guild of Virginia; and that she also founded the Ice Mission of Richmond and was its sole administrator. Surely a record any one might be proud of! No wonder both of the daily papers of Richmond paid editorial tributes to her when she died.

As a conversationalist Mrs. Bagby was indeed charming, with her cultured mind, her wide reading, her intimate knowledge of men and affairs, it was a privilege to be admitted to her circle of friends.

Some years ago ill health compelled her to spend part of each summer at the White Sulphur Springs, when it was the "old White", and was the great yearly rendezvous of the leading families of the South. Soon Mrs. Bagby became the best known figure there, for she had a spcial corner on the long veranda where each day she would sit, constantly surrounded by a large circle of admiring friends and acquaintances, attracted by her delightful conversation and quiet dignity, and the unique charm of her manner and appearance.

It is a matter of deep regret to many of us that she did not write an autobiography. What a mine of absorbing information it would be to future generations!

Through all the long years, whether in the sunlight of prosperity or the shadows of adversity, she remained Christ's faithful soldier and servant unto her life's end.

Her life was an inspiration; her memory a benediction.

"Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more."

Richmond, Va., October 10, 1927.

WILLIAM BROCKENBROUGH NEWTON.

Entered into life eternal while on a train approaching Jersey City from New York August 18, 1927, WILLIAM BROCKENBROUGH NEWTON, of Norfolk, Virginia, eldest child of the late Bishop John B. Newton and Roberta Page Williamson Newton, his wife, of Richmond, Virginia.

When he was born at the home of his mothers' mother, at Orange, Virginia, during the War Between the States General Lee, who happened to be in the neighborhood, called at the home to enquire after the mother and child and sent him a message to "grow up to be not a soldier, but a Bishop. He did not grow up to be a Bishop, but his sixty-three years on earth were distinguished for rare purity of mind and heart and faithful service to his Master, Jesus Christ. His passing was a translation. Like Enoch he walked with God and was not, for God took him. In the fulness of his usefulness and fine intellectual power, the summons came and instantaneously, without a murmur, he answered.

His wife, who was Mary E. Shields, of Norfolk, a son, William Shields Newton, of Halifax Virginia, a daughter Mrs. Lewis Jerome Taylor of Norfolk, three grandchildren, a sister and four brothers survive to thank God for his beautiful life.

Personal Notes

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY

Southern Churchman

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 22, 1927. No. 43.

"IN HOC SIGNO VINCES"

The Revelation of the Bible is Complete :: Its Doctrines are Immutable :: Its Truth is Invincible :: And its Authority is Absolute :: :: ::

"It is not enough to talk about Christ, read about Him, sing about Him, associate yourselves with His church, and call yourselves followers of His. Trust Christ. He is a Savior; believe that. He is the Savior, the only Savior; believe; that. But go a step farther and say, He is my Savior, my only Savior.

"An act of faith done long ago will not bring you the bread of life to nourish you now. Therefore, be regular in your attendance upon divine services. Look upon your church as the royal palace where Jesus feeds your soul with the life-giving bread from heaven. With due frequency, penitently and believingly, approach the Lord's Table in Holy Communion.

"We receive Christ as the Bread of Life by believing everything that is revealed about Him. These revelations we have in God's holy word. Open the Bible anywhere and you will find that the central theme is Christ. This is true of both the Old Testament and the New. The Christ of the New Testament is the Jehovah of the Old.

"The story of Christ begins with the promise of a Savior to Adam and Eve.

"The story runs from Paradise Lost to the City of God. Thus the Bible speaks of Christ as the sun and center of the Scriptures. Take this book and study it. Outside of what the Bible tells you there is no life and no salvation. Believe the Christ of the Bible, the Christ of the Old Testament, the Christ of the New Testament, the Christ of the epistles, and so feed your souls on the Bread of Life."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Let us live in a great spirit, then we shall be ready for a great occasion.—George Hodges.

"To produce character, education must call to her assistance religion."—Ex-President Hadley, of Yale.

God's Command to the children to, "Honor their father and their mother", is equally binding on the latter, that they so live as to be worthy of being honored.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

"Choose for us, God, nor let our weak preferring
Cheat our poor souls of good Thou has designed;
Choose for us, God, Thy wisdom is unerring,
And we are fools and blind.

The Lord has not only spoken to the man, but has annexed him. The person not only worships, but belongs. The presence around him and above him imposes an absolute claim upon him. It bids him live no longer to himself, but to his God.—H. C. G. Moule.

If you would have your pathway of life illumined and your heart lightened and the burdens and cares of life lifted from your soul, follow the example of the Psalmist who said: "My tongue shall speak of Thy righteousness and of Thy praise all the day long."

"We have careful thoughts for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometime guest,
But we vex our own
With look and tone,
Though we love our own the best."

Though there were no Heaven, O Lord, I would love Thee. Now there is one, I will esteem it; I will desire it; yet, still, I will love Thee for Thy goodness' sake. Thyself is reward enough, though Thou broughtest no more.—Joseph Hall.

"There is a destiny that makes us brothers:
None goes his way alone:
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back into our own."

In the Lord Jesus Christ we do not only see the glory of God, but also the glory of man, and henceforth we must judge humanity in the light of the incarnation, the Cross, and of that heavenly universe of which Christ has taken possession in our name.—W. L. Watkinson.

Every Christian grace is a path to happiness. The beatitudes emphasize this. To know the mind and heart of Jesus and to grow into His likeness is to attain the highest happiness. "These things have I spoken unto you," He said, "that My joy might remain in you and that your joy might be full."

"Ne'er was left a helpless prey,
Ne'er with shame was turned away,
He who gave himself to God
Who on Him has cast his load.
Who in God his hope hath placed
Shall not life in pain outwaste,
Fullest joy he yet shall taste."

We are always getting into straits of some sort which shut us up as in stone walls or iron cages. We know the remedy. The disciples did not petition Herod, but Heaven; and Heaven granted an order of release which Herod could not gainsay. Do not let our poor ignorant reasonings about prayer stultify our divine instinct.—W. L. Watkinson.

We invite attention to ST. ANDREW'S CROSS, enlarged in scope to make it a general Church magazine for all laymen, and with the following new departments added: "Religion in the Home and Everyday Life," "Religious Education and Evangelism," "Experiences in Personal Evangelism," and a page conducted by the National Commission on Evangelism.

Each month there will be a contributed article by one of the following Bishops or other leaders of the Church: Bishops Murray, Anderson, Brent, Darst, Ferris, Fiske, Freeman, Gailor, Garland, Irving P. Johnson, Manning, Oldham, Penick, Slattery, Stires, and Woodcock; the Rev. Messrs. W. A. R. Goodwin, Charles N. Lathrop, Alfred Newberry, and Floyd W. Tomkins; also Messrs. Frederic C. Morehouse, Clinton Rogers Woodruff and others.

In order to widen and extend the usefulness of ST. ANDREW'S CROSS and to bring it within the means of every layman in the Church, the subscription price has been reduced from two dollars to ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM. And further to extend the usefulness of the magazine we make a special offer to NEW SUBSCRIBERS as follows:

14 numbers for $1.00 if ordered before November 1st
13 numbers for $1.00 if ordered before December 1st

St. Andrew's Cross, Philadelphia, Pa.

I enclose ONE DOLLAR. Please send me ST. ANDREW'S CROSS for the remainder of 1927 and all twelve issues of 1928.

IS JONAH REAL HISTORY OR PIOUS LEGEND

Modern critics answer, No history at all, only religious allegory. Jesus Christ teaches actual history, whatever allegorical teachings may be drawn from it.

These critics tell us that the Book of Jonah was written long years after Jonah's time—in fact after the exile—when Nineveh had ceased to exist, for nearly two centuries, and when there were no more Ninevites. The story, they say, cannot be genuine, because no King of Nineveh could ever have acted as the fabled King in Jonah is said to have done; because it is unreasonable to suppose that idolatrous Ninevites would so repent, that it is absurd to suppose, in the light of all that "Science" teaches, that a whale could swallow Jonah, etc. So that the whole story is just a lovely "didactic" parable.

Jonah, the prophet, is a real character, they admit; but he never had the experience related in the book. Your critics of modern days must be careful to believe as few miracles as possible. And so the Jonah of the book is fictitious, the fish is a marvel of the pious fraud king (like the icicle on which the saint is said to have crossed the Irish sea), and the conversion of the Ninevites is a pleasing supposition that gives a happy ending to the tale.

None of it is really true history; but all, it is claimed, is wonderfully edifying—indeed, it would appear from some of these critics that the very fact of the fictitiousness of the story, should make it more edifying, and more really inspired!

To quote a famous critic: "Jonah symbolizes Israel as a nation, and the narrative is analogy of Israel's history. Israel as a nation was entrusted with a prophetical commission to be a witness and upholder of divine truth, but Israel shrank from the commission and often apostatized. It was in consequence swallowed up by the world-power of Babylon, as Jonah was by the fish: in exile, however, like Jonah, it sought its Lord, and thus was afterwards disgorged uninjured."

This is all very pretty—Jonah is Israel; Babylon is the whale; the exile is the three days and three nights in the whale's belly; the whale's belly is Mesopotamia. All very pretty! But it is a marvel that our Lord Jesus Christ did not know this startling parable.

Hear Him:

"An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given it but the sign of Jonah the prophet; for as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

"The Men of Nineveh shall stand up in judgment with this Nation and shall condemn it; for they repented at the preaching of Jonah and behold a greater than Jonah is here." Matt. 12:39 fol. (also Luke 11:32 and Matt. 16:4).

Which shall we take, the dictum of these scholars, or the word of our Lord?

They presume to tell us that Jonah was not really swallowed by the whale; that he did not remain three days and three nights in the creature's belly; that he did not actually preach repentance to the Ninevites; that the Ninevites and their King did not repent; and that Jonah was not in this way a sign to the Jews of Christ's resurrection. Because it was the conviction which both Jesus and the Jews had in the actual fact of Jonah's virtual descent to death and rising to life, that gave force to the Lord's words. Indeed, a large number of the critics, those who carry out logically their notions, freely admit that Jesus as well as the Jews believed the story to be actual fact. He and they did not know what our critics know!

All these facts recorded in Jonah, and referred to as facts by our Lord, are boldly declared to be not facts by these modern critics. Here are at least five statements undeniably contained in our Lord's words that are categorically denied by the Oxford critics.

Where lies the truth? With Him of Calvary and Olivet, or with these Modern Scribes with their pitiful theories?

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST---THE POWER OF GOD UNTO SALVATION

The writer does not share the pessimism of some who regard Christianity as almost helpless in the face of present conditions. He confesses that he is optimistic, but lest some one should misunderstand the ground of his optimism he hastens to explain his reasons.

He is not optimistic because of anything that he observes in the world outside the Church. He cannot share the enthusiasm of those who are constantly proclaiming that humanity is fundamentally sound, and that we are all little gods in the making after we get a few of the mud spots brushed off. It is impossible to feel that the men who are at work stirring up hatred, or the ones who have chosen to deluge us with filth from their dirty minds, or the men who are grinding others that they may become rich are anything less than deliberate sinners rejecting the love and mercy of God. Any one who can regard the chaos of the world and still feel inclined to whitewash humanity is living in the clouds. There is but one little element that lends hope and that is the fact that multitudes are dissatisfied and are secretly wishing for something better.

It is not optimism because of the majority of things within the Church. It is apparent that the Church today is in a distressing condition. Any man who has observed conditions at all closely knows that there are far too many parishes that are not touching the spiritual lives either of their own people or of the people about them at all. With the exception of a few saints who are the salt of the place, they are content to minister a form of religion that constantly circles about the fringes of life without reaching matters of the heart.

We know that prayer is sadly lacking in our homes. There are many men and women who knew what it was to be brought up in a godly home where family prayers were said, who have ceased the custom. We know that these people have turned the religious training of their children over to the Sunday School and that they have not the slightest idea as to what their children are thinking about the most sacred and necessary things of their lives.

We know that in too many places the lives of Christians are a cause of reproach. There are too many cases in which even the warden may be a drunkard or profane swearer and all this without a word of reproach. He may have been chosen because he was a man of social prominence or of wealth with no questions asked as to his spiritual power.

It is evident that too many parishes are not organized with evangelism as the main aim of the members. The command of Our Lord was: "You shall be witnesses unto Me." Many have forgotten that He ever said the words. One minister is said to have admitted that he had more than a dozen organizations and that not one of them was engaged in personal work. There has come the strange idea that if only we can keep people inside the Church building on some pretext or other that they will unconsciously be influenced to be Christians. It would be far better to have a thorough housecleaning and prepare such a program of work that only the truly spiritual would be drawn to it. There might come out of it just a little band, but like Gideon's men the ones that remained would be of more value than the host of faint-hearted men who went home. No Christian can call himself a real follower of the Lord until he has learned to pray with some one else and to lead him to the Saviour.

We are not optimistic because of much that we hear proclaimed as the Gospel. On the contrary some men seem all at sea as far as the Good News is concerned. They have forsaken the standard of Christ, consciously or unconsciously and are engaged in an attempt to construct some moral standards out of other material. In all the indignation that was expressed because of the statement at the recent Church Congress concerning trial marriage, few sensed the real danger of the paper. It was not that the writer advocated trial marriage. He did not, he merely left it as an open question to be decided not by Christ, but by what he called science. Here, then, is the amazing depth to which some have fallen, that, after they have solemnly promised to receive Jesus Christ as Lord of their lives, and more than that have promised to teach His way to people—after making these promises they are willing to consider as debatable something upon which He has spoken in clear tones. But even when men do not go so far as to challenge the teachings of the Master, or to suggest as some do that He was mistaken, there are plenty of good men who have not the slightest idea as to what constitutes the Gospel. They are contented to give good advice on moral and ethical questions, and consider that a Christian message. Christianity produces morality the highest the world has ever seen, but it is not exhausted in that realm. It is more than good advice, it is good news. No sensible man would toss a book of instructions on swimming to a drowning man. The man needs a saviour, not a pedagogue. Yet, many instructors are holding out lofty ideals to our people in Church and Church School, when the people long for power to practice the ideals.

Our optimism is based on the fact that the Gospel is a power, the greatest power the world has ever seen. It is based on the fact that those who will believe the Gospel have the promise of the Spirit of God to enable them to do what they would be powerless to do themselves. We do not believe that the Gospel that we preach is of man, but that it was given by revelation of God. The prayer of faith will remove mountains of prejudice and of indifference, and of opposition.

This Gospel has triumphed at other times when conditions seemed dark. God was able to use a band of devoted men under Francis of Assisi to lighten a dark portion of the middle ages. He took a body of consecrated young students at Oxford and with them changed the course of English life. In the early times He used a band of fishermen for the most part to turn the world upside down.

The other day we read of one of the more recent Acts of the Apostles. A poor native of Africa was converted in Western Africa, and called of God to preach the Gospel. He knew nothing except his Bible. He felt that he should preach in the interior where the white missionaries had not gone. He came to the pagan villages where superstition held sway and there denounced in burning words the sins of the people and their evil practices. The sway of the devil priests was broken, and many of them turned to God. In three months this simple man of God had moved thousands of people. Some would ask the question, "Did this endure?" The facts give the answer. The people who were converted under his preaching he told to build churches, buy Bibles, worship God and await the coming of the missionaries. When the missionaries arrived eight or ten years afterward they found whole villages of people eager to be taught more about the Saviour. If God can so work through a simple believer, what can He not do through your life?

The Gospel about which we are optimistic is that Christ died for our sins, and that He rose from the dead. There is no other worthy to be called a Gospel. St. Paul instructed us in it when he said: "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how the Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day." St. Peter preached it on the Day of Pentecost "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, you have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain; Whom God hath raised up". That was the emphasis at the beginning and that is the message that changes lives now. "No man has ever moved men for God who has not believed it."

When I survey the wondrous cross
On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.

We are sure that that message has not lost its power. Christ Who was raised from the dead is still able to raise men dead in trespasses and sins (whether Church members or not) to a new life of righteousness and victory. In Him are resources of power that many Church members have neither touched nor even dreamed of. From Him can come the gift of the Spirit that can set men's hearts on fire and send them forth into the dark places and dingy corners of life with a message that can save and purify.

We need men who are willing to lay all upon the altar. Men who are not afraid to suffer the loss of all things that they may win Christ. Men who will not look for the dollars or listen for the easy openings, but will go cheerfully into the hardest places for Him. Our optimism springs from the fact that we believe there are men and women who are ready to listen to that call when presented, and to say:

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were an offering far too small,
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all."

Frank Cox.

FAILURE

Grotesquely contradictory temptations assail us as we travel the highway of life. When our affairs move comfortably and prosperously we are tempted to applaud and approve and be content with ourselves. When disappointments, defeats and disasters come we are tempted to confess and bewail ourselves as failures. Self-satisfaction is the stupid and exaggerated exhilaration of mental and moral drunkenness. Confession that we are failures is moral suicide and abject cowardice.

Tests of character, courage, faith and sense come with the change and vicissitudes through which most of us must pass. Milton wrote of the blessed vicissitudes of day and night and there is deep philosophy in the line. The moral and the spiritual life and the physical life, as we have them here, would perish alike in sunshine never ceasing or darkness never lighted. Fortunately, few of us who survive the first successes, the budding years of youth and early contacts with the world, are afflicted long with the intoxication of self-glorification. Usually those of us with the brains and energy to accomplish creditable results have aspirations, hopes, ideals, purposes to which we do not attain. Realizing that we have fallen short—most of us very far short—of what we would like to be, we are held to reasonable sobriety. Probably the large majority of us are moved to think of and accept ourselves as failures, because very few of us are permitted even to approach the goals of which we have dreamed, for which we yearn always. With that craven impulse comes for us the issue between courage and cowardice.

We read of deeds of gallant men which makes our hearts beat faster and our nerves thrill deliciously as to martial music—the dash of the six hundred at Balaklava, the stubborn, desperate march of Pickett's infantry up the hill to the stone wall at Gettysburg. Their's not to make reply, their's not to reason why, their's to go right on, dauntless and fearless, obedient to orders. Many a pain racked woman, many a physically feeble, baffled, buffeted, storm-beaten man, battling in darkness, silence, loneliness, desolation, has developed and demonstrated valor more splendid and beautiful than any that glitters on pages of history and without the knowledge of any in this world, met the supreme test triumphantly. These are worthy of our envy. Our's not to reason why nor to question the profound and profoundly wise and merciful purposes of the Lord of Hosts. Our part is to go on while there is breath in us, doing as we can, fighting the good fight to the end and the sure reward, never yielding to adverse circumstances. The blacker the night the more brilliant the victory of those who live and strive and struggle sturdily through it. The more dire the disaster, the more deadly the danger or defeat, the higher and more glorious the manhood or womanhood that faces them unfaltering and unafraid, spurning the weakness of acknowledging failure or submitting slavishly to subjugation by any fate.

The strongest souls the world has known have suffered the miseries of depression and gloom. King David, on his throne, wailed: "I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me." The Son of David's leonine lineage, sharing our human nature and weakness, moaned in His agony, "My God! My God! Why hast Thou forsaken me?" Robert E. Lee, winning magnificent immortality with the conquest of his army and the downfall of his cause, passed through the deep waters and fiery trials of which his favorite hymn tells, his soul unscathed and untarnished, leaving fame ever higher and brighter to command the homage of mankind.

The lowliest and poorest of us may emulate the noble patience and the staunch purpose that inspire and nerve the brave to obey, to do their parts manfully, to answer always the call to duty, defying wound and death, down in the ranks, where there is no reputation to be won nor present reward to be hoped for. This it is that strengthens stalwart character to conquer despair and gather from misfortune, anguish and poverty the boundless riches of the Divine verdict, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

None could foresee nor foretell at Appomattox the reverence and honor to be accorded the General overpowered there. Far less can any know how the lives and deeds of some very humble, poor and stricken people will shine in the eternal chronicles of the far hereafter and be honored by the All Seeing Power. These would not confess themselves failures, however often they may have failed, but lived and strove, doing all they could, as they could, however little or much. Bunyan, the tinker, held much in horrible jails, and doubtless thinking himself a failure many times, left a perpetual boon to the world with his crudely written Pilgrim's Progress. He was a wonderfully shrewd, keen student of the varying types of human minds and hearts. He pictures his hero first in the Slough of Despond, later in the clutches of Giant Despair, considering self-destruction—which self-confession of being a failure is—rescued by forgetfulness of bruises, hunger and imprisonment and lifting his heart and thought and prayers until courage returned and with help of the key called "Promise" he passed through dungeon walls and from threatened destruction, rejoicing on his way to the Celestial City.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form, wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 4.

Topic—Redemption; or The Blood of Christ.

Read John 19: and Hebrew 9.

1. As we saw in Lesson No. 2, we are now living in the Sixth Dispensation, or Age of Grace, also called the Church Age. Grace is unmerited favor, and Salvation is now offered freely to Jews and Gentiles upon the one condition of the Faith through the Atonement accomplished by the sacrificial death of the Lord Jesus Christ, beloved Son of God on Calvary's Cross. It is humanity's last test and wil also end in "man failure", as did each previous test. Matt. 24; 2 Peter 3; 2 Tim. 3; Jude 1; Rev. 4 to 19 chapters. This age of grace began at Calvary and will end at the Rapture of the Church, 1 Thess. 4:16, date of which is unknown.
2. In the meantime it is the believer's duty and high privilege to proclaim the glad tidings of eternal salvation through the Redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Mark 16:15; Acts 1:8. Let us therefore consider the efficacy of the Blood of Christ.
3. He is the Lamb without spot or blemish.—1 Peter 1:19.
4. No remission for sin without shedding of blood.—Heb. 9:22.
5. We have forgiveness through His blood.—Eph. 1:7.
6. We are redeemed by His blood.—Col. 1:14.
7. We are purchased with His blood.—Acts 20:28.
8. God is satisfied with Christ's redemptive work. When the sinner is also satisfied to believe it there is peace between him and God.—Col. 1:20.
9. His blood is the cleansing power.—1 John 1:7; Rev. 1:5.
10. By His blood we are justified.—Rom. 5:9.
11. The only means of access to God.—Heb. 10:19; Eph. 2:13.
12. The blood of Christ is the bond of Christian fellowship.—1 Cor. 10:16, 17; Rev. 5:9.

By the blood test we are to distinguish between the true and the false.—Gal. 1:7, 8.

CRIME AND IMMORALITY

(A Recent Editorial in The Christian Index.)

THERE is a widespread concern among the people in the United States about this orgy of crime into which we have been plunged since the war. There is an apparent disposition on the part of thinking people everywhere to look the situation squarely in the face. Nobody argues the increase of crime any more. There is general agreement that we are in a terrible mess in this rich, young nation and that something has to be done or we will be undone.

Preachers are leaving off their essays and are coming back to warn against sin and to point sinners to the cross. Teachers, many of them, are putting aside their high-faluting stuff about behavioristic psychology and they are bringing their pupils to recognize the inescapable fact of right and wrong and the punishment which is swift and certain for all who disobey the laws of God. Business men are waking up to the fact that locks and bars and bonds are of little avail and that the one and only way to have good business is to have good men. Manufacturers have discovered that they cannot do very much with protective insurance when there are bad men on the inside of their factories and on the inside of their organization. Fathers and mothers are tossing on their beds in the midnight hours, conscious of the fact that their boys and girls, the very idols of their hearts, are slipping into fearful quicksands. Young mothers are pressing their little babes close to their hearts as they fear for the wavering moral stamina of their companions. It is a serious time, a very serious time. But we come back to say that the one comforting aspect of the situation is the fact that our people are willing to look the facts in the face, which would seem to give promise of their willingness to apply the remedy. Thank God, we have the remedy, and it is adequate. Of the remedy we shall speak a little later.

The Sources of Crime.

We wish to inquire for a little while into the sources of this terrible wave of crime which is sweeping over our nation. We need not entertain any sort of hope of curing the presentation by temporizing with detached instances of crime. We have got to get back to the breeding places for criminals, and these nests of iniquity must be destroyed. To be sure, the whole thing is the work of the devil and may be called sin in its varying forms and conditions; but to deal with this work of the devil we must study his tactics.

Undoubtedly, one of the chief sources for our present growth in crime is the manufacture, distribution and consumption of whiskey. In his notable address at Toledo recently, Mr. McAdoo calls attention to the fact that the evil forces of this nation are lined up in one determined drive to overthrow the majesty of all law by defeating, as nearly as they can, the prohibition law. He is close to the truth, in our opinion. We quote a paragraph from Mr. McAdoo's address:

> Perhaps the crime wave itself is due to the same causes which lead to the present fanatical opposition to prohibition and the present widespread violation of the prohibition laws. Regulated, unregulated, or absolutely prohibited, the liquor traffic is the very heart and center of the spider's web of corruption, dishonesty and dereliction of public duties, which has for so long undermined the effectiveness of popular institutions throughout a large part of the nation.

The bootleg business is very profitable, therefore, it attracts many people into its snares and demands of every subject the full measure of his skill to overthrow orderly processes of government. There are hundreds of fathers and hundreds of young men lying awake every night studying how they can beat the prohibition forces. They get on edge and become insane in their desire to make the money which a successful bootleg business guarantees. They make up their minds to kill their fellowmen. They make up their minds to steal the affections of young boys away from their parents, away from their churches, away from God. They make up their minds to manufacture the stuff and peddle the stuff for the sake of money. They become criminals because crime is profitable.

Politicians recognize the power of abetting these criminals in this devilish business of bootlegging, and they go to work to bribe officers, to buy up newspapers, to buy up the theatres with their vast ability to react upon public opinion, to put men in legislative and executive and judicial office who will pander to the overthrow of the eighteenth amendment—all this is the present shrewd policy of politicians in this country. And every time the sun sets we have hatched out a new crop of criminals who have been entrapped by these multiform channels of bootlegging. Maybe it is an uneducated young country lad who has been employed to drive these bootleg cars which terrorize the countryside as they speed from the stills into the cities every night. Maybe it is some county or city policeman who has withstood the temptation to accept a bribe. Maybe it is the merchant whose business has been poor and who is offered a certain income if he will allow bootleg whiskey sold in his back storeroom. Maybe it is the attorney, the councilman, the mayor, the governor, the public servant of the people, who is facing another election and is offered the sufficient number of votes by some boss if he will turn his head and keep his mouth shut. The bootleg business is breeding criminals every day.

And we pause here to say that the bootleg business can be stopped in one short year in this country if we want to stop it. Atlanta is honey-combed with blind tigers and everybody knows it. Why? Because Atlanta's police force has been given to understand that this community is willing to pay the salaries of a bunch of grown men to stroll around town a few hours every day, worrying the life out of the honest men and women who have automobiles and have to park them on the streets, rather than running down criminals. This entire page can be filled with actual instances of the violation of the prohibition law by Atlanta policemen. Two illustrations will serve to indicate what we are up against:

On Christmas morning a policeman was drunk in a certain garage in Atlanta, and had been in this garage drunk all night, or at least during his entire watch from midnight to eight o'clock. A negro drove into that garage for some gas, and that drunken wretch with a police uniform on his body and the insignia of the City of Atlanta on his cap, shot that negro through the leg trying to make him dance. He was finally suspended from the force for having been found asleep on his beat, and not until January 25, did the culprit face this charge of violating the prohibition law. One more illustration. Last year, 1926, a bootlegger was arrested in a certain garage in Atlanta with thirty gallons of corn liquor in a car. Two Atlanta policemen took this car into custody, stole twenty gallons of the liquor, were indicted. The case was nol prossed in the Fulton courts. These men are on the police force today!

Now here is the difficulty in doing anything about stopping crime. The moment you start in to enforce the prohibition law, you have got to find somebody with enough courage to fire about three-fourths of all the enforcement officers in the country. They are themselves arch criminals and are not going to turn their hands to enforce the law when they know full well that they will be undoing their own business. Look at the Ft. Lauderdale raid recently which turned the sheriff up as the leading violator of the prohibition law! And don't say that there are not enough honest men left in the world to fill the uniforms of our police forces, both county and city. We have a few here in Atlanta, and we know a few in other cities, but the individual policeman can not break up bootlegging unless he has the assured support of the other policemen and of the courts. If we had a police force, backed by a police commission, in every city in Georgia who were set to break up bootlegging, it would go out of business in Georgia or we would have the worst war that has ever been fought on the face of the earth.

The Public Dance Hall.

Another breeding place for crime is the public dance hall. The Fulton grand jury had a young white boy, about eighteen years old, up for several serious charges recently and after his apparent confession to all the charges and many things not charged, he was asked to tell the jury how he got started on the downward path. He said that he came here from Tennessee, a country boy right fresh from the farm, and after spending several lonely evenings here he was taken by another young man in the same boarding house to a public dance hall on Peachtree Street near the First Baptist Church. There he met a gang of half-drunken girls and boys and there, he declared, he lost his grip and started on the slippery plunge into the abyss of crime from which he must now struggle through twenty years of penitentiary service. And we have such dance halls scattered all over this city. Macon has them. Savannah has them. Columbus and Augusta and Albany and Athens have them. "Bad women and whiskey and public dance halls," declared this poor victim last week, "were my undoing." Every one of these dance halls could be put out of business in one week if we had an aroused public opinion which would require the city governments to install real men as policemen. They are selling whiskey, running gambling dens, engaging in white slavery and other crimes, any one of which is sufficient ground on which to close them up, or so regulate them as to make them unprofitable.

Pool Rooms.

Another breeding place of crime is the public pool room. A gang of young white men were apprehended in automobile thefts recently in Atlanta. When the leader of the gang was brought before the grand jury he frankly declared that a certain public pool room in Atlanta was the headquarters of their gang. He named the Subway Pool Room, near Five Points. They met there to confer about robberies, to buy whiskey, to meet criminals from other cities, and to generally promote their nefarious business. Every member of this particular gang was under twenty-one years of age. This pool room was violating the state law by admitting these minors, and should have been closed on this account. A study of the public pool rooms in Atlanta reveals this fact: ninety per cent of all the patrons are minors. The other patrons are hardened criminals who make such places their headquarters for selling whiskey, gambling, peddling narcotics, and advertising places of vice. If Atlanta or Macon or any other city of any size wants to get at this terrible business of breeding crime, let them regulate their public pool rooms. And the day the public pool room is regulated it will go out of business because it is only profitable as it is operated in violation of the law.

The Theatre.

One of the most insidious breeding places for crime is the average picture show. Ninety per cent of our crime today is committed by young men and young women between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five, and these are the ages within which the picture show patronage is chiefly found. The power of suggestion is the subtle thing which works on the mind of the restless youth who sits and drinks in the lurid presentation of a train wreck, the theft of a car, the robbery of a bank, the abduction of a girl, and on and on. And the average theatrical performance today is a stupid effort to burlesque every law-abiding citizen in the community and poke fun at the traditions of our country. There are very wholesome exceptions to such pictures and to such plays. For example, the recent picture by Harold Lloyd, called "The Kid Brother", is one of the most delightful hours of entertainment we have ever seen. It is funny, without one touch of filth. And we can have other such pictures if the producers could ever get it into their heads that the public would support such pictures. The Howard showed this Lloyd picture and the place was overrun, which goes to show that clean entertainment can be made profitable. The great trouble with the motion picture business is the fact that a few men control the whole industry. They are men without education and without the essential background for the tremendous leadership which has been thrust into their hands.

RURAL WORK IN THE CHURCH

By the Reverend H. W. Foreman

SUMMER SCHOLARSHIPS FOR RURAL STUDENTS.

THE rural work of the Church depends as much upon the devotion, leadership and training of the country ministry as upon any factor in the whole rural problem. Realizing this fact, the Division for Rural Work of the Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council has this last summer selected and placed under the tutelage of certain of the rural clergy of the Church seven seminary students. The students chosen have all expressed the intention of spending many years, if not their whole ministry, in village and country work. As for the clergy under whom the students have been placed, they are all prominent and successful leaders in country Church work.

The plan has been approved not only by deans of seminaries and bishops and leaders of the Church, but by experience as well. The interest, training and probable clinching of the various students in their hope of making the rural ministry their life work have more than proved the practical value of the idea.

The cost of sending each student amounted to approximately $500, the total sum covering a salary of $10 per week for twelve to fifteen weeks, and board, room, transportation to and from the field, and the purchase or rental of a car and maintenance of the same. The whole experiment cost some $3,500.

The experiment was made possible very largely by the Woman's Auxiliary. Inspired by the study book for the year, "Beyond City Limits", by the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, and the companion volume by Miss Laura F. Boyer, the Auxiliary gave, or made possible. the scholarships needed. Some were given by diocesan branches, some by parish branches; others were contributed by informal groups of Auxiliary members, and one was given anonymously as a result of the moving appeal of an Auxiliary member.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Pennsylvania was the first to respond to the call, gave two full scholarships, and so made it possible for Mr. Worth Wicker of the Philadelphia Divinity School to spend the summer with the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, and Mr. J. R. Kuhns of Seabury Divinity School with Rev. E. S. Ford in the Western Counties Mission, Diocese of Newark.

The Rev. Lyman Bleecker, lately ordained to the diaconate, was enabled to spend three months with the Rev. C. R. Allison in County Mission Work in Western New York, as a result of the generosity of members of the Auxiliary of New York. The Auxiliary of Christ Church, Bronxville, New York, sent Mr. W. G. Christian of the Virginia Seminary to the Rev. George B. Gilbert of Middletown, Connecticut.

The Auxiliary of the Diocese of Maryland provided funds for a scholarship for Mr. Albert C. Morris, of the Virginia Seminary and sent him to the Rev. Bertram Brown of Tarboro, North Carolina.

Several parish branches of the Diocese of Chicago joined in sending Mr. Elmer Lofstrom of Nashotah for three months' training under the Rev. David Clark of South Dakota, and Mr. Charles Hawtrey, of the same Seminary, was sent to the Rev. H. R. Hole of Michigan, as a result of a scholarship given by one who did not wish his name known.

Both clergymen and students involved report most favorably upon their summer together. The project has more than proved its value and the Department of Social Service hopes to find some means of continuing another year.

RURAL SCHOOLS AND CONFERENCES.

Few things are contributing more to the ever-increasing interest in the Church's work in village and country than the Summer Schools and Conferences for rural clergy.

The Rural Schools proper usually are conducted by the Agricultural Colleges or State Universities, or Universities of national character, and cover such subjects as Agricultural Economics, Rural Sociology and Community Life Problems.

The Clergy Conferences which are held at the same time and place as the Rural Schools are led by bishops, clergymen and laymen prominent in the village and country life of the Church, and in cooperation with the Division for Rural Work of the National Council. Prominent among the speakers present at the various schools and conferences this past season were the Rt. Rev. T. C. Darst, D. D., the Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., the Rt. Rev. George Davenport, D. D., the Rt. Rev. George W. Wise, D. D., the Rt. Rev. E. H. Coley, D. D., the Rt. Rev. E. C. Seaman, D. D., the Rev. Bertram Brown, the Rev. G. W. Gilbert, the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, the Rev. F. H. Gavin, D. D., the Rev. E. S. Ford and Mr. C. J. Galpin of the United States Department of Agriculture.

There were six of these Rural Schools and Conferences held during the summer of 1927: first, at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee, sponsored by Bishop Maxon; the second, at Kansas State University, Manhattan, Kansas, under the leadership of the Ven. L. W. Smith; the third, at Maryland State University, College Park, Maryland, under the leadership of the Rev. C. W. Whittemore; the fourth at the University of Wisconsin, conducted by the Secretary for Rural Work of the National Council; the fifth, at Cornell University, conducted by the Rev. C. R. Allison, Chairman of the Committee on Rural Work of the Second Province; and the sixth, at Washington College, Chestertown, Maryland, under the leadership of Bishop Davenport.

Approximately one hundred and sixty of our clergy attended the various Schools and Conferences with practically every section of the country represented. Some twenty-five states were represented at Madison alone.

Women's Conference at Madison.

For the first time in the history of the Church a conference strictly for women rural workers was held in connection with the rural school and conference at Madison. Some fourteen women from as many different sections of the country gathered to discuss problems connected with Church rural work, especially as it pertained to women and young people. The group was under the leadership of the Rev. F. D. Goodwin and discussions were led by such competent workers as Miss Mary Rowland of the Diocese of Newark, Miss Agnes Penrose of the Church Mission of Help, and Mrs. E. T. Boyd, volunteer rural worker for the Diocese of Colorado. Addresses covering their work were given by practically every woman present and plans were made for developing the conference another year.

THE RURAL FELLOWSHIP.

That the Rural Fellowship is slowly but surely winning a place for itself in the life of the Church was evidenced at the annual meeting, held at Madison on the fifth of June. At that time the Rev. Val. H. Sessions read his report as secretary and quoted letters and figures to prove the steady growth of the Fellowship. Plans were made for increased circulation of "The Rural Messenger" and for the improvement of its form and content.

The following officers were elected for the year 1927-28: honorary president, the Rt. Rev. T. C. Darst, D. D.; president, the Ven. E. W. Couper; vice-presidents, the Rev. B. E. Brown and Miss Mildred C. Edmunds; secretary and treasurer, the Rev. Val. H. Sessions. In accepting election as honorary president, Bishop Darst said: "While I cannot assume any office which will involve more work than I already have, I shall be only too glad to prove my interest in the rural work of the Church by accepting the office you have so kindly given me. You may be assured of my prayers and such good offices as my limited time will permit. I am sure the Commission on Evangelism would be glad to use the columns of 'The Rural Messenger' in promoting the follow-up of the Bishops' Crusade."

The two "high days" of the conference at Madison were those which were blessed by Bishop Darst's presence, and the members of the Fellowship count it a privilege to have him at the head of their organization.

Bishops, priests, laymen and organizations helped to make the rural schools and conferences successful. Probably no one man in the Church today has done more for rural work, however, than the Rev. F. D. Goodwin. As first Secretary for Rural Work of the National Council, author of the study book, "Beyond City Limits", and leader of both clergy and women's conferences at Madison, he has been a vital factor in arousing and inspiring the Church to greater work in village and country.

The large attendance at the summer schools was made possible in no small degree by parish and Woman's Auxiliary study classes. Scholarships of from $30 to $50 were placed at the disposal of national and diocesan officers and as a result many clergymen and women workers were able to attend who without such help would not have been present.

CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM---A CONTRADICTION IN TERMS

By Mrs. B. L. Robinson

I WISH to confess at the outset that I have regretted more than once having chosen Christian Socialism as my subject for today. Knowing something of Socialism, I was convinced that Christian Socialism was a contradiction in terms, but I had not fully realized how much that was revolting was hidden behind the name. In studying the matter I have felt as I did when, as a child, I turned over a beautiful, clean white stone, and found it alive on the under side with crawling slimy things. But now is not the time to close our eyes to the dangers which menace our country and our civilization, because they are unpleasant; and I only beg of you to remember that the disagreeable things which I shall tell you today are not of my making—only of my finding.

Having lived in a university atmosphere two-thirds of my life, I have long known how widespread radicalism is in our schools and colleges. Just how widely it has spread in the churches I had not realized. Friends of mine in different towns have told me that they had stopped going to Church, as they could not accept socialism instead of Christianity from the pulpit. One said, "I have to pray hard when I get home to offset the effect the sermon has on me". And another said, "It is a misery for me to go to Church. Our minister is so socialistic that I am in constant terror for fear my husband will get up and refute his statements". But these might have been sporadic cases of socialism in the pulpit. Unfortunately they are not.

When Captain W. B. Estes, imprisoned in Russia for a year by the Bolsheviki under unspeakable conditions, was released, a Commissioner said to him: "When you get back to America you will find that we have put our propaganda in your schools, your colleges, your women's organizations, your Churches, and your clubs", and he added the significant statement, "Where we cannot convince we will confuse". The work of the Communists in confusing the minds of Americans has been fully as successful as their propaganda, which has assumed appalling proportions, their membership in the United States being today practically as large as in Russia.

A brilliant series of articles on Socialism in the Churches, to which every student of the question is greatly indebted, has appeared in the National Civic Federation Review. In one of these articles (May 10, 1920) the reason why this "campaign for confusion" has been so successful is analyzed as follows: "Directed by minds of peculiar subtlety and cunning, by leaders whose intellects are more Oriental than Anglo-Saxon, masters of craft, resourcefulness and hypocrisy, the Socialist party has for years sought to influence different classes of people and meet varying conditions. To the general public it has sought through camouflage and beguiling phraseology to conceal its real character, and appear pacific and humanitarian. It has, for instance, specialized in propaganda specifically designed to influence Church people, and has not hesitated to employ New Testament phraseology, the terms of Christian justice and brotherhood of man. Repudiating violence, disclaiming any unlawful and unjust methods or purposes among one class of people, it has, on the other hand—for instance, in its Yiddish propaganda for distribution among Russian Jews—sought to inflame by outright incitements to revenge, violence and bloody revolution. Another phase of its propaganda, carried on mainly through the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, has been adapted to meet another condition and to appeal to educators, college professors, and all students. To create confusion in the public mind has been one of its chief purposes. Its entire propaganda, protean to a bewildering degree, yet masterful, able and amazingly effective, has been inevitably confusing to the Western mind, which is open and direct, and which finds it difficult to think in the terms, and to follow the casuistical, cunning and machiavellian workings, of the Asiatic intellect of a Trotzky or a Hillquit". This view is confirmed by the Communist periodical called the "Workers Dreadnaught" (December 31, 1921, p. 6), which says, sardonically: "O Comrade Lenin, with your tortuous Eastern tactics, you are corrupting these simple Westerners, who do not understand you, and whose metal is softer than yours." The tragedy of the success of their propaganda in the Church is that those clergymen who expound it as "applied Christianity", who promote its propaganda in Gospel phraseology, are deceiving their followers into supporting a movement set upon the destruction not only of all that Christian civilization upholds, but of Christianity itself.

The number of people, both in and out of the Church whose minds are totally confused as to the relation between Socialism, Communism and Bolshevism is appalling. Such statements as these are constantly heard: "I suppose Bolshevism is pretty bad, but of course Socialism is all right"; or "Communism and Bolshevism, you know, have nothing in common"; or "There are so many kinds of Socialism that of course you can't say you are opposed to 'Socialism' ".

Such confusion of thought should not be allowed to pass by people who know better. It is as though one should say that the Baptist, Congregational and Presbyterian Churches have nothing in common. The plain, simple fact is that Socialism, Communism and Bolshevism are all based on the same thing—that is, the philosophy of Karl Marx. Among themselves the radicals make no attempt to deny the identity. For instance, the majority report on International Relations of the Socialist Party in this country made at the New York Convention of 1920 said: "Socialism is in complete control in the great country of Russia." Morris Hillquit, leader of the Socialist Party, said that between the Socialist Party and the revolutionary left wings there was no difference on vital questions or principles, but merely minor differences as to tactics. The New York Call of May 14, 1917, said editorially: "Lenin is, after all, nothing but an ordinary Socialist, with the ordinary Socialist program of social revolution everywhere throughout Europe as his object."

Lincoln Steffens, one of the leading Socialist propagandists in this country, in his introduction to a book by Trotzky, speaks of him as an "orthodox Marxian Socialist", and the same Steffens in speaking to a convention of Christian Socialists at the Rev. Percy Grant's Church in New York, said: "The idea of the Bolshevik is, we will not only think Socialism, talk Socialism, but we will do Socialism." Bolshevism to him was merely Socialism in action—and he was applauded by these Christian Socialists. Those who have been confused on this subject should brush the cobwebs from their brains and face the fact that Bolshevism is only Socialism in action, that it is the Communist Party which is in control of Russia and which is trying to force Bolshevism upon the world—in other words, that Socialism, Communism and Bolshevism are one.

Some of you are probably thinking, "But these good people who call themselves Christian Socialists must certainly have a wholly different conception of what socialism really is", some of them have, no doubt, but many of their leaders seem quite ready to accept the Socialism of the Socialists. For instance:

The Joint Commission on Social Service of the Protestant Episcopal Church in a report to the General Convention of the Church at Detroit in 1919, said: "The modern reader is no longer interested in Marx's dialectics, but is compelled to recognize that the central position for which he stood is not only tenable, but is really impregnable."

Remember that Karl Marx was an avowed atheist and that his system is anti-religious. Marx's philosophy interprets all human life, all history, all heroic and noble deeds as having been inspired by nothing more than the two most carnal urges of mankind—the urge of hunger and of sex. The Socialists know, if the Christians do not, that this philosophy is absolutely incompatible with religion. In the account of the State of Michigan Socialist Convention at Grand Rapids of February 24, 1919, John R. Ball reports in their periodical, the "Communist" of Chicago: "A Socialist who understands the materialistic conception of history cannot have faith in superstition of any kind. In other words, a religious or Christian Socialist is a contradiction of terms.

Bukharin, one of the leading authorities on the Red Philosophy, says in "The A B C of Communism": "There are some soft-headed Communists who say that their religion does not prevent them from being Communists. They say that they 'believe both in God and in Communism'. Such a view is fundamentally wrong; religion and Communism do not go together either in theory or on practice. Between the precepts of Communism and those of Christianity there is an impassible barrier."

One of the rallying cries of the Soviet army is: "We have abolished God." Lenin in the Communist International" recently urged on Communists everywhere the duty of making "militant atheism" an essential part of their doctrine.

There has been a strong movement in several of the Churches to apply themselves with radical labor. A similar movement was started recently in Australia, but there its leaders (the Congregational Union Committee) took the precaution to make a preliminary investigation as to whether there was anything to prevent an understanding between Church workers and labor representatives for cooperative service in the cause of the common welfare. This committee found that in the opinion of the labor leaders, the best country is a godless country. These leaders believe that if Bolshevism can be achieved there will be no need of religion, and they made the magnanimous offer that "if religion will pass out quietly without any fuss" their attitude will be that of "benevolent tolerance", but if it resists they will "hasten religious exit with violence proportionate to its resistance".

The men who made this statement are said to be the official leaders of the labor movement. (See editorial "Bolshevism in Australia" in Boston Herald, January 27, 1923.) Evidently the Congregational Union Committee has taken a sober second thought in regard to allying the Churches with this element. The Christian Socialists of England and America are not to be deterred by such considerations, as we shall see.

How widespread their movement has been in this country is shown by a report written by the Rev. A. L. Byron-Curtiss, National Secretary of the Church Socialist League, made up of members of the Episcopal Church.

The Christian Socialists are fond of stating that Christ Himself was a Socialist, and that the early Christians were communists. Mr. Nathan Haskell Dole writing in the New York Times of January 1, 1923, says: "Was not Jesus Himself a Socialist? Were not the primitive Christians communists?" Then he quotes from the Fourth Chapter of Acts: "They had all things in common. Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of lands and houses sold them and brought the prices of the things that were sold and laid them down at the apostles' feet and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." He adds: "There is Bolshevism for you!"

This is one of the two references in the New Testament to anything which could by the widest stretch of the imagination be termed communism. The occasion referred to was one of tremendous enthusiasm and excitement among the apostles over the great numbers converted to the new religion. Peter had been preaching to the multitude, who were filled with the Holy Ghost. The other reference is in the second chapter of Acts. "And all that believed were together and had all things in common, and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need; and they continuing daily with one accord in the temple and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2:44-47.)

This was a very temporary condition and there is no suggestion that it was expected or intended to be anything else. And is this Bolshevism or Communism? If this is what the Christian Socialists want, what is to hinder them from pooling their goods and distributing them promiscuously? Nothing whatever. What they want, however, is something remarkably different. Would the Russian refugees in Constantinople who are freezing and starving, whose homes have been destroyed, their property stolen, their families murdered, who have even no country left, agree with Mr. Dole that the friendly and wholly voluntary sharing of goods pictured in the gospels is Bolshevism? Are giving and confiscation the same thing in Mr. Dole's eyes?

Was Christ a Socialist? He told the rich young man who was seeking salvation to sell all that he had and give to the poor. But if this program is Christian Socialism, why do those who call themselves Christian Socialists continue to enjoy their own incomes? On another occasion Christ said, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things which are God's". But the radicals whom the Christian Socialists follow declare there is no God and that religion must be destroyed. The thing, however, which more than any other shows the great gulf fixed between the teachings of Christ and Socialism is this. Nothing stands out more strikingly in the history of Christ than His vivid sense of the Fatherhood of God and His deep longing to make His disciples share His trust and dependence upon His and their Heavenly Father, who could be turned to for help and guidance and support, and to whom they should return. God the Father—how does this great conception fit in with the philosophy of Socialism, which not only denies the existence of God, but degrades Fatherhood to a status below that of the brutes? In the social conditions encouraged in Russia today, no man knows who are his children, and women do not know who are the fathers of their children. The father has no responsibility for wife or children, who are the property of the Communist State. The Fatherhood of God! What does this mean interpreted in terms of Socialism in practice?

It is difficult to respect either the brain or the character of those who attempt to justify their radical views through the claim that Christ was a Socialist. Fatherhood can mean little outside the institution of the family, and the attitude of Socialism toward the family is well known. A Socialist Third Reader used in Socialist Sunday Schools in this country contains the following precepts: 1. "The Family is one of the principal obstacles to the enlightenment of men." 2. "Marriage is prostitution sanctified by the Church and protected by the State." (See "Bolshevism—Its Cure", by M. M. Avery and D. Goldstein, p. 278.)

According to Lieutenant Klieforth who spent three years in Russia (1916-1919), "One of the tenets of Bolshevism calls for the destruction of all records concerning births, marriages and deaths. So that when five hundred children are taken from Moscow out into the country communal schools, the records of the children are destroyed and they are known only by numbers. Nobody can tell where the children have been taken". They have been nationalized. (See Nat. Civic Fed. Review, January 1, 1920, p. 3.) What is the significance of Fatherhood in a regime like this?

There is a growing belief which finds frequent expression that it is because clergymen are losing faith in the power of religion that so many of them are turning to the rank materialism and atheism of the I. W. W. and Bolshevism. At a time when the crying need of the world is for moral and spiritual ideals, it is no less than appalling to see men who are supported by funds given to the cause of religion allying themselves with a movement which openly aims to destroy both religion and the family, and which in so doing, must destroy civilization itself.

MEETING OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

One of the best meetings of the National Council since its inauguration in 1920 was held in New York City October 12 and 13, 1927. Every member was present except two, one of whom was on a commission to the Far East on the appointment of the Presiding Bishop, and the other was abroad, making twenty-three members present, representing every Province in the Church.

The Presiding Bishop, in opening the meeting, spoke of the great loss resulting to the Church at large, as well as to the National Council, especially in relation to its missionary work, by the death of Bishop Brown of Virginia. The Department of Missions, so long and ably served by Bishop Brown, both as a member and before his election to the Episcopate as a missionary in Brazil, presented the following memorial, which was received by the members of the Council standing, after which they were led in prayer by the Presiding Bishop:

"At this its first meeting after the unexpected death of the Right Rev. William Cabell Brown, Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, the Department of Missions desires to emphasize the thanksgiving and high praise which we render to Almighty God for the fidelity and courage and wisdom shown in the service which His servant rendered not only to the Department of Missions and the National Council, but also to the whole Church.

"Bishop Brown's career throughout, in a singular fashion, exemplified the power which is bestowed by the Spirit of God upon the man who gives himself without reserve to the service of his fellow men.

"The Church in Brazil will always have occasion to rejoice in the service Bishop Brown rendered not only towards insuring a consecrated ministry for that Church, but also in establishing the principle that the ministry must be constituted of well-learned men.

"Since he was ordered back to this country, Bishop Brown's career has been marked by a large-minded understanding and courage. In the Department of Missions he never lost sight of the fundamental purpose for which our Lord created and sent His Body.

"While the Department of Missions here records its profound sense of loss in the promotion of this His servant to a higher calling, it would record before all else its thanksgiving to the Head of the Church for the example and inspiration which have come to us through our association with our friend and brother."

World Peace Sunday.

The Department of Christian Social Service presented the following resolution adopted by the Department for the consideration of the Council, and the same was approved by the Council:

"Whereas, The President of the United States has said: 'When, by common consent, Armistice Day was added to our calendar of memorial dates, it took its place as the one in whose celebration we will always be drawn closer to other peoples who stand for liberal institutions. Celebrated in many lands and by many peoples, it will remind them of their united efforts and common sacrifices in the bitterest crisis of civilization's history. It will always recall the fact that humanity has far more reason for unity than for discord. It will emphasize the common ideals and aspirations which must at last draw all men into fraternity and set their feet in the way of peace. It will give an impetus to the ever growing conviction that hatreds are needless and that rivalries ought to be only in good works aimed for the general advancement.

" 'It is desirable that Armistice Day observances should impress these considerations of common concern and essential accord. . . . . We shall make our greatest contribution to human welfare if we shall on this international anniversary of peace restored turn our thoughts and endeavors to the idea of peace perpetuated, assured, and established as a universal benison. We shall not fail in acknowledging our obligation to those whose noble service won the victory and established our complete independence. But along with this, we should have in mind the thought of peace gained for all the world and all time through cooperation of the same liberal forces that brought the victory.'

"Therefore be it, Resolved, That the National Council suggests to the Bishops and Clergy of the Church, that the Sunday immediately preceding this day, that is, Sunday, November 6, be remembered in all the churches as a day on which World Peace be made a subject for special intercession and consideration; and

"Further, That on this day, being the Sunday next after All Saints', in remembering those who have gone on into the Church Expectant, we remember all who in the late war, have given their lives for their country; and especially those who went forth from the parish church;

"Further, That the Presiding Bishop be asked to put forth prayers fitted for these purposes."

The Department of Christian Social Service reported that it had been obliged to accept with great regret the resignation of Miss Eva D. Corey as an additional member of the Department, and announced that it had appointed Miss Margaret G. Wood of Florida, a member of the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, to succeed Miss Corey as an additional member of the Department.

Department Reports.

In the Field Department, the Presiding Bishop appointed the Rev. R. M. Trelease and re-appointed the Rev. J. I. B. Larned as General Secretaries of the Field Department, which appointments were unanimously confirmed by the Council. These appointments were effective September 1, 1927.

Miss Elizabeth Matthews felt obliged to resign as an Associate Secretary of the Field Department, and her resignation was regretfully accepted.

The Department of Religious Education reported that it had appointed Mrs. J. C. Tolman as an additional member of the Department, which was confirmed by the Council.

The Rev. Dr. Theodore R. Ludlow, the newly appointed Secretary of the Adult Division of the Department of Religious Education, and the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, the newly appointed Secretary for Student Work of the Department, were presented to the Council, and reported on plans for the development of the work under their charge.

The appointment of Mrs. Arthur Gammack, President of the Woman's Auxiliary branch of Western Massachusetts as a General United Thank Offering Field Worker, was unanimously approved by the Council.

The Secretary reported for the Personnel Bureau, which is under his direction. This Bureau was opened in April, 1920, as a result of resolutions of several General Conventions. He reported that the Bureau had registered one hundred and nine clergymen and one hundred and seventy-two lay workers. Since the organization of the Bureau one hundred and eleven clergy and one hundred and eighty-three workers had been placed in permanent positions. A very important part of the work of the Bureau is providing supplies for the parishes needing such service. This is particularly heavy in the summer time. One hundred and fifty-one churches were served during the present year, this supply ranging from one Sunday to several months. The Bureau was unable to take care of fifty-eight churches needing help owing to the lack of available clergy. These calls for assistance come from all the dioceses in the East and as far west as Indiana, and even as far as Bermuda. The Bureau has had requests for supply work from clergy from nineteen states, and also from Liberia, China, Cuba and Porto Rico.

The Secretary of the Council also has under his direction the Transportation Bureau, the same staff looking after the Personnel Bureau and the Transportation Bureau. The Transportation Bureau previously was handled as a separate enterprise and was located in Minneapolis, but was taken over by the National Council and has been operating since 1924 at a saving of over $4,500 to the Church over the previous expense. This Bureau acts as a viseing committee for the application of free transportation to the various railroads and is in existence largely because the railroads require that some authorized agent of the Church act in this capacity to assure them that the transportation which they are quite willing to issue in the interest of missionary work is properly placed.

The Presiding Bishop appointed Mr Samuel F. Houston of Philadelphia on the Committee on Ecclesiastical Relations.

The Council had present a group of distinguished visitors: The Most Rev. Severius A. Barsaum, representing Mar Ignatius, the Patriarch of the Syrian-Orthodox Church, sometimes inaptly called the Jacobite Church. Also the Lord Bishop of Aberdeen and Provost Erskine Hill, who addressed the Council. The Lord Bishop of Aberdeen is in this country in the interest of a memorial in Aberdeen to Bishop Seabury.

Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions, was absent, as he was sailing from Victoria on the "Empress of Asia" for China to confer with the Bishops there on the situation confronting the Church at this time. Accompanying Dr. Wood is the Bishop of San Joaquin, who was appointed by the Presiding Bishop in place of Bishop Tucker of Virginia, whose duties to his diocese because of the death of Bishop Brown made it impossible for him to comply with the request of the Council to accompany Dr. Wood as a member of this commission. Dr. Davis, Secretary of the Domestic Division, and the Rev. Mr. Parson, Assistant Foreign Secretary, will take charge of missionary affairs in the absence of Dr. Wood.

Bishop Creighton, of Mexico, and the Rev. Dr. S. Harrington Littell from Hankow, China, also addressed the Council. During the absence of Dr. Wood Dr. Littell will give such assistance to the Department of Missions as he finds possible.

Field Department.

The Field Department asked the Council to consider the fact that the men needed for the Field Department staff are matured, seasoned men—men who have reached the prime of life and of parish experience. Such men usually have also reached the peak of family responsibilities. As a rule they are rectors of parishes where they are receiving larger salaries than the National Council has felt it could offer.

When a man is asked to join the Field Department staff, he is asked to join it for a term of service—three or four years—and not for life. It involves a sacrifice, financial and otherwise, for him. But the Council asks him to do it, for a limited time, and the Council should at least make it possible for him to meet actual living expenses during that term of service.

Heretofore the Council has offered a man $5,000 a year, a flat salary without regard to the size of the man's family and whether he could live on the salary offered.

The Field Department's proposal was that, since the Council manifestly was not trying to pay a man "what he is worth", it should be sure it is paying him a living wage. Also that the Council should follow the prevailing custom in the Church and furnish the man the equivalent of a rectory in which to live. A sliding scale for these salaries was therefore recommended and adopted. The scale is as follows:

For a single man, basic salary, $3,600.

For a married man or "head of family", as defined in the United States Income Tax Regulations: basic salary, $3,600; and actual house rent not to exceed $1,400; and

For each dependent child under twenty-one years old, an allowance of $400.

And of course pension premium as in the past.

It will be seen that the norm set by the Government as to allowance on tax exemption for the average American family has been in good part followed. And the plan also conforms to the Church's prevailing custom of supplying a man with a house. Thus the salaries of Field Department Secretaries will be unequal in dollars, according to the size of their families; but equal, and it is hoped, adequate, from the standpoint of the actual living expenses of each family unit.

The plan is an experiment, but the Council feels that it is sound in principle. It is to be tried in—one might say, on—the Field Department for a year; and if the experiment works out well in experience, the Council will take under consideration extending the application of it to all Departments.

Finance Department.

The Treasurer made a gratifying report on the work of meeting the deficit. It showed that this deficit amounted to $1,534,303.99 on December 31, 1925, and that out of $1,406,650 which the dioceses undertook to raise $1,284,978.84 has already been paid

Due to these payments and to more regular remittances of missionary funds no borrowings from the banks were necessary this summer. As of October 1, the only money owed by the Missionary Society was $404,454.58 borrowed from its own Reserve Deposit Accounts which were created for this very purpose.

The Department of Finance made a careful analysis of all salaries paid to the staff at the Church Missions House and recommended a number of moderate advances to take effect January 1. These recommendations were adopted by the Council.

Church Intelligence

The Ninth Annual Synod of the Province of Sewanee.

The Diocese of Atlanta is looking forward with interest to the meeting of the Ninth Annual Synod of the Province of Sewanee, which will be held in Trinity Church, Columbus, Ga., on October 25, 26 and 27.

At the opening service of the Synod on the night of the twenty-fifth, the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., will give the address of welcome and the response will be made by the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, D. D., the Bishop of Lexington and President of the Synod.

Christian Social Service will be the subject for this opening meeting and the introduction of the speaker will be by the Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina, and Chairman of the Provincial Department of Christian Social Service. The Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee, will make the address.

On Wednesday at 9:30 A. M. the Synod will be organized. There will be reports from the officers of the Synod, except the President, and reports from the Provincial Council, and from the various departments. At night there will be a special meeting in the interest of Religious Education at which the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop of Atlanta and Chairman of Provincial Department of Religious Education of the National Council, will introduce the Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., Executive Secretary, Department of Religious Education of the National Council.

Thursday will be given largely to the general business of the Synod and reports from various departments, institutions and organizations. At night, there will be a meeting in the interest of Missions and Church Extension, at which the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop of Upper South Carolina, and Chairman of the Provincial Department of Missions and Church Extension, will introduce the speaker of the evening, the Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C.

The Rev. S. Alston Wragg is the rector of Trinity Church and the congregation has arranged many social features for the Synod.

To Consecrate The Second Chinese Bishop.

A second Chinese Bishop is to be consecrated on All Saints' Day, as Assistant Bishop of Fukien. He is Archdeacon Ding Ing Ong of Foochow. The preliminary step toward this action was taken last spring when he was elected by the Synod of the Diocese of Fukien. Twenty-four hours later he had to flee for his life. The election had to be confirmed by the Synod of the Chinese Church or, if the Synod did not meet within six months, by the standing committee of the dioceses, and also by the Archbishop of Canterbury as Fukien is an "English" diocese. The English Bishop is the Rt. Rev. John Hind, D. D. Bishop Roots, who is president of the Synod of the Chinese Church (Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui), now cables that the consecration is to take place on November 1, in Shanghai, and adds: "Remember us in your prayers."

The Bishop-elect said recently to one of the English missionaries: "I continually pray that God will keep you foreign missionaries from being discouraged. This phase will pass, and then I am quite sure you will again have plenty to do."

The Missionary Atlas of 1922 gives 13,600 as the number of "Chinese Church members" in the diocese. Fukien is a Province along the coast, north of Canton.

In the neighboring diocese of Chekiang the Assistant Bishop, Dr. Sing, is Chinese. He was consecrated in 1918. He delivered the exhortation at Bishop Gilman's consecration.

Semi-Centennial of The Joint Diocesan Lesson Board.

More than fifty Dioceses of the Church will be represented at the Semi-Centennial Anniversary of the Joint Diocesan Lesson Board, which is to be commemorated in Philadelphia, Friday, October 28.

Holy Apostles, of which the Rev. George H. Toop is rector, is to be the host parish, and the anniversary celebration will begin with a dinner to be given in the Parish House, to be followed by a great public meeting at eight o'clock in the commodious Church School Assembly Hall of Holy Apostles. The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop of the Church, is to be a speaker at the public meeting. The Rev. Canon Charles S. Lewis, of the Diocese of New Jersey, and a member of the Executive Committee of the Lesson Board, is to deliver an historical address and the Rev. John W. Suter, head of the National Department of Religious Education, also will make an address at the public meeting.

Dr. Toop will deliver a welcome on behalf of Holy Apostles' Parish and Bishop Garland will extend a welcome on behalf of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. At the dinner the speakers will include the Rev. Charles H. Ricker, Chairman of Religious Education in the Diocese of Long Island; the Rev. Charles B. Ackley, Chairman of Religious Education of the Dioceses of New York and the Rev. L. N. Caley, representing the Department of Religious Education in the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

The Joint Diocesan Lesson Board, comprising experienced Church School leaders from more than sixty dioceses appointed by the Bishops, is the outgrowth of the coming together in 1877 of representatives of the three Dioceses of Long Island, New York and Pennsylvania as a result of a realization of the necessity for prepared schedules of Sunday School Lessons. The Board now provides schedules upon which the American Church Series of Sunday School Lessons are based.

Conference of Colored Church Workers.

The Washington Provincial Conference of Church Workers among the Colored People had the opening of its annual session in the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Baltimore, Tuesday evening, October 4. The musical part of the service was unusually impressive. Thirty or more Colored clergy were in the procession, led by the vested choir of St. James' Church. Fitting welcome addresses were delivered by Bishop Helfenstein and Canon Arrowsmith of the Cathedral. All the other sessions of the conference were held in St. James' Church, Park Avenue and Preston Street. The two days were spent wholly within the walls of the church; Holy Communion at seven each day, followed by breakfast in the lecture room; then Morning Prayer followed by the forenoon session. Recess for dinner at one o'clock. Reassembled at three. Recess again for supper at six P. M. Evening session, and adjournment. On Thursday, following breakfast, the conference was conveyed to the Maryland Home where the forenoon session was held, followed by lunch served by the Woman's Auxiliary of that institution. In the afternoon at St. James' Church the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held. Among the visitors who addressed the gathering were: Mrs. A. L. Suissat, President of the Maryland Branch, and Mrs. Fulton, Treasurer of the United Offering. The sessions were highly interesting, inspiring and filled with business endeavors. The one note which seems to ring throughout the conference was "Self-Support and Self-Respect".

The conference, by a voluntary financial gift, paid tribute to the fortieth anniversary of the marriage of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Bragg, of St. James' Church. A number of missionary gifts were made to deserving objects. The Rev. Dr. Edgar C. Young, of Philadelphia, was reelected President of the Conference, and Mrs. Sidonia Anderson, President of the Provincial branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. The next meeting will be held at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lynchburg, Va., the Rev. C. L. Somers, minister-in-charge.

National Council of the Girls' Friendly Society in America, Boston, November 2-6, 1927.

An unusually large attendance is expected at this fiftieth anniversary of the Society. All of the meetings except those on Sunday will be held at the Hotel Statler, where there will be ample accommodations to care for the many hundreds of delegates and visitors.

On Wednesday, November 2, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Massachusetts is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary, and the Girls' Friendly Society will join with it at the Communion Service in the morning and in the other services during the day.

The first session of National Council, G. F. S. A., will be on Wednesday evening, at the Hotel Statler. After greetings from G. F. S. visitors from England and Canada, and from the representatives of other organizations working with young people, an address on the theme of the conference, "Widening Horizons", will be followed by a Service of worship written especially for this occasion.

There will be many delightful social occasions during the meetings in Boston to which all members and friends of the G. F. S. A. are invited.

The Corporate Communion will be at eight o'clock on Sunday morning, the sixth, at Trinity Church, with Bishop Slattery as celebrant.

At eleven o'clock on Sunday morning a Service of Thanksgiving to commemorate the founding of the first branch of the G. F. S. A. in November, 1877, will be held at St. Anne's, Lowell.

Bishop Murray will preach at the closing service at four o'clock Sunday afternoon in Trinity Church.

A special program, containing pictures of the national officers, speakers, etc., will carry in addition to the program the Services of Worship to be used at the opening and festival services. Each branch of the G. F. S. A. is to receive one of these programs in advance of the meetings, with the request that special branch services be held at the time of the opening and closing sessions of the Council. In this way it is hoped that every member of the G. F. S. A., whether in Boston or Alaska, will feel more nearly one in spirit next November.

St. John's College, Greeley, Colorado.

St. John's College opened September 27 with a capacity school. During the summer extensive alterations and repairs were made. The five-year course adopted last year is now in full effect. This year is designated as Freshman, Sophomore, Middle, Junior and Senior. High-school graduates are admitted as Freshmen in this course and take the regular Freshmen classes at Colorado State College, plus three hours a week in Bible at St. John's.

A new feature in the curriculum is a Sunday evening course in Religious Education. This course runs throughout the year, the upper classes taking Religious Pedagogy and the lower classes making a thorough study of the Christian Nurture Series.

Since the building of the new chapel the juniors and seniors have charge of the ten-thirty service Sunday morning, each acting in turn as vicar, taking full charge of the service and preaching. Faculty and friends form the congregation. As a result St. John's men graduate with experience in conducting services and are developing a set of excellent preachers.

Dr. Wood Leaves For China.

Dr. John Wood, departing to join Bishop Sanford in California and proceed with him to China as the Commission to confer there about the immediate future of our mission work, said farewell to the Missions House staff and other friends who crowded the chapel at noon on October 7. He said the Commission, going with open minds, hopes to learn in conference with the bishops, missionaries and Chinese, what may be God's will in regard to the Chinese Church; also, to take cheer and encouragement to the workers, foreign and Chinese, who have been through and are still enduring such deeply trying experiences, and, on returning, to increase in the Church at home an intelligent understanding of the situation. He asked for prayers on behalf of the Commission. He paid a tribute to the Chinese people for the immense possibilities latent in them for a sound national life.

Bishop Winchester's Condition.

We have received the following encouraging news in regard to the condition of the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop of Arkansas, who was operated on recently in Rochester, Minn.

"Bishop Winchester's operation at the Mayo Brothers, Rochester, was successful and the Bishop has rallied remarkably well, with no complications; and is now convalescing."

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Sunday-School Institute Convention.

The thirty-first convention of the Sunday-School Institute of the diocese was held in Epiphany Church, October 12, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which time Bishop Freeman was the celebrant. The first conference which began at eleven o'clock had as a special speaker the Rt. Rev. Wm. A. Guerry, Bishop of South Carolina. His subject was "Liberty and Authority". A business meeting with reports from officers and special committees followed, when five members of the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese were elected to fill vacancies caused by expired terms.

After luncheon, two general conferences were held, the first being addressed by Miss Frances Rose Edwards of the General Department of Religious Education, New York, whose topic was, "Education for Christian Living". At the second conference, the topic, "The Practice of Our Principles" was discussed with Miss Edwards again as the leader.

Included in the regular Sunday-school exhibit were books useful in various fields of religious education. Director: Miss Clara W. Herbert, Assistant Librarian of the Washington Public Library and Superintendent of Font Rolls in the Diocese of Washington.

The evening service, which is usually of a missionary character, planned more especially for young people, was addressed by the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., Episcopal student pastor at Washington and Lee University and Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Virginia. Topic: "Christ and Our Young People."

A get-together meeting followed in the parish hall, when the young people were given an opportunity to meet Dr. Gibson. This meeting was under the direction of the Young People's Organization of the Diocese.

Gift To the College of Preachers.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., announced that a gift of $250,000 for a building for the College of Preachers and an annual income of $50,000 for its maintenance has been made by a layman who desires that his name be withheld. This announcement was made public at the close of a three-day conference of clergymen in connection with future plans and activities of the College of Preachers.

The new building will be located just north of the Cathedral itself and connected with the Cathedral Library, a unit of which has already been erected.

The College of Preachers is planned as an integral part of Cathedral life, whose particular purpose is to stimulate and advance the gift of preaching the Gospel and is not intended in any way to serve as a theological school or seminary, but rather as a graduate school for men who have already been ordained to the ministry. This institution will be the first of its kind on this Continent.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Nicolai, Bishop of Ochrida, in the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croates and Slovenes, was the preacher at both services in Bethlehem Chapel on Sunday, October 16. Bishop Nicolai is in America under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and came primarily to attend the sessions of the Institute of Politics at Williamstown, Mass. He has remained in this country after the close of the Institute of Politics, at the instance of the Jugoslav Society. He is a leader of the Serbian Orthodox Church.

Rappahannock Valley Convocation.

The fall meeting of the Rappahannock Valley Convocation will be held in Nomini Church, Cople Parish, Westmoreland Co., the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, rector, on November 2 and 3. Thursday will be given over to an interesting program prepared by the Woman's Auxiliary.

Training of Church Workers.

The Virginia Episcopal Training School for Church Workers closes its two weeks' course of intensive training at Grace and Holy Trinity Parish House on Friday, October 21, after an interesting series of lectures which were attended by over one hundred teachers and Church workers from the various Churches in Richmond.

Miss Clarice Lambright, the National Secretary for Young People's Work, was present the first week and lectured on the problems and advantages of the young people in the plan of the Church at large. Her wide vision and her untiring efforts in practical work were an inpsiration to her hearers and they carried with them a better understanding of the objective for the youth movement in our Church.

The Rev. J. C. Wagner, of the Bishop Payne Divinity School of Petersburg, taught a class in the Life of Christ the first week and for the second week he gave an outline of the History of the Church of England. The Rev. W. E. Cox, of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond taught a class in the Prayer Book; and the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., of Petersburg, taught child psychology and religious pedagogy, the pupil and the teacher.

Coaching classes were held each afternoon. Supper was served each night by the ladies of one of the Churches in Richmond.

Although the classes were not as largely attended by the clergy as had been hoped, those who did attend felt that the courses had been worth while and the time well spent. This is to be an annual event, and it is hoped by the Board of Religious Education that our Church Schools will in the future be as well organized and the faculty as well prepared to teach as the occasion of teaching children concerning the kingdom of Christ demands.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Auxiliary "Flying Squadron" Organized.

Under the leadership of Mrs. George Woodward, of Chestnut Hill, a "Flying Squadron", composed entirely of women of the Episcopal Church, has been organized in connection with the work of the Pennsylvania Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Mrs. Woodward is President of the Pennsylvania Auxiliary. It plans increasing the interest and participation of all women of the Church of the more than two hundred parishes and mission stations in Southeastern Pennsylvania, in the work of women for missions at home and in other fields of the Church. The "Flying Squadron" is a group of leaders in women's work in readiness to answer all calls to go anywhere in the Diocese of Pennsylvania to meet and talk with groups of women. The designation, "Flying Squadron", does not imply the use of airplanes in the carrying out of the program.

In addition to Mrs. Woodward, the members of the "Flying Squadron" is made up of officers of the Woman's Auxiliary, all of whom are widely known in Church work. They are Mrs. Chas. H. Pancoast, Mrs. Henry Dillard, Mrs. John P. Hollingsworth, Mrs. Harry F. Baker, Mrs. John E. Hill, and Miss Anna D. Dickson.

Tuesday afternoon, October 11, the "Flying Squadron" made its first visitation. Groups of women from parishes in Chester County met with the "Flying Squadron" in Trinity Church, Coatesville.

A Consecration and Dedication.

The consecration by Bishop Garland Sunday morning, October 16, of the new Memorial Church of the Good Shepherd, Oak Road, Germantown, was followed by the dedication in the afternoon by the Bishop of the new parish house.

The combined church and parish house is said to represent one of the finest types of colonial brick architecture to be found anywhere in the United States. Grouped in spacious grounds on one of Germantown's most beautiful avenues they present a most attractive picture.

In addition to Bishop Garland four other Bishops of the Episcopal Church took part in the ceremonies. These four were the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, formerly Bishop of Pennsylvania, and now attached to the National Cathedral in Washington; the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware; the Rt. Rev. J. deWolf Perry, Jr., Bishop of Rhode Island, and the Rt. Rev. Samuel B. Booth, Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont. The Rev. William Y. Edwards, rector of the Good Shepherd Parish, members of the vestry and all parish organizations also participated, and communicants of many other parishes were present.

Bishop Perry was the preacher at the consecration service in the morning and Bishop Booth delivered the address in the afternoon. Both of these Bishops are natives of Philadelphia.

The new church building and the grounds in Oak Road are the gift of the three sons of the late Henry W. Brown and Alice P. Brown as a memorial to their father and mother. Theodore E. Brown, the eldest of the sons, made the formal request for consecration, and Reynolds D. Brown, the youngest son, read the formal sentence of consecration. The other son, Henry I. Brown, is a vestryman of the church. The parish house was built by the congregation to conform to the architecture of the church.

Twenty-Fifth Anniversary of Rectorship Observed.

On Monday afternoon, October 10, a reception was held for the Rev. and Mrs. William D. Morgan in celebration of Mr. Morgan's twenty-five years as rector of St. John's Church, Waverly, Baltimore. Several gifts were presented by the congregation and a number of felicitation speeches made. The Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, Bishop Coadjutor, represented the diocese.

The Rev. Mr. Morgan is a graduate of Dickenson College with a degree of B. A. and M. A. He was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Paret in 1895, and has served as assistant in Memorial Church, Baltimore, and Christ Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. He was rector of St. Luke's Church, Sea Cliff, L. I., when called as rector of St. John's, Waverly, in 1902.

"Home-Coming" Service at Old Merchant's Home Church.

The annual "Home-Coming" service at old Merchant's Hope Church, Prince George County, was held Sunday afternoon, October 2. The Rev. J. M. B. Gill, pastor of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, had charge of the service and was assisted by the Rev. F. G. Ribble, rector of St. John's Church, City Point. It was a real home-coming service, and probably the most successful in the history of the Church. The weather was ideal and the congregation, composed of county people and visitors from Richmond, Petersburg and City Point, was too large for the seating capacity of the building. The music was rendered by the local choir with additions from the choirs of St. Paul's, Petersburg, and St. John's, City Point. The sermon was preached by the Rev. F. G. Ribble from the text: "Remove not the ancient landmark which thy fathers have set". The Holy Communion was celebrated and many of those who knelt before the Lord's Table that Sunday afternoon were kneeling where their forefathers had knelt before them.

Those who are especially interested in the old Church received great encouragement from this inspiring service. They felt that it was the beginning of better days for this historic landmark. Almost deserted by the old families and surrounded by a new population, largely foreign, it is showing the ravages of time. Built in 1657, it has been a witness for God throughout every period of our country's history. Loving hearts and hands ministered to it until they passed away. Few of these remain, too few to bear the burden alone. At this service an offering was made to start a fund to repair the old shrine, and it is hoped that this beginning, which was liberal, will soon amount to a sufficient fund to make the most urgent repairs. The Rev. Mr. Gill, who has the church in charge, is deeply interested and is devoting much time and many prayers to the work. With the cooperation of local workers and with the assistance of some of the members of St. Paul's, Petersburg, a Sunday School has been organized and is doing good work. Regular services are being held two Sunday afternoons in the month by Mr. Gill and Mr. Ribble. It is the only church of any kind in the neighborhood, and there are people all around it that need and want the Gospel. Whatever its association with the past, whatever its service to generations now gone, the work of this Church is not finished; it can and should serve many generations to come.

R.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Executive Council.

The Executive Council of the Diocese met in the Headquarters, in Jacksonville, on Tuesday night, October 14.

The Council approved the tentative budget, which was adopted at the Diocesan Council last May, which provides for a total apportionment upon the parishes and missions in the coming Every Member Canvass of $54,948.66. Of this amount $13,592.66 is in the Assessment Budget which covers the running expenses of the diocese, $27,856 is in the Diocesan Program Budget, and $13,500 is for the Program of the National Church. This latter amount is the full amount expected from the Diocese of Florida by the National Council.

Each of the Departments reported their plans for the current year's work, but the one of outstanding interest at this time was, of course, that of the Rev. Menard Doswell, the Chairman of the Department of Stewardship and Service. He will carry forward plans for the Campaign for the Church's Program and the Every Member Canvass, according to the District plan successfully used last year.

The Chairman of the Department of Religious Education, the Rev. A. M. Blackford of South Jacksonville, spoke of the student work. He has already referred some four hundred Church girls and boys, who are students away from home, to their college and school pastors. There are enrolled in the University of Florida, at Gainesville, one hundred and sixty-six young men, and at the Florida State College for Women, in Tallahassee, one hundred and seventy-four young women. Both of these groups are under the special supervision of workers who are supported by the joint Dioceses of Florida and South Florida.

Special consideration was given to the continued program of the Bishops' Crusade, early in the new year, under its Chairman, the Rev. Charles W. Fraser, of Jacksonville, and to the report of a Commission on Negro Work in the Diocese, given by the Rev. G. H. Harrison, D. D., of Pensacola.

The Third Annual Clergy Conference.

The third annual Clergy Conference of the Diocese has been pronounced by Bishop Juhan and all attending the best yet. Ninety-nine per cent of the clergy were in attendance.

The clergy assembled at the Diocesan Headquarters on the morning of October 5, and were driven to Jacksonville Beach, where a Celebration of the Holy Communion was held in the little Chapel of St. Paul-by-the-Sea. Immediately after the service, the clergy were taken to the Atlantic Beach Hotel, where the sessions of the conference were held. Bishop Juhan delivered a strong address to the clergy at the opening session of the conference, the theme being "A Priest in the Church of God".

The National Field Department sent as its representative the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, President and Dean of the Theological Department of Boone College, Wuchang, China.

Each one of the Department Chairmen outlined his—or her—program for the coming active season of the Church's life and it is believed that 1927-1928 will prove to be years of growth and vision in Florida.

The two women speakers of the conference were Mrs. Wm. P. Cornell, the Executive Secretary of the Diocese and the Chairman of the Department of Publicity, and Miss Hope Baskette, the Student Worker at the Florida State College for Women, at Tallahassee.

New Church and Parish House at East Aurora.

The congregation of St. Matthias' Church, East Aurora, under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. Henry de Wolfe de Maurice, is erecting a beautiful new stone church and parish house, on the site of the little frame building, which was built more than fifty years ago, at the corner of Main and Maple Streets, by a few loyal Churchmen and women. The new cornerstone bearing the two dates, 1869 and 1927, was laid on September 10 by the Rt. Rev. D. L. Ferris, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese.

Some of the visiting clergymen were the Rev. D. L. Leach of St. Mark's Church, Buffalo; the Rev. J. Z. Short of the Church of the Advent, Buffalo, and the Rev. Mr. Graham, of the Church Extension Society, Buffalo. The church will be gothic in design, built of Buffalo limestone, with Indiana limestone trimmings. It will have a tower forty-nine feet high, which will form the axis of the church and parish house. The fireplace on the second floor of the parish house is built of the foundation stones of the old church, and the first course of stone all around the building is constructed of the same stones. In the parish house there will be a small chapel for occasional services. The location of St. Matthias' Church is an ideal one. The new church will be a great addition to the church buildings of the diocese.

St. Mark's Church, North Tonawanda, will break ground shortly for a new church building and parish house, it was recently announced by the Rev. B. S. Sanderson, rector. The new building will be of brick construction, with stone trimming, and will cost about $60,000. It will be located on Payne Avenue and Tremont Street, a site given to the church, by heirs of the Stanley C. Peucken family.

Christ Church, Little Rock.

During the recent past many activities have been going on in Christ Church, Little Rock, Arkansas, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., rector. The fall work commenced with an Institute on the Christian Nurture Series for the Officers and Teachers of the Church School, shared also by the Officers and Teachers of Trinity Cathedral.

Then a Group Organization of the parish is well under way, Mr. Charles L. Thompson being the General Chairman and he having selected a number of helpers. The vestry has also elected Mr. Andrew Friberg as the General Chairman of the Every Member Canvass.

A fine body of men in the parish have gone into the Brotherhood of St. Andrew with earnestness. And the Men's Club of Christ Church began its fall and winter program on the night of October 7, with perhaps the largest attendance they have ever had, and one of the finest programs.

The Church School had a gratifying Rally Day on the first Sunday in October with a special program in the church and a large attendance of both the children and adults. The talks on these occasions were made by Mr. C. L. Thompson and Charles Witsell, son of the rector.

All the other organizations of the parish have started their work with zeal and the whole body of the parish is taking on new life.

The music also has improved since the coming of Mr. M. Philip Schlich as organist and choirmaster. He has in training a class of twenty-four boys who will add much to the choir when they have been sufficiently trained to enter.

Plans of the Department of Religious Education.

Much important work is scehduled for the near future in the department of Religious Education. Sunday, October 16, marked the opening of a series of lecture courses, for teachers and all Church workers. The course is under the leadership of the Rev. Homer W. Starr, Th. D., of Charleston, South Carolina, assisted by Miss A. M. Stout, of Memphis, Tenn.

On November 7 another Institute will be held for students and workers in the field of Social Service, with weekly sessions throughout the month. Several prominent speakers will visit the diocese during the month, among them Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, the Rev. Karl M. Block of St. Louis, and the Rev. R. A. Kirchoffer of Mobile, Ala.

"Cannot But Fail."

(Collect for Fifteenth Sunday After Trinity.)

Juliet C. Smith.

He spoke with glowing words the other day
Of love of God and tenderness to men,
And stirred the hearts of all who heard him—Then
A few hours later his strained nerves gave way
And he dealt harshly with his child at play.
One standing by said sadly: "Ne'er again
Can his words bring me inspiration, when
His actions such unlovingness display".

"Ah, no," I said, "To me it doth but show
That he is human, too, and strives like me
Failing like me at times." They aid us best
Who a few steps before us onward go;
Stumbling perchance, yet pressing steadily
Toward the one Perfect Man—God manifest.

A Religion of Reaction.

An eminent student of religions has said that there are two kinds of cults—cults of action and cults of re-action. So he distinguishes between a religion that depends upon man's activity to find and please God and a religion that depend's on God's activity to save men. The former is a religion of response to divine action.

The religion of the Bible is obviously a religion of re-action. The saints of Israel and of Christ are men and women who have discovered God seeking them and have yielded themselves to a consuming passion of faith, love and gratitude toward Him. Their lives dominated by these emotions have become media through which the active God could have His way, channels through which the life of God could flow.

There is, however, and has always been a stubborn human tendency to depart from this Scriptural conception of religion and substitute for it a religion of action.

"I believe," writes John Ruskin, "that the root of every schism and heresy from which the Christian Church has suffered, has been the effort to earn salvation rather than to receive it; and that one reason why preaching is so ineffective is that it calls on men oftener to work for God than to behold God working for them."

This was the error of the Pharisees. They made religion a matter of ordinances and observances. Jesus ruthlessly brushed their burdensome codes aside and invited men to come into the presence of the Gracious Father, and let His love have its way with them. Life for Jesus was just a continuous response to the loving will of the ever present Father. To the strict champions of the law such an attitude seemed disastrous. That is the error that the votaries of religions of action have always made. But the plain fact of experience is that eras of high moral living have always come when men turned from a religion based on good works to a religion of trust in God and dependence upon His saving and strengthening grace.

The religion of works produces self-righteousness, with all its habitual hardness and delusions. But the religion of response to God's love produces the fragrant graces of true righteousness—the righteousness of the beatitudes and the Golden Rule.

History has vindicated this conclusion again and again. The Protestant Reformation and the Wesleyan Revival exemplify the fact on a vast scale. These epochal events brought mighty revivals of religion and of holy living. And how? By turning the minds of men away from their codes and rites to the wondrous grace of God.

The religion of faith binds men to God. Religions of works get in between men and God. Then must God send His prophets to cry, "This people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor Me, but have removed their heart far from Me". So religion becomes empty and devoid of their inspired emotion which is the motive power of all high spiritual living.

God is calling His people to a life far more Christ-like than has been yet attained. He is calling His Church to an ever richer and more comprehensive social service, but the only dynamic that will produce these results is the deep and holy emotion of hearts wholly conquered by the love and grace of the reigning Lord.

A craving for companionship is one of the deepest-rooted and most powerful instincts in humanity. The soul's sorest sufferings come from a sense of loneliness. God has implanted within us this craving for companionship in order that we may find joy in helping others, and that our helpfulness may be an occasion of joy to others. As we learn this real secret of life we will banish loneliness from our lives and get the most out of companionship.

Phillips Brooks once gave to the world a nugget of wisdom when he said: "It does not take great men to do great things; it only takes consecrated men." If you possess only limited powers and have restricted opportunities and yet consecrate all these to the service of God, you will accomplish far more than the proficient and capable person who seeks to do great things in his own strength and leaves God entirely out of his calculations.

The possibilities of any life are measured by the degree in which we make use of God's help and grace. He who created the soul can satisfy all the powers and capabilities of that soul. Paul said: "My God shall supply all your need through Christ Jesus." We have learned the largest lesson of life when we appreciate the fact that only God in the richness of His completeness is sufficient for man in the richness of his possibilities.

Sometimes we are tempted to think that our salvation depends on the firmness with which we hold on to God, but God has put the truth in a far more gracious way. He says: "I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, fear not, I will help thee." While we reach up with the hand of faith to God He reaches down and with His gracious, omnipotent grasp, takes hold of our hand, so that we need not be concerned so much about our hold upon God, for He will not let us go. As some one has said, we can let God do the holding and we can do the trusting.—Christian Observer.

A Bishop Who Ate His Boots.

Bishop Stringer, of the Church of England, is known all over Canada as the Bishop who ate his boots to keep himself from starvation. The work of this godly man lay amongst the Whalers and Eskimos of Hershel Island. The Bishop himself tells of the boot-eating incident: "We would have starved," said he, "had we not done so. The boots we ate were of seal skin dried without tanning. They reached to our knees and contained quite a good deal of hide. Our first experiment was unsuccessful. The boots had been greased night after night and the oil had turned rancid. The taste was such that it was impossible to swallow or chew the skin. At last we tried boiling it and toasting it. The toasting took away some of the taste. With the exception of a few bits we had eaten two pairs of boots when we were found." The following is an extract from the Bishop's diary: "Thursday, October 21. Breakfast off of sealskin boots, soles and tops boiled and toasted. Soles better than uppers. Soup from small scraps of bacon and scrapings of the flour barrel. The last we have. Tired. Hands sore. Took a long time to pack up. Concluded we were in the Peel River country. Heard children's voices in the distance and then saw houses on left hand about a mile ahead. We stopped and thanked God for bringing us to human habitation." For Jesus Christ's sake, men willingly endure such hardships as those endured by this missionary.—Exchange.

Christianity is a divine dispensation for bringing men into conscious union with the Holiest of all, with the Father through the Son; a church is an institution embodying and applying the distinctively Christian requisites to the end—the dying away to sin and self, and the rising into strength, goodness, and love by filial surrender to the Perfect Will.—James Martineau.

For the Young Folks

A Careful Girl.

A little girl walked down the street,
All smiling, bright, and gay;
She'd buckle-shoes upon her feet,
With care she picked her way;
She stepped beyond a small ant-hill,
And past a little worm;
She stopped and stood so very still,
So she would not alarm
A Butterfly close by the way
With pretty spotted wings;
She's very careful all the day,
She loves God's creature-things.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

What Jesus Needs.

M. L. G.

We were thinking not long ago of the needs of Jesus—how few they were, when He lived here on Earth. Now, let us think of one need which He had then and still has.

It is the need of the shepherd for his sheep—the Father for his lost son. It is the need of that great heart that broke to save the world.

It is a need which it lies with each one of us to satisfy. No one of His friends can take the place of another. The apostles might choose one by lot to take the room in their ranks left vacant when Judas deserted. But I think the risen Master missed from the group around the fire by the lakeside, or on the brow of Olivet, the man whom He had greeted, when Gethsemane's silence was broken by the tramp of soldiers' feet, as "friend".

We have our little circle of friends, and feel we need no more. He holds the world in His heart, and cannot be content if one sheep be astray. We are ambitious to be "exclusive"—He said, "I will draw all men unto Me".

Let us each one give Him, and renew the gift over and over, the hearts He has made for Himself. As no lesser gift can satisfy His love, so no lower life can fulfill our own longing.

"How often," He said, weeping over Jerusalem, "I would—and ye would not." So to us His friends He will—He will gather us to Him, He will pour out the abundant life, He will reveal unsearchable riches. He will show us the Father. Only we must come and be filled. Will we?

An Adventurous Night.

Part II.

George Morgan Knight, Jr.

Silas Higgins hastened his step. As he kept on he was aware of another pair of eyes. These were nearer to him. Then it came to Silas what it was.

"Cougars!" he said to himself, as he realized that they were on his trail.

Silas knew well that they never attack man unless they could not get other game. The great storm had caused this, and they were after him. The wild beasts were hungry. They had not eaten in three days.

Quickly he began to take stock of his circumstances. He had a pistol. But who could shoot one of those alert swift creatures? Although Silas was known throughout that section as a crack shot and a great hunter, he had never been able to shoot a cougar. They were too evasive for any hunter. Yet he would try, although it might prove in vain.

His arms were numb with cold. He was buttoned up in a thick wool coat, but he managed to get at his gun. It was loaded with three bullets. That was all. Anyway, the shooting possibly might attract the men. A sound carries a long way on a night like this bitter one. All this time Silas had kept on. If he stopped the cougars would no doubt attack him. As long as he kept moving, they were afraid of him.

With great effort Silas raised his right arm. He tried to get his aim. But the cougars observed him keenly and slyly dodged in and out between the firs. It was not the first time that they had been aimed at that winter.

There was a flash and a bullet cut the air. The shooting caused the animals little concern. It had not passed near them and two more bullets remained.

The second bullet did not hit the animals. The wind had started to blow and this had effect on the range. Still Silas Higgins went on. The snow became deeper and his muscles began to ache. Now the cougars sensed this. The last shot proved useless, and all he had left was the lantern. All wild creatures are afraid of fire, Silas knew. His only hope lay in the lantern. He must keep on. The lights of the camp shone far away. But to Silas they seemed twice as far.

The cougars also saw the distant lights of the camp. Well they knew that if the man got there their supper would be gone. The animal in front of him began to circle around. The other followed its mate's example. The snow seemed deeper as he trudged on. His strength became less as he fought on. The lantern in his hand was growing lighter, he suddenly realized. Each time the cougars when they circled came closer and closer. Silas was in a desperate situation. The gleaming eyes of the cougars watched Silas. Their breath stood out in the shivering air. The wind had begun to blow, and it kept the man from making rapid progress. His light grew dimmer. Oh! if it would only last! The boy at the store should have seen that it was full of oil when he gave it to Silas, but he had not. Little did he dream what the lantern was to mean to his friend. It was funny that the gift of the gods could do so great a good. Even Silas's pistol could not lend aid. It had proven useless. Only the pistol could save him from human beings and a few of nature's creatures. But as nature had made the iron in her earth's bosom, she had created the animals who could so easily evade the danger. Life is strange and it had placed Silas in an odd situation.

It was now that the last flicker of the lantern burnt out. Quickly the cougars drew nearer ready to leap on the man they had trailed so very far. Even the camp being so near did not make them afraid. For what makes you afraid when you are ravenously hungry? And so it was with these beasts of the big wilderness. Silas Higgins threw the lantern and it crashed against the face of the closest cougar. The blow struck home and checked them for several seconds. The injured cougar let out a savage growl.

Silas Higgins took full advantage of this few moments stop of the cougars and dashed ahead, summoning his remaining strength and made for a cabin from which a light shone from its four windows. The other cabins were dark and he knew that the men had made this one a sort of a club house.

The race was on as he heard the soft pat, pat of the oncoming enemies of the night. He had gained some ground, Although he had little strength left, it held him up. He was used to running in this cold, bitter weather and now it served him in good stead. Now the beasts ran on either side of him. Just when he fell they would leap on him and tear him to pieces. The moon had come out now. Silas Higgins could make out the animals very plainly in the moonlight. They were big and a bit larger than dogs.

Now the hungriest of the two ventured near him and snapped at his flying coattail. Silas rushed up to the lighted cabin's door and threw all his weight upon it. The door swung open, and he fell in the floor. The men saw two very large cougars in the doorway for a second and then they were gone. But the cougars did not leave the camp, they prowled around the camp all that night, and did not leave until dawn. Silas soon recovered from his terrible adventure and was glad that he had escaped with so little harm.

(The End.)

Adventure.

The little men of meadow land,
Said they to me, said they,
"There're bunnies in this meadow
As swift as any shadow,
With ears of amber velvet
And coats of silver gray;
And if you'll bring some goodies
And wait a little while (Don't breathe, don't smile),
Perhaps you'll see those bunnies gray",
Said they to me, said they.

I ran and filled a basket quick
With carrots pinky-gold
And lettuce green and crinkly
And apples red and twinkly
And munchy, crunchy tid-bits,
As full as it would hold,
And put it down, tiptoeing,
And waited very still Until—until
Across the grass three bunnies strolled,
High stepping, light and bold.

Their tails were soft as thistledown,
Their coats were silver gray;
They minced along politely
And twitched their noses slightly,
With amber ears uplifted
In just the loveliest way.
I said, "I never, never
Had really hoped to meet
Bunnies sweet!"
"You never tried until today,"
Said they to me, said they.

The Christian ministry makes the biggest demand on character of any calling. Its only capital is character. Business men are judged by their goods, which is the least part of ministers Ministers may be as brilliant as possible, and as eloquent as possible, yet unless they can command respect by their personal character they are the most miserable folk in the world.—Record of Christian Work.

THE CHRIST WE KNOW.

By the Right Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop of Central New York.

This is an extraordinarily good book and one immensely needed. "It is the best volume I know in its treatment of the significance of the Gospels."—Bernard I. Bell, D. D., President of St. Stephen's College. The Utica Daily Press says: "Bishop Fiske has written wisely, humanly and helpfully." The Spokane Daily Chronicle says: "It should have wide appeal both for the utter sincerity of its intention, and for the simple beauty of its style." $2.00.

THE CHRISTIAN SACRAMENTS.

By Rev. Oliver C. Quick, D. D., Canon of Carlisle Cathedral.

This book is an attempt to consider sacraments from the point of view of philosophy and general experience rather than from that of historical scholarship. The general nature of a Christian Sacrament is discussed and illustrated, and there is a survey of the relation between worship and morality. $3.00.

Deaths

CONRAD: Entered into rest, SUSAN DAVIS CONRAD, widow of Dr. Daniel B. Conrad, at her home in Winchester, Virginia, on September 15, 1927.

The Winchester Star said of Mrs. Conrad: "From her life radiated the light of a good example, and now that this light has gone out the afterglow will linger in the hearts of her friends, a gentle reminder of the gracious personality that was the precious possession of this community for more than a half century."

REV. DR. ROBERT DOUGLAS ROLLER.

With the passing of our beloved rector emeritus, DR. ROBERT DOUGLAS ROLLER, St. John's has lost a vital connection with the past. Of the vestry who called him on January 3, 1888, only one member, George S. Laidley, is now living. Older members of the congregation, looking back over the long and honorable history of the parish under the thirty years of Dr. Roller's pastorate recall that when he came to us on the second Sunday of April, 1888, we were without any church building. The old church on Virginia Street had been sold; the present church was not completed, and for nearly two years services were held in the legislative hall of the capitol, the Kanawha County Court House, and the hall of Major Snyder's school, where also the Sunday School was housed. Under Dr. Cobb, the rector who preceded Dr. Roller, the ground where St. John now stands, was bought in 1883 and the cornerstone of the church was laid in 1884. Funds were slow in coming in; Dr. Cobb died in 1887, so that the church was without a rector for a year; and the new building was not completed until 1890, when the first service was held in March of that year. There was still a heavy debt, which Dr. Roller made vigorous efforts to have paid off. This was accomplished in 1901 and the church was consecrated on June 9.

Not only, however, was Dr. Roller active in securing the completion of his own church and the canceling of its indebtedness, but he was very much alive to the demand for missions in the outlying districts. Under his leadership the missions of St. Matthews' (1892), St. Andrew's (1894), St. Stephen's on Lens Creek (1895), and St. James', Colored (1896) were established. St. Luke's, first called the "House of Prayer", had been started before he came to the parish, but it was moved to its present location in 1893. He also labored to establish a mission in Kanawha City; it was always a matter of regret to him that the work in this place, which he recognized as strategic, was not vigorously prosecuted.

Dr. Roller was one of the outstanding clergymen of the diocese, having served as chairman of many diocesan committees, and for many years as clerk of the diocese. As a member of the Sheltering Arms Hospital Board he was interested and active. He was a Mason, and an active member of the Knights Templar Commandery No. 4, of which he had served as Prelate and as Commander.

Dr. Roller was for many years a deputy to General Convocation.

And yet, however great his labors for the parish, the missions and the diocese—and these labors stand as a monument to his memory—it is as a friend and a pastor that many of us love best to remember him. A large proportion of the members of St. John's today were presented by him for confirmation; they were married by him, their babies were baptized by him, and their dead were laid away by the aid of his sympathetic ministrations. Countless celebrations of the Holy Communion are sweet memories to those who received the elements from his hands. He is gone from us, the builder, the pastor, the friend. We mourn for him, but not as those without hope.

ber 2-10. Time and changing conditions make imperative the improvements and expansion of this widely known institution, erected forty years ago, and commemorating, both in its substantial structure and its far-reaching service, the memory of a faithful servant and priest of God. The goal is six hundred thousand dollars. Gifts, large and small, have come from many within and without the diocese, especially from those who have shared the benefits of its charity wards. More than half the amount has been received, and the work will be begun immediately.

The anniversaries of the tenth year of service of Dean R. L. McCready and Senior Canon F. W. Hardy, were celebrated on Sunday, October 2, at the Cathedral in Louisville. Bishop Woodcock's sermon paid well merited tribute to the service rendered by Dean McCready and Canon Hardy.

The Bishops' Crusade: Kentucky is cooperating with the widespread "Loyalty" movement in progress throughout Louisville in the follow-up work of the Bishops' Crusade. Sunday, October 9, was observed as a rally day and record-breaking congregations were present in all churches. For eight weeks the rally call will continue, keeping in view the purpose and hope of the Crusade.

L. L. R.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

The Bishop Withdraws His Request for Bishop Coadjutor.

On October 1 the Bishop of Lexington, the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, D. D., officially notified the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Lexington, as also the clergy, vestries and Church committees, of the diocese, that he has withdrawn his request for and consent to the election of a Bishop Coadjutor in this diocese.

Formal announcement will be made, by the Bishop to the Diocesan Council at the next meeting.

Margaret Hall.

Margaret Hall, Versailles, the diocesan school for girls, opened its thirtieth year September 15, with pupils enrolled from New York, Florida, California, Missouri, West Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky. The Bishop of the Diocese presided at the opening of the school.

During the summer extensive improvements have been made upon the school property, especially the gymnasium. An indoor swimming pool, forty-five by twenty-five feet, with all the necessary equipment for a pool, has been completed and ready for use this term. No girls' school in Kentucky has such a feature. The school will also have a winter tennis-court.

Parish House to be Improved.

The parish house and Sunday-school room of St. Thomas' Church, Ft. Thomas, Ky., is being improved this fall; $25,000 will be the estimated cost.

The Rev. F. F. Shannon, D. D., of Chicago, was the special preacher at the union service this summer held in the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector. Over eight hundred listened to this noted preacher at this service.

The G. F. S. Farm, located near Beattyville, recently closed a very successful season. Several improvements have been made on the property this year; next year others are expected to be made.

Besides the Rev. Mr. Patterson, Mrs. Ella Peebles, Miss Olivia Glenn, of Covington, Ky., and Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton, of Beattyville, Ky., have been the workers in charge this year.

J. H. G.

Personal Notes

The Rev. A. Vincent Bennett, Assistant to the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Fitchburg, Mass. Mr. Bennett assumed his rectorship on October 18.

The Rev. Roberts P. Johnson, for a number of years rector of Christ Church, Monticello, and St. Clement's Church, Lloyd, Fla., has entered upon his duties as rector of Grace Church, St. Francisville, Louisiana.

The Rev. W. W. Smith, Assistant at St. Peter's, Germantown, Philadelphia, has become assistant to the Rev. William Y. Edwards at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Germantown.

The Rev. William Henry Pettus has resumed his duties as rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington, after a vacation of two months, spent in Europe.

The Rev. A. K. Fenton, formerly curate at St. John's Church, Pittsburgh, is serving as assistant at St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia.

ORDINATIONS.

On October 7, in the Bishop's Chapel at the Diocesan House, Baltimore, Md., Grinley R. Madge was ordained Deacon by the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D. The candidate was presented by his rector, the Rev. Joseph M. Waterman, of the Church of the Resurrection, Baltimore. The Rev. John I. Yellott, rector of Emmanuel Church, Belair, preached. Mr. Madge will continue his studies at the Theological Seminary in Virginia, and at the same time have charge of Deer Creek Parish, Maryland.

On Friday, October 7, at Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., the Rev. Henry W. Dowding was ordained to the diaconate by the Bishop of Southern Virginia. The candidate was presented by his rector, the Rev. Charles H. Holmead, of Trinity Church, Portsmouth. Bishop Tucker also preached the sermon. The Rev. Mr. Dowding was formerly a Congregational minister in this city, and elsewhere, for many years. He was born in Bath, England. He will enter at once upon his duties as assistant at Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., and in missionary duty as the Bishop may direct.

Mr. Dan W. Allen was recently ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of North Carolina, in All Saints' Church, Roanoke Rapids. He was presented by the Rev. B. E. Brown. The Rev. L. N. Taylor, a former rector, preached the sermon. Other clergy taking part in the service included the Rev. Messrs. Morrison Bethea, Wm. J. Gordon, C. H. Jordan, Francis Joyner, B. N. deFoe Wagner and the Rev. W. F. Carpenter. Mr. Allen is a student at the Theological Seminary in Virginia this year.

In St. Matthew's Church, Lincoln, Nebraska, on Sunday, September 4, the Rt. Rev. Vincent Shayler, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, ordained to the priesthood the Rev. William John Woon. The Bishop was assisted by the Rev. L. W. McMillin, of Lincoln, the Rev. George L. Freebern, of Albion, and the Rev. A. H. Haubert, of Bellevue. The Rev. Mr. Woon assumes charge of St. Matthew's Church, Lincoln, as vicar. He was formerly a Methodist minister in Lincoln, but spent his period of preparation and diaconate at Christ Church,

THE WORLD HAS LONG NEEDED A MORE HELPFUL BIBLE

Here It Is---A Bible Such as We Have Wanted for a Century

An Authorized Interview with B. B. Kirkbride, Publisher of the Thompson Chain Reference Bible

By Jewell F. Stevens

Publisher, Chain Reference Bible.

"FEW people realize," said Mr. Kirkbride, "that a conglomeration of disjointed data and tabulated dates does not constitute a reference Bible."

I sat up straight because he had hit squarely the vague dissatisfaction I had long felt with reference Bibles I had used.

"You see," Mr. Kirkbride explained to readers of The Southern Churchman, "you haven't a reference Bible unless you have one with a practical working system, and the reference system is not practical unless it links up the text with whatever other reference material the Bible may contain."

That sounded logical, and I remembered wondering what Herod was referred to in the first verse of the twelfth chapter of Acts, and asked Mr. Kirkbride if the Thompson Chain Reference Bible would tell, and he answered: "Yes, this text reference, like all others, is tied up instantly to its explanation. But before I show you which Herod it was, let me emphasize the crying need of connecting reference system and related helps to insure a practical working Bible that gives its readers a thorough understanding of the beautiful truths blossoming unseen on every page. This unity is accomplished for the first time in the Thompson Chain Reference Bible, which turns the searchlight of knowledge and understanding on the pages of Holy Scripture, not a flicker here and there, but a flood of light that fills the heart and mind of the reader with understanding."

A Life of Service

Mr. Kirkbride has devoted the greater part of his life to the production of this Bible, the most helpful Bible published. His first aim in life was to become a singing evangelist, but a nose and throat operation wrecked his hopes. Groping, he came upon the first edition of the Chain Reference Bible, and found in it the opportunity he craved to serve his fellow-man. From door to door he sold this Bible, saw its shortcomings and resolved to give himself to the task of improving it.

"I felt the Chain Reference System was practically perfect, but that the material in the old subject index was not practical and needed to be connected up with the other material. I finally persuaded Dr. Frank C. Thompson, editor, to undertake this task, and the masterly Text Cyclopedia was the result."

Unrivaled Reference System

The Chain Reference System which Mr. Kirkbride referred to is unrivaled in simplicity and completeness. It enables you quickly and easily to follow any thought or character straight through the Bible. With this perfect system of reference is embodied an expository plan of verse analysis that breaks down substantially every Bible verse into thought topics, sometimes as many as seven.

Mr. Kirkbride opened the Bible to the well-known twenty-third Psalm, and, reading the first verse, said: "Now notice that just opposite this verse we have the Chain References suggesting we are 'God's Sheep', and 'Christ is our Shepherd', and also through God's 'Providence' we receive our 'Divine Supplies'. You see," said Mr. Kirkbride, "here is an exposition of the underlying meaning based on thought content; not on a word system. The Bible text is not marred by reference signs or confusing letters, which are still used in every other reference Bible, and which are as out of date as tallow candles.

Crowning Achievement Saves Time

"But the crowning achievement of the Thompson Chain Reference Bible is the Text Cyclopedia, which catalogs all the 'chains' of over one hundred thousand references, together with complete dictionary material, general Bible information, a biographical study of Bible characters, Bible readings, pronouncing Bible Gazeteer and a comprehensive treatment of doctrine, peoples, manners and customs. The material of the Text Cyclopedia represents the consecrated effort of twenty years of Dr. Thompson's life. So complete an encyclopedia of Bible helps never has been attempted before."

Turning the page, Mr. Kirkbride remarked: "You will note that we not only have many new helps not to be found in other books, but we have an entirely new classification of the general information given in other Bibles. This enables you quickly to find what you want without wasting time. For example, a simple subject like the Miracles is classified differently. Every miracle is arranged under the man's name who performed it, and each is given in order. Note the feeding of the five thousand occurred before the feeding of the four thousand. This is a minor point, but it might be just the information you needed. Here is a list of all the kings of Israel and Judah in order of their reign. And here's a list of the notable women of the Bible. In what other Bible could you find such complete lists as these? The wonderful analysis and classification of material, old and new, is but one of the many advantages of this Bible for real, practical Bible study.

Teaches Truths by Contrast

"One of the numerous new features of special value of the Text Cyclopedia is our plan of teaching or emphasizing great truths by contrast, such as: Knowledge-Ignorance, Poverty-Riches. Self-Indulgence-Self-Denial, Worldliness-UnWorldliness, etc. Another is the treatment of practical subjects, many of which are not even mentioned in other Bibles. Such subjects as, Business Life, The Surrendered Life, The Devotional Life, Civic Righteousness, etc. It is but a step from any subject or thought to the Text Cyclopedia, where it is thoroughly analyzed and developed. Indeed, the Text Cyclopedia is an unparalleled reference library in condensed form with a complete topical index that unifies the Chain Reference System and all related helps. This Bible is abreast of the times; saves searching; emphasizes spiritual themes; stimulates study, and lights a path for common living. In consequence, the Thompson Chain Reference Bible is rapidly displacing all others with leading scholars and Bible readers in every land where English is spoken.

"Now to answer your question about the Herod mentioned in the first verse of the twelfth chapter of Acts. If you look in the reference column opposite this verse, you will find the time is A. D. 44, and that Herod Agrippa the First is referred to. In the Topical Index of the Text Cyclopedia you will find there were four Herods. The data on Herod the First reads as follows: 'He was the son of Aristobulus, and succeeded his uncle, Herod Philip, the Second, as Tetrarch of Ituraea Trachonitus, etc. He was given the title of king by Emperor Caligula, and finally received all the territory of Herod the Great.'" General references to Acts 12: 1-20, 23:35. "This," concluded Mr. Kirkbride, "is only an evidence of the exhaustive and authoritative completeness of the Text Cyclopedia."

Not Sold in Stores.

I then asked Mr. Kirkbride how a person desiring a Chain Reference Bible could get one if they were not in touch with one of his representatives, and he replied: "Unfortunately, I do not have a representative in every community, so that orders received from such places are promptly taken care of by parcel post. Sometimes orders are received from persons in towns where we have a worker who is sent to deliver the order."

I then asked him: "Would you like to have more Christian representatives?" "Indeed I would," he said, "and there are splendid opportunties to earn good money and do a worthwhile Christian service. If interested persons will only write to me, I will take up with them the matter of protected territory and give them every assistance in this interesting work."

Mr. Kirkbride promises he will send you a free booklet showing the unusually helpful features of this remarkable Bible so widely used by leaders of Bible study and thought. Write to him, care of the B. B. Kirkbride Bible Company Room 8-427, Meridian Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind., or write your name and address on the margin below the clip with this note and mail to him, and if you would like to become his representative in your community please so indicate.

The advertising of the Chain Reference Bible appears regularly in the pages of The Southern Churchman.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Cast forth the soul in prayer, you meet the effluence of the outer truth."

There is a life which seems to be sufficient and satisfactory. The temptation is to rest in it. Do not. Reach up to the higher, which reveals itself only as we enter it.—Bishop Brent.

Only one way by which the heavy load
Of coming ill may yet be turned to good,
Only one way—Come back to God.
—John Oxenham.

A great deal of what we think is constitutional amiability in others is, on analysis, found to be acquired Christian grace, through struggle and prayer. ——Rev. Wm. Porkess.

One man alone is no man at all. Strip a man of all relations with fellow begins, and you no longer have a man, but the blasphemy of a man.—Prof. Graham Taylor.

We never know when it is Christ that stands before us, in some suppliant or some needy one, with timid request for help. We should be careful how we treat the lowliest, lest some day we deny a cup of cold water to the blessed, glorious Christ.—J. R. Miller.

"Touchiness, petulance, super-sensitiveness, readiness to have one's pride hurt and to be insulted, all these are forms of selfishness. Consider the marvel of Jesus' character in this respect."

"If God is like unto Christ, in some respects the mystery becomes deeper than ever, but to a God in Christ we can certainly fasten our faith. Our confidence increases at the moment when our knowledge shrinks."

To the traitor He left His purse; to the soldiers, His robe; to the beloved disciple, His mother; to the dying thief, His promise of paradise; to the penitent Peter, His pardon; to His Father His last breath and departing spirit and to His followers, His peace.

"To be strong and true to be generous in praise and appreciation of others; to impute worthy motives even to enemies; to give without expectation of return; to practice humility, tolerance and self-restraint; to make the best use of time and opportunity; to keep the mind pure and judgment charitable; to extend intelligent sympathy to those in distress; to cultivate quietness and nonresistence; to seek truth and righteousness; to work, love, pray and serve daily; to aspire greatly, labor cheerfully, and take God at His word—this is to travel heavenward."—Grenville Kleiser.

"God never asks us to complete a work at the beginning. Often He does not ask us even to try to foresee the ending. But He always asks us to begin anything to which He calls, when the time for beginning has come, and to begin it in cheery indomitable confidence in Him. How much needless sinful worry would be saved if we would only act upon this truth day by day! The reason why today's work looms so big and burdensome is because we are foolishly trying to carry it all in the first hour. Let us make our morning prayer that which a child of God voiced when facing a heavy responsibility: "O Lord, we know that Thou hast asked us only to begin."

SERVICE

Washington City has been edified recently by lamentable lamentations regarding the policies and progress of those who accept and adhere to the fundamental teachings and foundation doctrines of the Christian religion. The Rev. Dr. Albert C. Dieffenbach, addressing the biennial conference of the Unitarian Association and proudly claiming the honor of being the leading opponent of fundamentalist doctrine, was in rather low spirits. "The Bible belt," he is reported in the newspapers as saying, "extends all over the nation. The fundamentalist Churches dominate the religion of the country." Apparently he shares the cynical gloom, as he emulates the rhetoric, of his fellow sufferer, H. L. Mencken, and he finds new and dismal affliction and alarm in the declaration of President Coolidge that "the Bible is the instrument and incentive of law and order". "Law and order," mourns Dr. Dieffenbach, "are the words of monarchy. The words of democracy are freedom and service." Chief Justice Taft, who was present, must have felt himself illuminated by these deductions and definitions. By astonishing coincidence, Dr. Dieffenbach's outburst was followed, within a week, by announcement that he had written and had for sale a book of sensational character saying that Protestantism is entering a new dark age.

A few Monday mornings before the Dieffenbach exposition of modernism, Washington newspapers presented another in shape of extracts from a sermon, evidently prepared carefully for publication, by the Rev. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, pastor of Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington. "Musty Creeds Stifle Church", was the display headline over this bombshell. Like Dr. Dieffenbach, Dr. Harris is disturbed. He is reported as speaking of the "rampant, rabid fundamentalist going up and down the land like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour". The essential for the welfare of the Church, Dr. Harris continued, is "to accept those who are willing to regard Christ as a friend and brother as well as those who believe in His deity". Thus, he said, the Church might do service. This suggestion is not quite original, as Dr. Harris and the reporter seem to have thought. It was adopted by those fine performers of service, the Parisian mobs of the revolution, more than a century ago, after they had enjoyed their seven months of the Reign of Reason. They consented then to accept the Saviour, as Dr. Harris would have Him accepted now—friend and brother, without special authority, sympathizing with the scorn for law and order, as expressed by Dr. Dieffenbach, and the gleeful counting of heads rolling into baskets from the guillotine.

A few blocks away from Dr. Harris' Church stands a bronze equestrian statue of Bishop Asbury, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, looking over Meridian Park. He did much toward establishing the Bible belt which Dr. Dieffenbach so lugubriously laments and with planting the doctrines of fundamentalism, which Dr. Harris tells us must be repudiated if the Church is to thrive. This bishop had no time for delicately analytical theorizing on the nature of service. One of his biographers estimates that he rode 270,000 miles, most of it horseback, day and night, in all weathers, over all kinds of roads and paths. When he arrived from England, in 1771, he found on this Continent three Methodist meeting houses and three hundred Methodists. In his forty-five years of service he ordained more than 4,000 preachers of his faith. He carried the fire of adoration of and love for Christ as God to the frontiers, put it into the men of lion heart and giant strength who hewed away the forests and built Churches in which to worship before completing the rude log huts to shelter their heads. These men built states and cities, were the fathers of a conquering race, founders of civilization and power at which the world wonders.

A few miles from Dr. Harris' Church, at the Theological Seminary, near Alexandria, hangs a portrait of Bishop Meade, of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Virginia. He was ordained at Williamsburg, in 1811, in a church every window of which was broken and in presence of a congregation of fifteen men and three women. The one Episcopal Church in Richmond, old St. John's, was open only on Sundays when the Holy Communion was administered, and at the first convention Mr. Meade attended after his ordination he was one of seven clergymen present from all the territory now included in Virginia and West Virginia. He faced conditions which would delight the modern modernist—skepticism, unbelief, frank atheism, among the most intelligent classes, every man making his own religion and moral standards to please himself. That fundamentalist's philosophy of service did not include lowering the standards or relaxing the discipline of the Church to accommodate skeptics. He strove ceaselessly to lift men to accept the teachings of the Church and her Divine Master—all men and women. During his rectorship in Frederick County, he preached to the slaves on fifteen plantations. Bishop and Assistant Bishop more than thirty years, he traveled through the Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, leaving everywhere a trail of new or revived congregations, of renewed custom of family prayer, of pious fervor.

If the words of democracy are freedom and service, did not these men do service for God, humanity, the country and the future? Did not Father Damien, of the Roman Church, do service when he dedicated his life to the outcast, forsaken and abhorred lepers of Hawaii? Have not the faith of our fathers and mothers and the power of the Holy Scriptures inspired and sustained every year thousands of men and women to magnificent self-sacrifice, glorious spending of their lives and labor to serve the Living Christ and carry His teaching and hope to human hearts?

Can Dr. Dieffenbach and Dr. Harris tell us of such work, such service, done by the scientists they so adore, the moralists they so admire, the diligent disputants of the Saviour's divinity they offer us as models?

Remember the last words of Our Saviour, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel". He did not tell us to preach socialism, communism, or even modernism.

"By their fruits ye shall know them."

WHO IS THE AUTHOR OF PSALM 110?

He who reads his Bible with simple trustfulness, unflustered by the theories of learned hebraists, will reply at once, "David, of course, is the author".

As recorded in St. Matthew 22:41 fol., we read: "Now while the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them a question, saying: What think ye of Christ? Whose son is He?

They say unto Him: The Son of David.

He saith unto them: How then doth David in the Spirit call Him Lord, saying

> The Lord said unto my Lord,
> Sit Thou on my right hand,
> Till I put Thine enemies under Thy feet?

If David then calleth Him Lord, how is He his Son?"
(See also Mark 12:35 fol., and Luke 20:41 fol.)

We should note here that our Lord Jesus says that David, in the Spirit, calls the Messiah his Son. He not only attributes the words of this Psalm to David, but He declares solemnly that David made this declaration in the Spirit.

We also note that if the words are not David's, the Lord's argument would be futile. It was the fact that David and none other called the Messiah his Lord, that made the whole question asked by our Lord so startling to the Pharisees.

Now will it not be a shock to many who read these words to learn that the late Dr. Driver of Oxford, following his infidel German masters, has the courage to deny what our Lord here solemnly asserts?

He says that this Psalm "may be presumed to be pre-exilic and ancient, but can hardly have been composed by David." And yet our Lord says, "David in the Spirit doth call Him Lord" in this very Psalm. And more than this, the learned Oxford scholar is bold enough to refer to our Divine Master's words and say that He was not instructing His hearers in the authorship, but only in the contents of the Psalm; that He assumed "the Davidic authorship accepted generally at that time"; and upon that authorship and that alone of this Psalm based all the questions with which He confounded the Jews. If our Lord knew that David did not write that Psalm, how could He in sincerity and fairness have asked the question He did? If He did not know that David was not the author, and was as much deceived about it as the Jews, what becomes of His Divine Mastership? When Jesus is made to be in error, or is represented as ignorant in a matter that He claims to know, what is that but a profane impugning of His sole claim to be, The Truth?

This one instance of the unholy and un-Christian methods of the higher critics, should be enough to discredit the whole system that they have borrowed from certain Dutch and German scholars, who frankly declared themselves unbelievers in the Supernatural Christ. The entire scheme leads at last to the alternative above indicated.

Either—Christ knew the erroneous notions in respect to the Old Testament, and yet demeaned Himself to use these errors for His ends, or He did not know. He was ignorant of these errors, and so partook of the mistakes and misunderstandings of His contemporaries. In short, if we deny the Davidic authorship of Psalm 110, we shall be bound to say the Blessed Lord spoke either insincerely or ignorantly. And so in its final outcome, this rationalistic theory of the Old Testament dishonors our Lord Christ, either in the matter of His holiness and immaculate righteousness, or in that of His Omniscient Wisdom.

Many good men have been fascinated by this proud and self-exalting theory of Biblical criticism, boasting as it does of supreme scientific scholarship, and of a monopoly of critical sense, while they do not follow whither the continental authors of the scheme were finally led and whither the theory logically leads, i. e., to a denial of the Divine Nature of Jesus the Christ.

But they should take care lest they be aiding and abetting a movement that in reason can not stop till it has stript of His sole dignities: "Him that is holy, Him that is true, Him that hath the key of David, Him that openeth and none shall shut and that shutteth and none shall open."

DR. MACHEN'S STAND FOR CONSERVATISM AT PRINCETON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

The address of Dr. J. Gresham Machen at the opening of Princeton Theological Seminary's one hundred and sixteenth year shows more forcefully than ever that Dr. Machen and his conservative associates, who make up a majority of the present board of directors of the Seminary, do not intend to surrender easily to a liberal administration the institution at Princeton which has been outstanding for over a century in the hands of a conservative governing board.

That the reorganization of the Seminary, which was first proposed at the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Baltimore, 1926, and further considered at the San Francisco General Assembly last June, may yet be averted is the hope of Dr. Machen, who believes that the laymen of the Church would, if correctly advised about what is taking place, resent the methods employed by the Assembly's committee, and bring pressure to bear in favor of a conservative administration for the Seminary.

The situation at Princeton, as it is generally understood, arose from a conflict between the conservative majority and a liberal minority, the two parties having radically different views with regard to fundamental principles of doctrine. At the General Assembly in 1926 it was first proposed that Princeton Theological Seminary be reorganized, and the Assembly this year considered the action further. The proponents of reorganization plead that this move is desired to bring about smoother work by the governing body of the Seminary. Dr. Machen insists that it is for the purpose of taking control of the Seminary from these who have a conservative view of the fundamentals of Christianity and placing it in the hands of the liberal group which is now in the minority. Of the plan he says, in his address:

"The proposed reorganization of Princeton Theological Seminary is not a move for smoother working among those who in principle are agreed, but will have the result of putting the present conservative majority out of control of the institution and putting into power a minority that represents, with regard to the fundamental questions of policy, a radically different point of view.

"Thus, if the plan is finally put into operation by the General Assembly next May, the well-known conservative institution which has had a continuous existence for over a hundred years, will be destroyed, and we shall have at Princeton a new institution of an entirely different type.

"Such action would, we think, be exceedingly unjust. If thorough-going conservatives or evangelicals are to be tolerated in the Presbyterian Church at all, they should be allowed to have at least one theological seminary that clearly and unequivocally represents their view.

"If the body of the Church had the slightest inkling of what is really going on, a great injustice could still be averted and Princeton could be saved at the meeting of the General Assembly next May."

Dr. Machen's renewed expression of hope that the Seminary of Princeton may continue unchanged bears out his action in declining the presidency of the Bryan Memorial University at Dayton, Tenn., which was offered him last June, just after the General Assembly had failed for the second time to confirm his appointment to the Stuart professorship of apologetics and Christian ethics. Acknowledging as an honor the offer of the presidency of the fundamentalist institution memorializing William Jennings Bryan, Dr. Machen explained his refusal of the position by stating that Princeton Theological Seminary was passing this year through a crisis and he did not feel that he could honorably leave his post there at the present time.

It is interesting to note that the present enrollment of the Seminary is the largest in its history with the exception of the year 1895.

SHALL THE SAINTS OF GOD KNOW EACH OTHER IN THE LIFE BEYOND?

By the Reverend James M. Gray, D. D.

President of the Moody Bible Institute.

IS there any more interesting or absorbing question than this for those who, by God's grace, may call themselves His saints? Saints, not in the sense of their own sanctity of life and conduct, though they are ever striving after that, but saints in the sense that, through their acceptance of Jesus Christ by faith, they have been forever set aside for God by the operation of His Holy Spirit.

Is it possible that they shall recognize one another in the life beyond? It is not primarily a question of immortality, of which they have no doubt, on the testimony of God's Word. Nor is it a question of the resurrection and glorification of their bodies with Christ, of that they have no doubt, but something still more intimate. Shall we in any sense renew in heaven happy associations broken off on earth? Shall we know each other in that

"Sweet and blessed country
That eager hearts expect"?

I.

Certainly there is an argument in the affirmative to be gathered from the almost universality of this belief, this desire, this hope. There is not a cemetery in any Christian land where some memorial stone does not record it, nor a funeral hymn in which it is not mentioned or assumed, nor a death-bed of a passing saint where it does not linger on the lips of some sympathizing friend.

And the pagans somehow felt it as well as we. The great poets of classic times, and historians and philosophers have talked about it and transmitted their speculations about it to later generations.

Now one man's consciousness of such a feeling or such a hope is not a premise on which to build an argument, of course, but what of an almost universal consciousness? Is there any idea thus substantiated, i. e., by a universal consciousness, which can be shown to be untrue? Man may falsify or be deceived, but what about humanity as such? We say there is a God because all men believe it. We say there is a future life because all men believe it, or nearly all. And so we Christians at least, say, that in that life there will be a re-uniting of several ties of earth because all of us believe it. Are there any of us not prepared to make the poet's words our own, and say,

"Thou wilt not sever us, O Lord our God,
In Thy blest mansions.
All Thy blood hath bought shall come
With Thee; and each we loved and knew, and mourned for here,
Shall rise upon our view in brighter, lovelier form, akin to Thine;
Thy work Lord Jesus! perfect, pure, divine!
Thus re-united, through eternal days
Our joy shall be Thyself; our theme Thy praise!"

But besides the universality of this belief there is the reasonableness of it which affords an argument in its favor. For example, if there be such a thing as the resurrection of the dead, and surely we believe that or we are not Christians at all, then what kind of a resurrection can it be if not one of individuals? Was not Job right, in other words, when he exclaimed, "In my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another" (Job 19:26, 27)?

Now we have not gone a long way in the recognition of our friends in the future life, when we are thus persuaded that we shall recognize ourselves? Does not consciousness of our own identity carry with it that of the identity of others whose lives have been more or less woven into ours? Has not their identity gone to make our identity what it is?

Then there is another thought. What is the object or purpose of our resurrection? Is it not to afford an opportunity to be judged according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or bad? Is it not that the righteous may be rewarded and the unrighteous punished? But how can we be subjects of rewards or punishments unless we are conscious of the earthly deeds of commission or omission which made us deserving of either the one or the other? And then, if we are conscious of our own conduct to this extent, must we not for that reason be also conscious of the conduct of others who in great measure made our conduct what it was? I am quoting here what another has said upon this question:

"If at the judgment-day," says he, "I am called upon to answer for a particular injury done my neighbor, does it not seem reasonable that I must recollect that neighbor? If I have called to mind an act of love, must I not remember the person I have benefited? Are not these two ideas inseparable? But if it seem essential that I thus should recollect those with whom I had only casual intercourse on earth, how much more apparent that I must recollect those with whom I was connected in the closest fellowship, and who exercised the most efficacious influences on my character and called forth and kept the best affections of my heart?"

II.

But the foregoing argument, if one may call it such, is one which in philosophy or logic might be designated the a priori argument. Something that is assumed beforehand and without sufficient evidence. But that which, to the Christian mind at least, brings the strongest and the only convincing argument is the Word of God. "What saith the Scripture?" For the Christian the Scriptures must determine everything.

In replying to the question therefore, as to what the Scripture says, we pass over the Old Testament which says very little about the life beyond, and call attention to the utterances of our Lord recorded in the Gospels. And even these are incidental rather than direct, for Christ's mission into the world was not so much to reveal the future life of the blessed as to secure for them a title to secure it. And yet we have an argument for heavenly recognition, have we not, in our Lord's reply to Martha at the grave of Lazarus (John 11)?

In her distress she said to Him, "Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died". And He consoles her by the answer, "Thy brother shall rise again"! Now what real comfort would this have been to Martha had she not understood Jesus to mean that her brother would rise again to be her brother? It must be kept in mind that Martha did not know just then that Jesus would immediately restore her brother; her thoughts were "in the resurrection at the last day", the record says. And when our Lord added, "I am the resurrection and the life", and what did He mean to teach, if not that in Him there existed, even then, that life which is the basis of ties that death cannot sever?

Then there is something of a parallel to this in what our Lord taught in the parable of the unjust steward (Luke 16), where He held up the example of the steward's world prudence to teach a like spiritual truth, saying, "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations". This is generally understood to mean that those saints who have befriended other saints by their material gifts and thus made them their friends, shall by them be welcomed into the heavenly world. "It is a very beautiful thought," says Dr. Cummings in his well-known work on the parables, "that those whom you have blessed with your means, the distant heathen you have saved by your ministry, the mourners you have comforted by your sympathies, and who have preceded you to heaven, will stand at its vestibule and welcome you with their applause, recognizing the grace in you that blessed them, while they give to God the glory and honor of your possessing it."

In a word let me say, that whenever the Saviour alludes to the heavenly world, is it not always a world which, in its social features, resembles this world except that it is holy and free from sin? Is it not so in that tender passage in His farewell address to His disciples, where He comforts them by saying that in His Father's house are many mansions where He goes to prepare a place for them? (John 14:1-3). Have we not here the idea of a heavenly family returned from a strange land, and now living together amid the hallowed endearments of an eternal home? But how can this take place without a mutual recognition?

A few examples from the writings of Paul and we must pass on. Writing to the Corinthians, Paul says: "Knowing that He which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you" (2 Cor. 4:15). "Us with you." Here the idea of recollection seems very clearly implied. What sense would be in that expression otherwise?

Writing to the Philippians, Paul says: "That I may rejoice in the day of Christ that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain" (Phil. 2:12-16). It would appear that he must meet and know them "in the day of Christ" in order to rejoice over them and perceive by their salvation that he had not labored in vain.

We have practically the same expression, only somewhat enlarged, in 1 Thessalonians 2:19, 20: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at His coming? For ye are our glory and joy." To quote another here, "It is evident that the apostle expected to recognize them in their changed bodies" (Phil. 3:20, 21).

But one of the fullest passages of the kind is that in the fourth chapter of the last-mentioned epistle (1 Thessalonians), verses 13-18. The young converts at Thessalonica were sorrowing immoderately because of the death of some of their loved ones. It was not that they doubted the future life or the resurrection of the body, or even the return of our Lord, but they feared that those who departed this life before His return would be at a disadvantage in the matter of time in entering into the glory of the kingdom. Paul assures them however, that the opposite would rather be the case, and he does so in language which has become one of the richest inheritances of the Church. We quote it in full:

> "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.
> "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.
> "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.
>
> "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first:
> "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.
> "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

The comfort here referred to is that of the resurrection of course, but a resurrection in the broadest and sweetest sense of the word. Not an apparent coming together again, but a reunion of severed bonds. Indeed, what other idea of the resurrection was capable of affording them comfort under such circumstances?

III.

It goes without saying, of course, that such a subject as this raises questions and presents difficulties, very many of them indeed. But there is probably no question that can be raised and no difficulty that can be presented, which has not been met and answered over and over again by those theologians and teachers of the Bible who in earlier days have dealt with the subject.

An obvious objection is found in Christ's answer to the Sadducees often quoted, in Matthew 22:23-33. "In the resurrection," said He, " they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven." Does not this indicate an obliteration of all earthly relationships, it is asked? By no means. Because we shall not marry in heaven is not a reason that we shall not know each other there. The Sadducees denied that there would be a resurrection and gave Christ a test case of a woman who had had seven husbands, whose wife of them would she be in the resurrection? He might have replied, "Your objection amounts to nothing, for in the resurrection there is no recollection of earthly friendships, and husbands and wives will not know each other there." But He does not say that. He says rather there will be no marrying there, for the reason that "They are as the angels of God in heaven", which according to Luke means that "Neither can they die any more". There will be no marrying in heaven because people do not die there and there is no need of the marriage relation for the reparation of losses. But there is not anything in this to show that the affections formed in this relationship on earth, so far as they were sanctified by grace, shall not be continued in the heavenly life.

But an objection of still greater weight is this: That if we shall know our friends in heaven, then we shall miss some who will not be there; and would not that introduce pain and distress into the future life of happiness? One must speak softly here, for the thought is a very tender one for most of us. Therefore we simply raise the question, What about the blessed Saviour Himself? The Saviour is happy in heaven is He not, and with a full knowledge of the condition of the lost, and yet how He loved them! He did for them what none of us would do or could do, for our kindred while they were still enemies to us. He died the painful and ignominious death upon the cross for them. He suffered the loss of His heavenly Father's face for them. Does such a fact help us to meet this difficulty in any way? Does it suggest to us that all ties on this earth that have not been formed in Christ, and which are not sustained and pervaded by His life, shall be dropped and left behind when we go hence? All ties, that is, as between saints and sinners, and believers and unbelievers, no matter what their human relationship may be? You recall doubtless what Matthew records of Christ (Matt. 12: 46-50):

> "While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother, and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him.
> "Then one said to him, Behold. thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee.
>
> "But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?
> "And he stretched forth his hand towards his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my children!
> "For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister, and mother."

As another expresses it, "In heaven, our love for the creature will be subordinated to our love for the Creator, and our wills shall be absorbed in God's will. It is not difficult to believe that for this reason the remembrance of the lost will fade from our memories forever".

The following is from Bishop Mant:

> "Fear not the prospect of the realms of woe
> Shall mar thy bliss, or thence sad thoughts arise
> To blunt thy sense of heavenly ecstasies.
> There, if thy heart with warm devotion glow,
> Meet for thy place, 'twill solace thee to know
> No friend of thine, 'mid those keen agonies,
> In that dark prison-house of torment lies;
> For none is there but is of God the foe,
> An alien thus from thee. The ties of old,
> And earth's most sacred bonds, are but a twine
> Of gossamer, compared with what is owed
> To Him, the Lord of all! On Him recline;
> He shall thy heart of every care unload,
> He bid thy day with cloudless luster shine."

IV.

No time is left for what the sermonizer of other days would call the application of this simple homily. But, after all, what application is required beyond that which every serious listener has been making for himself as we have gone along together? Have we not been brought under the power of heavenly realities as we have thus meditated on this theme? Have we not been thinking also, and very seriously, about the kind of friendships we ought to form in the present if they would be continued in the future? Oh, what a strange recklessness prevails among us in this respect! How many of our closest friendships in this life are formed without any reference to Jesus Christ! How can we longer be guilty of this folly!

And then, as closely related to that thought take this other, namely, what a powerful appeal we have here for a life of godliness! What could trouble a man more than to think that because of his sins he shall never see his mother, or his wife, or his darling child in the great beyond?

Can any of us who are still impenitent and unbelieving remain any longer so? "What shall I do to be saved?" must be the heart-cry of every listener who is still unsaved. And the answer is such a simple one! "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thine house". It is so easy to believe. It is so easy to say, "Lord, I am the sinner whom Jesus came to save; I now receive Him as my Saviour and by Thy grace, I will henceforth confess and serve Him as my Lord". Who of my listeners will sincerely say that now, and thus convert this Easter in the earth to an Easter in the soul? May God help you by His grace to do it.

CRIME AND IMMORALITY

(A Recent Editorial in The Christian Index.)

II.

Salacious Publications.

WE have lately had our say about salacious novels, magazines and newspapers; but this discussion requires reference to this field of reading matter as one of the chief breeding places of crime. The young person who reads these inflamed confessional stories, involving criminal conduct at every turn, is fired into a frenzy which often results in immediate overthrow of his or her restraints. And in this connection it must also be admitted that certain yellow newspapers in this country are aiding and abetting in the breeding of crime by their criminal exploitation of our gullible public opinion. The manner in which the average crime is portrayed by our sensational newspapers does more to increase crime than almost any one thing we know. It is stated by the Boston Transcript, one of the really great newspapers of this nation, that a certain New York paper is solely responsible for the revival of this terrible Hall-Mills murder trial in New Jersey. The recent daily harangue which we had to look at on every front page regarding the contemptible Browning trial in New York is but typical of the part which the average newspapers plays in the furtherance of crime.

The Automobile.

The automobile is one of the subtlest of all the sources of crime. More girls are led into sin in night joy rides in automobiles than in any other way. There is afforded a sense of seclusion which often results in tragedy. And the automobile furnishes further breeding place for crime in providing quick transportation for highwaymen, bootleggers, and other modern criminals. Automobiles are great blessings when used by good people, but terrible instruments for sin when the devil sits at the wheel.

But enough has been said with regard to the breeding places of crime. We pass by the school room where false teaching may sometimes come in for its deadly work in forming wrong notions which lead to criminal fruitage and to unmentionable remorse. We also pass by the matter of the breakdown of the home life in many instances as another source of crime. The child witnesses the attitude of the father and the mother and either revolts or is convinced that certain things are all right if you can get by with them. But we must pass on.

Failure of Justice.

The above sources for much of our crime are allowed to continue their awful work and criminals are allowed to go unpunished in many instances because of the breakdown of our courts. This is a serious thing to say, but it is true. The most damaging practice in Georgia today is the suspended sentence practice which many courts follow. To begin with, the State of Georgia does not recognize the legality of a suspended sentence. There is no ground for it. The Supreme Court has so decided. There is authority for a probation sentence, but we are talking about the suspended sentence.

If space would permit, we could go on indefinitely to cite case after case in the Fulton courts, and in other counties, where criminals have been turned loose by the courts on suspended sentence. In the rarest number of instances can you find any proof that the suspended sentence is a good thing. Still the judges continue to grant them without authority and without justification in results. We expect to carry in a later issue a detailed account of the manner in which the Fulton courts defeat justice by the use of the suspended sentence. In order that the reader may get clearly in mind what is meant by the suspended sentence, one case may be cited for illustration. Last week a youngster named Harry Evans in Atlanta was arrested with a car which he had stolen from Mr. W. D. Farley. This same Harry Evans had stolen a car ten days before and driven it to Florida and wrecked it. He was arrested for the first theft and brought before a superior court judge in Atlanta. He pled guilty and was sentenced to two years in the chain gang and the sentence was suspended. That very night he went out and stole Mr. Farley's car!

You are not going to break up this wave of crime until the trial juries and the judges do their duty. This business of turning criminals scot-free just because they are sons of our "best families" is one of the most ridiculous pieces of insanity any nation ever practiced. Not only does justice fail because of suspended sentences by the courts, but in many cases after a criminal is convicted and sent to the chain gang a rich father or relative comes along and offers a cash payment which gets the release of the criminal without justification in fact.

A Negro gets in a chicken house and steals a hen or two, or into a smokehouse and nabs a ham, or into the potato hill and steals a peck or so of food for his family, and he goes to the chain gang six months, and perhaps should go. A slick-headed, vagrant son of one of our "first citizens" takes a notion to go on a joy ride. He steals an automobile, holds up a filling station for money with which to buy the party some bootleg liquor, drives at breakneck speed wherever he wants to go, violates every law within his reach, and when the court fixes his sentence which should be ten years, the "prominent people" gather about the judges and declare that the contemptible sheik is one of "our dearest boys" and point to what it will mean if he is put off out there with those "criminals", and the weak-kneed judge glances over the list of petitioners and recognizes several "brethren" who might throw a precinct or two into his opponent's column in the approaching election, and he trembles and squirms and decides to give the criminal one year on a suspended sentence. And that very sort of thing is responsible for the drift which politics, municipal, state and national, has taken today. Look at the terrible spectacle of Illinois, Abraham Lincoln's state, submitting to the dictation of the utility corporations in the election to the United States Senate of this man Frank Smith. Thanks to Jim Reed and a few others who have kept him from being seated. And look at Pennsylvania with its present mess of Vare as United States Senator. Benjamin Franklin's state! We had just as well quit trying to fool ourselves like that.

And we all known how justice has been defeated by the growing tendency of prison commissions and governors in pardoning people who should suffer for their crimes. The farce out there in Texas where that Ferguson woman pardoned 3,595 criminals is enough to make every citizen in America hang his head in shame. It is estimated that there are five hundred criminals in Atlanta today who have been pardoned and released by unworthy measures from the penitentiary and chain gang.

Here we are, surrounded on every hand by maddening reports of increasing crime. If we will open our eyes, we can see the breeding places of most of this crime. We have the necessary machinery at hand to regulate and clean out all such places. We have courts in which to try criminals. Our one great need is leadership—men and women with enough courage, plus enough public interest, to get into the fight for better citizenship and fight until these crooks who now wear police uniforms and these scheming politicians who sit on the bench and defeat justice, and these professional jurors who hang around courthouses every Monday to be drawn so they can get their part of the drag, are all displaced and in their places men are elected and appointed who are willing to suffer, if need be, to bring back order and respect for law in this nation. That is what we need.

We do not need to waste a lot more time trying to diagnose our situation. The present willingness to look the facts in the face is sufficient proof of our ability to see the one answer to the problem. We have got to get back to first principles. Our preachers must lead in the movement. If they will reclaim their place of leadership as prophets, declaring the whole counsel of God, speaking the truth in love, pointing dying men to a Saviour who has died for their redemption, holding up the consequences of sin, mediating men to God—if the preachers will give less of their time to puttering around with every sort of man-made uplift affair and get back on their throne as the prophets of God, declaring that the wages of sin is death and proclaiming the eternal life which awaits all who will come to Jesus—if they will do that, we will already be on the way to a better day. And if the teachers of the land—the Sunday-school teachers and the day school teachers—if they will put aside the froth and bubble of all these didapper methods and movements which modern psychology has thrust upon us—and get back to their rightful place as guides along the way toward ultimate truth, pointing their pupils to the curves in the road, to the stones in the way, and also to the beauties of field and hill and the unchanging goal ahead, if they will do that, the second battle will be won. And if the newspapers and the writers of books and magazine articles and the authors of motion picture scenarios would take a whopping purgative and cleanse their systems of some of the dirt and poison which is now despoiling the public opinion of our land, the third battle would be won. And if the duly elected public officials of municipal, county and state and national governments would quit playing politics and get down to business, firing every man under them who is playing into the hands of bootleggers, gamblers, whoremongers, thieves, robbers and murderers, another battle would be won.

Oh, but you are saying, why don't you stop this if, it is business! Are you saying that? No, you are not saying that. You know, dear friend, that we have come to the time when we've got to do it, that's all. If the preachers do not get back to the Bible, our churches are gone. If the teachers do not quit their speculations and get back to the fundamentals, our schools and colleges are gone. If the editors and authors do not get their eyes lifted to the levels of the needs of humanity and cease this nauseating blasphemy, we are ruined. If the government is not ridded of crooks in public office, democracy is gone.

Mr. Newton Baker said recently in Chicago:

"Today, instead of making the world safe for democracy, we must make our cities safe for ourselves to live in. To do this we need to organize public opinion in such a way as to overcome apathy for crime conditions and the maudlin sympathy displayed for the criminal."

Too strong! No. And what he said in Chicago recently, we all need to say to our own hearts today and tomorrow and right on till we get our own lives toned up for this struggle, this mean struggle which is now on us. Will you not pray tonight before you sleep for courage, for wisdom, for guidance in this fight? Will you not open your Bible this day, this night, and let God speak to you? Will you not pray tonight before you sleep for courage, for wisdom may come to be, in putting down this wave of anarchy which is now gaining ground so rapidly in our beloved land?

Too Bad, Isn't It?

Now comes Mr. Ben Lindsey, until recently a very famous juvenile judge out in Colorado, and now deposed by order of the courts because of complaint registered by his opponent in the race, declared that he didn't say it. It seems that the expressions of resentment of Mr. Lindsey's wild preachments in "The Red Book" which are reaching the ears of the Denver folks are of such character as to cause them to inquire of their bright ex-judge if he meant it like it sounded and if there was anything he would like to say about this mess into which he has got himself and his home town. To which he eloquently replies:

"They misunderstand me."

Do his critics misunderstand him? While the English language lends itself to fearful ambiguity, it is not likely that a man of Mr. Lindsey's experience in dealing with the public would have so far overstepped the use of intelligible phraseology as to have allowed himself to be wholly misunderstood.

It is too bad for a man in public life to be forced to explain. And it will not help Mr. Lindsey out of his predicament by railing at those who have condemned his attacks upon marriage by calling them bigots. He consoles himself with the belief that "when the calm comes from this storm of intolerance the real worth-while thinking people will not permit my critics to visit upon me such punishment for an honest, sincere effort to help humanity".

We are comforted in the fact that Mr. Lindsey has so soon lost the hold which he had upon the thoughtful people of our country. It will no doubt serve to save him as well as defeat the damage which he was calculated to do.

CLERICAL VACATIONS.

Mr. Editor:

I am particularly interested in the article published in your issue of October 1, on page seven by Mr. Langbourne M. Williams. I congratulate him on the stand he has taken in regard to clerical vacations.

It takes a big man in this world to admit he is wrong. It is very easy for us to put off our mistakes on the other fellow, or when we have some one bring to our mind the side of a question we have not considered, and when they convince us that we were wrong to admit it.

I have been reading the articles that have been appearing in your paper in regard to this much discussed subject and I agree with some of the clergymen entirely on same, but we must not lose sight of the fact that the Episcopal Church, like all other Churches, has two classes of clergymen—those who deserve vacations because they work during the year in looking after their congregations, and the others who play to the grandstand and do very little work, but are always contending they should have two or three months' vacation during the summer.

I agree heartily with you that no Church, if it is possible to do so, should be closed up while a rector is taking a vacation. There may be some exceptions to this rule in remote places where it is impossible to have services and where there is no layman to take them, but I venture to say these places are seldom found.

Along this line, let me say that I think one of the greatest mistakes that the majority of our clergymen make is that they do not do enough visiting among the men of the parish in their places of business. I have been in towns and have talked to communicants of the Episcopal Church and they have stated to me that they never have seen their rector in their office since he has been rector of their parish. Pastoral visiting is one of the most important parts in Church life and the clergyman who spends a great deal of his time in this work is going to get results. This is very trying on a clergyman and the one who follows this system, as well as studying a great deal at home keeping up with his reading matter so that he can preach sermons that are uplifting on Sunday morning, deserves a full two or three months' vacation each year and I do not believe you will find a vestry or any parish who would object to such a man taking that long a time or object to getting some one to supply while he is away.

One of the great troubles with our Church today is that we need more laymen to get interested in the Church work and not be afraid to express themselves as to how they feel in regard to the parish, their rector and in vestry meetings. I have heard vestrymen talk and make criticisms in regard to clergymen and when I have asked them if they ever talked to their rectors personally about it, they would answer in the negative. It seems to me we should not hesitate to talk to our rector in regard to matters pertaining to Church life as frankly as we sometimes do to others on the outside.

I admire your paper very much and get a great deal of good by reading same every week and want to commend you for the stand you are taking. I hope you will continue to keep up the good work.

DARWIN AND BARNES.

Mr. Editor:

You have had a number of letters expressing appreciation of the strengthening stand you have taken on fundamentalism, but I want to add mine, and I am glad you welcome these assurances of your paper having thoughtful, interested readers.

That the theological doctrine of man's fall has been "shot to pieces" by Darwinism, as asserted by Bishop Ernest W. Barnes, Bishop of Birmingham, in a recent sermon (?) in Westminster Abbey, is so absurd that it hardly seems necessary to controvert it, but there are minds which are fruitful soil, uncertain, yet anxious to believe what is true, therefore, the defenders of the faith must be instant to meet such assertions and render them innoduous.

I write not as one having made profound research, but I seem to recall having read Darwin disclaimed the truth of his viewes before his death; probably the soul of him, when he felt the hour approaching for a change of worlds, sensed the need of a development not deemed necessary according to his theory of evolution. Surely the great first Cause could have caused to be a man adapted to his crude environment, like the cave man, and still with the power of creating through thought an improvement in his environment, he might have been sinless in the beginning and afterward sinned, even as men do today, and God, in His mercy, has sent him an exemplar, a man to show him the way to spiritual power. He might have advanced in skill through necessity, and, the use of the reasoning facilities, and in overcoming sin by the spiritual light given through Christ, that would not have made the Old Testament "folk-lore", but, just as fundamentalists regard it, a record of the progress of the race in spiritual development. It does not sound as if Bishop Barnes has ever experienced any consciousness of spiritual understanding or communion with the Father, if no such light ever of burdens, or Comforting Guide is known to him he is to be pitied; but not so much so as to condone his wrecking expressions while clothed, apparently, with the robes of righteousness and empowered by the Church founded on the Bible and through its ministry. Bishop Joseph Schrembs of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Cleveland, said truly: "It is difficult to see how a man holding such principles can still proclaim himself a believer in Christianity."

Why does he wear clerical garb? We can read moral philosophy and about the researches of science and get these through lectures. A man does not have to be ordained to give them. He could not have thought the faith which erected Westminster Abbey could be affected by his little mind? "A little learning is a dangerous things"—dangerous to the learned. There were voices that breathed o'er Eden, they breathe over the world today, and now, as then, the rise and fall of depend upon to which we listen.

Sincerely yours,
L. M. MITCHELL.

WORTH THE PRICE.

Mr. Editor:

Please change my address from W. H. Cosby, Sieling Home, Carroll Station, to 2206 Maryland Avenue, Baltimore. I wrote you to this effect in August, but you have not made the change. I do not want to miss a number as I enjoy the Editorials as I have not done in my forty years as a subscriber, and your correspondents are so much better than ever. The sermon by the Lord Bishop of Liverpool alone is worth a year's subscription. That is the kind of Church I have in mind when I say "I believe in the Holy Catholic Church". May your tribe increase.

VALUE RECEIVED.

Mr. Editor:

There is no paper to which I send the subscription price with as much joy and feeling of value received, as I do when mailing this check to The Southern Churchman

A WARNING.

Mr. Editor:

May I bring to the notice of Church people the following: "Clergy are warned against a man calling himself Robert Clayton, with written recommendations from several sea captains, who claims to have been confirmed at St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, Maryland. He is wanted for a theft in Columbus, Ohio."

The theft referred to above was the looting of a filling station at which he was the attendant.

A SUGGESTION.

Mr. Editor:

May I suggest that rectors of parishes, before admitting to the chancels of our Churches, priests, bishops or archbishops who claim to be Eastern Orthodox or Old Catholic, should get into touch with the Foreign Born Americans Division, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

W. C. EMHARDT,
Secretary Committee on Ecclesiastical Relations.
New York.

The wonder of the life of Jesus is this—and you will find it so, if you have ever taken your New Testament and tried to make it the rule of your daily life—that there is not a single action that you are called upon to do of which you need to be, of which you will be in any serious doubt for ten minutes as to what Jesus Christ, if He were here, Jesus Christ being here, would have done under those circumstances, and with the material upon which you are called to act. The soul that takes in Jesus' Word, the soul that through the words of Jesus enters into the very person of Jesus, the soul that knows Him as its daily presence and its daily law—it never hesitates.—Phillips Brooks.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

LESSON NO. 5.

TOPIC—"THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN SALVATION AND REWARDS.

To avoid confusion in dealing with these two subjects, which should really be looked upon as separate, one from the other, we are to remember that salvation is absolutely free and a present possession given to all who receive it; i. e., being the new life imparted by the Holy Spirit to every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ (Josn 3:15). It is called "eternal life", because it belongs to the past, as well as future life of the Eternal One.

Rewards on the other hand are to be conferred by our Lord at His Coming, in recognition of the believer's service. We need classify but a few Scriptures to enable us to at once make this important distinguishment.

1. The gift of God is eternal life.—Rom. 6:23.
2. For by grace are ye saved through faith.; not of yourselves; it is the gift of God.—Eph. 2:8.
3. Not of works, lest any man should boast.—Eph. 2:9.
4. Whosoever believeth with . . . shall have everlasting life.—John 3:16.
5. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.—John 3:36.
6. He that believeth hath life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life.—John 5:24.
   (Note the three-fold assurance.)
7. Thy faith hath saved thee.—Luke 7:50.
8. If thou knewest the gift of God.—John 4:10.

From the above and other Scriptures we might quote, we thus see that the one condition to receive Eternal Life is faith and belief, yet so many after meeting God's only requirement for their salvation, refuse to accept God's word as to their new standing in His sight. Our Lord finished the work that was to be done, through His sacrificial death, and paid the price of our redemption.—1 Peter 1:18, 19.

On the other hand, what saith the Lord as to service, fruit-bearing, and rewards of the believer.

1. Works a product of faith.—Jas. 1:18.
2. Fruit bearing, is a condition of abiding.—John 15:2-6.
3. Fruit of the Spirit.—Gal. 6:22.
4. Every believer has a spirit endowed capacity.—1 Cor. 12:7, 11.
5. The surrendered life a factor.—Rom. 12:1-21.
6. All believers are privileged to be fellow.—1 Cor. 3:
6. All believers are privileged to be fellow-laborers with God, through Christ Jesus.—1 Cor. 3:9-11.
7. We should maintain good works, since through mercy He saved us.—Titus 3:5, 8.
8. Faithful work rewarded hereafter.—Luke 9:17.
9. Even a cup of cold water is noticed.—Matt. 10:42.
10. Every one shall receive his own reward.—1 Cor. 3:8.
11. Every man's work shall be revealed.—1 Cor. 9:13.
12. A reward even, for those who love His appearing.—2 Tim. 4:8.
13. Some, while saved as by fire, shall through neglect, lose all reward.—1 Cor. 3:15.
14. Rewards will be distributed at our Lord's coming, when He meets the saints in the air.—Rev. 22:12; 1 Thess. 4:16, 17.

WHAT A WONDERFUL SALVATION!

The Great Commission

DEATH OF AN EARLY JAPANESE MISSIONARY.

The Rev. Theodosius Stevens Tyng died on October 19 at the home of his son, the Rev. Dudley Tyng, in Barrington, R. I. Mr. Tyng was one of the early missionaries to Japan, going there in 1878. He lived to see the first boy he baptized become the first Japanese bishop.

Mr. Tyng was born in Columbus, Ohio, in 1849. He studied at Kenyon, Columbia, and the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., and was ordained priest in 1874. After five years' parish work, he went to Japan where, with intervals abroad to recover his health, he served for more than thirty years, returning to this country in 1909. He translated St. Luke's Gospel into Japanese. He was rector of St. Mark's, Ashland, N. H., from 1909 to 1919. Since that time he has lived in Rhode Island.

Bishop Motoda, writing in 1909 of his own early experiences, says:

"Twenty-seven years ago I saw for the first time in my life an American gentleman, with the striking features characteristic of a seiyojni (a Western-Ocean man), to whom I was introduced by a friend of mine as a poor country boy who had come to Osaka to study the English language. This gentleman was no other than the Rev. Theodosius S. Tyng, a missionary of the American Church. He kindly took me and put me in St. Timothy's School as a school servant. . . . . At the end of a year I with another student was baptized by Mr. Tyng. We were the first fruits of St. Timothy's School. . . . . Later I was sent by Mr. Tyng to Wakayama to work as a catechist Here I had a very interesting experience, never to be forgotten. There was no church building then, so we had to hold services in a small house attached to a Japanese hotel. The congregation was very small. To introduce Christianity to the people, one day we held a mass meeting in a theatre, the largest hall we could find in the town. The hall was full; 1,500 people were reported to be present. They listened very quietly to the first two speakers, but when the third appeared on the platform a Buddhist monk got up and began to make a disturbance, then another followed and then the whole crowd got excited. It seemed that every thing was pre-arranged to break up our meeting. The brave Mr. Tyng was the chief object of attack. We sent for a policeman, but it was no use, so we had to close the meeting. The following day we made another trial, but this time was still worse. Lights were put out and stones flew in the dark. It was utterly impossible to continue the meeting, so we retreated to our home again, being escorted by our sympathetic friends. This meeting, however, proved to be a sufficient introduction of Christianity to the people of Wakayama. The congregation increased and inquirers multiplied. One of the men who were present at the meeting to hear us, and was struck with a stone on his forehead in the dark, became the first catechumen and later the founder of the Church of the Saviour in Wakayama."

Here and in many other places, "Mr. Tyng fought like a lion. He was sympathetic, energetic and full of tact. A large portion of the Japanese clergy now at work came through his influence, directly and indirectly".

JAPANESE WORK IN THE DIOCESE OF OLYMPIA.

The Diocese of Olympia uses most of the missionary appropriation it receives from the National Council for the development of two Japanese projects, in Seattle and in the White River Valley. Bishop Huston writes, in regard to last year's work here:

"The Japanese work in both instances is flourishing. The work in the White River Valley is pretty largely carried on among non-Christian Japanese. The property is owned and held in trust by St. James' Parish, Kent, and the work is carried on under the direction of the rector. The Rev. Paul R. Ito is the Japanese deacon working under his direction. The Japanese children, who, of course, attend the public schools, come to Mr. Ito and his wife for daily afternoon instruction in the Japanese language. For this work Mr. Ito is paid by the White River Valley Japanese Association who desire to have their children learn something of their own tongue. This gives us contact with many families which are non-Christian, but whose kindly feeling toward our work is a constant spur to us and constitutes, as it were, an investment in human nature. Mr. Ito also conducts Sunday services and Sunday schools for the Christian Japanese, and there is a flourishing Young People's Fellowship for the boys and girls of high-school age.

"The Seattle work is that of St. Peter's Mission and consists of two Sunday Schools under a Japanese priest, the Rev. Kennosuki Shoji. They are crowded to capacity and in fact are incapable of expansion unless additional room is furnished. We have under way, therefore, a large building project looking toward the erection of a new church and rectory. Sunday-school rooms, etc., for the Japanese work in Seattle, and a portion of the funds, not to exceed $5,000, will also be spent on necessary building extension in the White River Valley. The total sum contemplated for the combined Japanese building program will be upward of $60,000. The Japanese themselves are raising $5,000 toward this sum.

"It is for this Japanese work especially that we crave the prayers, interest and support of the whole Church."

Supplementing the above, Bishop Huston writes, in September, 1927: "We are initiating this month our campaign for the Japanese Building Program mentioned above. Our architectural plans are completed, and our campaign organization practically ready. With the help of a reasonable amount of outside assistance, for which I have already asked, we hope to see these two Japanese Missions adequately provided for in the not distant future."

An interesting leaflet issued by the diocese shows pictures and tells the story of this work. There are 8,700 Japanese in Seattle alone.

CHINESE STUDENTS.

By the Rt. Rev. H. J. Molony, D. D., Bishop of Chekiang.

(Written for the C. M. S. Chinese Student Mission.)

The Chinese student is often misunderstood. We ought to try and understand him, for with him lies the future of China and the part that she will play in world politics. The students of this decade will be the fathers of a new generation and the leaders of China in twenty years' time, and China is the most populous nation in the world.

The Chinese student of today sees his country in a chaotic condition. It ought to be great and prosperous, but it is miserable. It ought to be honorable and honored. but it is treated as semi-barbaric. He knows that it is largely its own fault; it ought to have thrown off its own ills, corruption in public life, opium, banditry, etc., but its efforts to do so have failed and it is still a prey of many evils. It has been subject to many humiliations, its national pride is deeply wounded. So the young Chinese man or woman who reads and thinks is fired with a determination to see China restored and modernized and placed in a position of honor.

The Chinese student is perplexed in his diagnosis of the illness of his Fatherland and rushes after quick remedies. He blames his own rulers; one after another is denounced as a traitor; he distrusts the Japanese, the British, the Russian, all foreigners, even American if they offend. Having tried the experiment of a Republic and being disappointed at the result, he wishes to try the Russian plan of a Communistic State. He denounces the old treaties made with the Foreign Powers by the Manchu Government. He denounces imperialism, capitalism, Christianity, Confucianism. He does not know where to stop in his sweeping condemnations. He acknowledges national faults, but seeks to lay the blame on others. He thinks his country is poisoned from abroad. He is in despair and would try violent remedies to kill or cure.

And meanwhile war lords spoil the sick man's heritage and break up his house, while the young men of the family rush about, crying out for new doctors and buying quack remedies.

Can we not then sympathize with young China?

But the wild young red Chinese politician is not the only type of student; there are multitudes of Chinese young men and women who honestly wish to pursue their studies, prepare themselves for life, and eventually do good to their country. They come of poor industrious families, and the pressure of economic life in China forces them to work hard and take life seriously. They cannot afford to go to America or to Europe—the young man's ambition—so they go to one of the Universities in China or to Japan. Some of these come from Christian homes, but mostly they are from those country homesteads which produce the best class of solid industrious Chinese. They want to finish their education well and to find posts in life where they may help their parents to be comfortable in old age and their younger brothers and sisters to get a good start in life. They do not want to be mixed up with politics, but they will be drawn into it if the political excitement continues, and of course they cannot bear to be considered unpatriotic.

They hardly know what to think on the subject of social ethics, religion and morality. They admire much of the ancient Confucian teaching, but think it out of date. Buddhism is superstitious, Christianity is new and foreign and it is widely "spoken against", though they know that many have joined it.

Our business is to put into the turmoil of the young Chinese heart and mind the message of Christ, with the Bible as its textbook. What China really needs is a vision, and the regeneration of individual character. The past ideals are crumbling and cannot be restored. Much of the old material provided by Confucian ethics can be used in the new building, but China needs a fresh and strong foundation on which to build her new house, and we are sure that we can give it to her in Christ. Her young people need to be changed into "living stones", they need to be freed from those elements of weakness which have done no much harm to their nation in the past, and which will prove fatal under the stress of modern life; and this regeneration can only be found in Christ.

Alas! that some, after finding this, have been caught in the whirlpool of politics and impassioned with anti-foreign feeling; but there are a vast number of Christian men and women quietly going on with their duties in Christian work, in the public services, in trade, in agriculture, waiting for the storm to pass over, when they will prove themselves to be the most reliable section of the community, wise and helpful men and women, the parents of families of still another generation, which, please God, will make China one of the first among the nations.

AMERICAN DOCTOR NEEDED AT ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, TOKYO.

Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, is hard at work upon plans for the permanent buildings. He hopes that construction may begin soon on the first unit. In addition to his professional duties, he is in consultation with architects, engineers, the Tokyo building department and contractors. As St. Luke's Hospital has lost its American superintendent, Dr. Teusler has to carry the additional burdens of this post.

Writing to a friend in the United States, Dr. Teusler says:

"One of the greatest needs connected with this work is an American doctor to be my assistant and take his part in the general work of the staff and the control of the hospital. We must have a man thoroughly well qualified, not only medically but in his personality, to deal with the many problems outside of the actual clinical work which will be turned over to him. He must be a graduate of an A-1 medical school and hospital, preferably an institution thoroughly well known and recognized in Japan, as well as in the United States. He should be proficient in medicine, rather than surgery, and willing to devote a good deal of his time to outside work amongst the foreigners in this community. Special training as an internist and obstetrician would best fit him for our needs.

"The hospital is on a departmental business, and practically every department of medicine is represented, with Japanese physicians in charge. They are well qualified for their work. All are university graduates, and most of them have had training abroad. The presence here in the hospital of a thoroughly well qualified American internist, between twenty-eight and thirty-five years of age, would be most helpful, looked at from the medical standpoint alone. Too much of my time is absorbed in consultations in every department of the hospital, and I find it exceedingly difficult to push aside the constant demands made upon me and concentrate upon construction work that should go forward.

"We want a man of pleasing personality, and one willing to submerge himself for the good of the institution. It is very doubtful whether a young man just out of his college and hospital would be of much use. One with exceptionally good personality might do.

"It would be useless to send anything but an exceptional man for the work. Eight or nine of our chiefs of departments are university men with the best post-graduate study available, either in the United States or England. A second rate man or a man poorly equipped, even from a good university, would find it impossible to hold his position and their respect."

The Department of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, will be glad to supply further information.

Church Intelligence

Provincial Synod.

The Tenth Synod of the Province of Washington was held in Roanoke, Virginia, October 18, 19 and 20, 1927; about three hundred members of the Synod and out-of-town visitors being in attendance.

The session opened in St. John's Church, at four P. M., Tuesday, October 18, with a devotional service conducted by the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware. This was followed by the initial business session and the organization of the Synod, with the Rt. Rev. Wm. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop of West Virginia, and President of Synod in the chair, and the Rev. Thos. J. Bigham as secretary.

The outstanding feature of this Synod was the consideration given to problems relating to schools and colleges under Church influence; and among those present were the headmasters, or other representatives of nearly all of the Church educational institutions in the Province. Joint sessons were held on Wednesday mornng and afternoon when the members of the women's organizations "sat in" with the members of Synod, and addresses were delivered. The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., of Baltimore, took as his subject, "What Has the Church a Right to Expect of the Church Boarding School?" He was followed by the Rev. William G. Thayer, D. D., of St. Mark's School, Southborough, Mass., who took the other side of the question: "What Has the Church Boarding School a Right to Expect of the Church?" Mr. Wm. Howell Church, M. A., Headmaster of St. Alban's School, Washington, D. C., spoke on "The Association of Schools Under Church Influence in the Province of Washington", and the Rev. John W. Walker, Headquarters of Meadowbrook School, Meadowbrook, Penn., had as his subject the question, "Is Belief in God the Foundation Rock of Our System of Education?"

The morning session on Thursday was given over fully to the Social Service Commission, of which the Rt. Rev. Geo. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop of Easton, is Chairman. Miss Emily W. Dinwiddie, Director Children's Bureau, State Board of Public Welfare, Richmond, Virginia, spoke on "Some Child Welfare Problems". Miss Anna B. Pratt, Director White-Williams Foundation, Philadelphia, spoke on the subject: "How the Visiting Teacher Helps Problem Children". The Honorable Clinton Rogers Woodruff, of Philadelphia, discussed, "Protective Social Measures".

Thursday afternoon the program was in charge of the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, D. D., Bishop of Erie, and Chairman of the Commission on Missions. At this time, the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman, Principal of Boone College, Wuchang, China, and Dean of the Divinity School there, made an address on "The Policy of the Department of Missions in Relation to China". And the Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, Warsaw, Virginia, spoke on, "Our Missionary Problem in the Rural Field".

Mass meetings were held in St. John's Church on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings and were attended by splendid congregations. At the Tuesday evening meetings the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, D. D., Canon of the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, Washington, D. C., was the principal speaker, and in the course of an address "On Preaching Emphasis" he stressed the importance of evangelical preaching among the clergy of the Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Arthur M. Sherman on Wednesday evening discussed the present status of our missionary work in China.

The Holy Communion was celebrated on Tuesday and Wednesday mornings, and on these days, the ladies of the Roanoke Churches served breakfast and luncheons to the members of the Synod in the Parish House of St. John's Church.

With the exception of the joint sessions of the Synod above noted, the meetings of the several women's organizations were held at Christ Church and the local motor corps transported the ladies from time to time between Christ Church and St. John's.

Interesting sessions were held by the Woman's Auxiliary; the "Girls' Friendly Society", the "Daughters o fthe King" and the "Church Periodical Club".

An interesting feature of the Synod was the exhibit room. One large room at St. John's being given over entirely for this purpose. The Woman's Auxiliary, the "Girls' Friendly Society", and other organizations had on display materials of various kinds relating to their activities and several of the missions of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia displayed the samples of the various sorts of handiwork in which they are engaged in their respective communities, among these being handsome rugs, counterpanes, etc. Also, carrying out further ideas of increasing interest in Church Schools and colleges in the Province, there were in the exhibit room, catalogues and photographs of practically all of these institutions.

Miss Sallie A. Dean, of Richmond, had charge of the exhibit of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Miss Esther G. Fifield, of New York City, had charge of the exhibit for the Girls' Friendly Society.

Miss Lily Cheston, of Philadelphia, had a splendid exhibit on behalf of the work of the Church Schools' Service Program.

Resolutions.

The following was brought to the Synod of Washington, meeting on October 19, by Bishop Tucker of Southern Virginia. When he began to read the assembly rose and remained standing with bowed heads:

"It is with a sense of profound loss that the Synod of the Third Province misses at this session the presence and inspiration of William Cabell Brown, the late Bishop of Virginia.

There is no one to whom the ministry meant more than to him; who found the joy of his life in the service of Christ. When he came to be the spiritual leader of the Diocese of Virginia, he brought with him the rich experience of many years as a pioneer missionary of the Church.

A man of fervent faith and of loving consecration, he had a well trained mind, rare scholarship, and at the same time, practical wisdom and judgment that made him a logical leader. His work in the National Council, in the House of Bishops and in this Province will bear fruits through years to come. Loyal to the faith as this Church has received it, he had the spirit of Christian fellowship which went out to all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. We shall cherish his memory and thank God for the good example of his faith and life.

Your Committee begs leave to offer the following resolutions and ask that they be adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That the Synod of the Third Province desires to express in its records a loving tribute of respect and admiration for the life and work of William Cabell Brown, Doctor in Divinity, Bishop of Virginia. We would voice our gratitude to God for the service that he rendered to the Church that he loved, realizing that though he has gone to serve in the Church above, his works do follow him here and his name and memory will abide in our hearts.

Resolved, That the members of the Synod of the Third Province convey to the wife and family of Bishop Brown their loving sympathy, praying that God may bless them with the comfort that comes from above, and bring them all together at last in the serene home above."

The presiding officer did not put the question. He said, "The chair declares the resolutions adopted by rising vote of the entire Synod".

Bishop Tuttle Subject of Memorial Window.

In the Church of the Ascension, Mount Vernon, N. Y., an unusual memorial window was dedicated on Sunday, October 9.

The window, which has just been completed by James Powell and Sons, Ltd., of London, is a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland Gazzan Taylor, Jr., and has as its subject the late Presiding Bishop, the Most Rev. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, D. D., who is shown in cope and mitre in the center light. The window, which is the first of a series which will depict the life of the American Church, was given by Mrs. Taylor's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Robinson.

In the medallions in the sidelights are incidents in his life illustrating his missionary work. The medallion in the left hand light shows him on the mail coach in which he made many of his travels, and in the right hand medallion he is seen preaching to a group of gold diggers, and below these medallions are angels holding in the left hand light a small map which gives many of the places he visited during his various missionary journeys, and in the right hand light are angels holding the badge or seal of the Diocese of Missouri.

At the top of the left and right hand lights are four figures of Missionary Saints. In the left hand light are St. Paul and St. Thomas the Apostle of India, while in the right hand light are the figures of St. Columba, who preached the Gospel in Ireland and Scotland, and St. Geramanus, Bishop of Auxerre, who was sent over from Gaul with St. Lupus to confute the Pelagian heresy which was spreading in Britain at that time.

DEATH OF BISHOP LINES.

Passed into life eternal on Tuesday, October 25, 1927, after a service of twenty-four years as Bishop of Newark, the Rt. Rev. Edwin Stevens Lines. Funeral services will be held at Trinity Cathedral in Newark, in Newark, Thursday, October 27th, at 11 A. M.

Anniversary of the Foundation of the Joint Diocesan Lesson Board Celebrated.

Leaders in Sunday-school work, representing about fifty dioceses of the Episcopal Church, are meeting in Philadelphia Friday, October 28, to commemorate the semi-centennial anniversary of the foundation of the Joint Diocesan Lesson Board. The Church of the Holy Apostles, Twenty-First and Christian Streets, the Rev. George H. Toop, rector, is the host parish and the commemoration begins with a dinner, followed by a public meeting. The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop of the Church; Bishop Garland, head of the Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania; the Rev. Dr. Toop, rector of Holy Apostles; the Rev. Canon Charles S. Lewis, of New Jersey; the Rev. Chas. B. Ackley, of Long Island; the Rev. L. N. Caley, of Philadelphia, and the Rev. John W. Suter, head of the National Department of Religious Education, are among the speakers at the dinner and the public meeting. The Joint Diocesan Lesson Board was organized in 1877 as a result of the realization of the necessity of prepared schedules of Sunday-school Lessons. The Board now provides schedules upon which the American Church Series of Lessons are based.

Meeting of the Laymen's Service Association.

The fall meeting of the Laymen's Service Association was scheduled for the evening of October 26, at All Saints' Church, Chevy Chase. Commander T. C. Jewell, the President, planned a business session. An account of the Lausanne Conference was to be read by Mr. Stuart Marshall, of St. Alban's Parish. Reports were to be heard in connection with the lay services held in Maryland during the summer.

Lectures Given in Teachers' Training Program.

The Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, rector of Christ Church, Georgetown, delivered a course of lectures at St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish, every night during the week of October 24. This course is given as a part of the Teacher Training Program of the diocese.

Sunday-School Building for St. Alban's.

St. Alban's Parish, the Rev. Charles T. Warner, rector, has erected a temporary Sunday-school building to accommodate its increasingly large Sunday School, with a permanent parish buildcan be erected to augment the Guild Hall now in constant use. The work was done by five volunteer carpenters in five days under the supervision of Mr. Henry N. Brawner, Jr.

St. Paul's Church School.

The Church School of St. Paul's, Twenty-Third Street, is held at eleven o'clock, jointly with the morning service for the parish. Children leaving immediately before the sermon for the parish hall, where the lesson is taught by a regular staff of Sunday-school teachers. Parents and children are, in this way, able to come to and return from church together.

The Rev. F. Bland Tucker, rector of St. John's Church, Georgetown, is giving a series of ad dresesoshrdopuopul ing a series of addresses on the Gospel according to St. John at his Sunday evening services and announces that this course will take the place of a Bible class in the parish. Opportunity will be given after the service for discussion on any question, which may arise.

Clergy and Laymen's Conferences.

Clergy of the more than two hundred parish and mission congregations of this Diocese and representatives of the more than fifteen hundred vestrymen of these congregations have been called to meet in two separate conferences during this week to consider and discuss vital problems affecting the future of existing missionary work of the Church in the United States and in the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

Calls for the conference have been issued by Bishop Garland and the Field Department of the Diocese. Both conferences are being held at the Church Farm School, Glen Loch. The clergy conference extends from Wednesday until Friday, the laymen's conference from Friday until Sunday.

During 1928 Episcopalians in the United States will be called upon to contribute upwards of $4,000,000 for the maintenance of existing missionary work. The National Council has asked that the Diocese of Pennsylvania contribute approximately $316,000 as its share of the maintenance expenses. In addition the Diocese itself, for its own work, will need also to ask of its congregations approximately $236,000 for maintenance. These figures are exclusive of the money raised among congregations for parochial expenses.

In his letter to the clergy of the diocese, Bishop Garland calls attention to the Diocese of Pennsylvania's long history of enthusiastic missionary support and notes that for some years past it has not raised the amount apportioned to it by the National Church.

The Rev. M. E. Peabody, Chairman of the Diocesan Field Department, called attention to the fact that the Church needs the united judgment of clergy and laity to solve her problems.

Bishop Garland is to preside over the conferences. Speakers who will lead the discussions include the Rt. Rev. M. S. Barnwell, Bishop of Idaho; the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, the Rev. E. N. Schmuck, and the Rev. Robert W. Patton, representing the National Council, and also heads of all Diocesan Departments of the Church.

Laying of the Cornerstone for Parish Building of Trinity Church, Collingdale.

Bishop Garland Saturday afternoon, October 22, officiated at the laying of the cornerstone of the parish building of Trinity Church at Collingdale, Delaware County. In addition to the Church organizations those who participated in the ceremonies included officials of the Borough Government, representatives of sivic and other organizations of the community and representatives of the Masonic and other bodies.

Trinity parish building represents one of the results of the Diocesan Campaign for Missions and Institutions conducted nearly a year ago by the Church to properly equip during a five-year drive, some forty missions and twenty institutions of the Church in this diocese, in which more than 20,000 individual pledgers agreed to contribute more than $2,000,000.

Memorial Candles.

At the early celebration of the Holy Communion Sunday, October 16, in Good Shepherd Parish, the rector, the Rev. John Benners Gibble, had the benediction of the candelabra candles which will be burned each Sunday at the morning and evening services. The idea was conceived that members of the congregation would take one month and give the candles for that time in memory of some loved one gone before into Paradise. The following persons have taken a month or Lenten services:

January—Mrs. W. G. Hatch, in memory of her mother, Mrs. George Washington Parker.

February—Mrs. R. A. Burnett, in memory of her grandson, Dwight Goodlin Wylie, Jr.

March—Mrs. Richard Hewlett, in memory of her father, Mr. Mark Edward Keathley.

April—Mr. Joseph C. Newton, in memory of his wife, Mrs. Joseph C. Newton.

May—Mrs. Cora Lee Huhn, in memory of her husband, Mr. A. Eugene Huhn.

June—Mrs. James T. Howard, in memory of her son, James Tillman Howard, Jr.

July—Mrs. James T. Howard, in memory of her mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Galloway.

August—Mrs. K. W. Jewell, in memory of her mother, Mrs. Mary Wells Kelly.

September—Mrs. J. M. Kermon, in memory of her daughter, Lillian Augusta Kermon.

October—Mrs. James H. Burriss, in memory of her husband, Mr. James H. Burriss.

November—Mr. W. G. Hatch, in memory of his mother, Mrs. Charles G. Hatch.

December—Mr. and Mrs. Dan Benton, in memory of their daughter, Minnie Benton.

During Lent—Miss Lucy B. Moore and Mrs. John Benners Gibble, in memory of their brother, Mr. Edward Brown Moore; Mrs. Nora L. Hewlett, in memory of her mother-in-law, Mrs. Mary Jane Hewlett; Miss Anna Louis Robertson, in memory of her brother, William Wallace Robertson; Mrs. Nellie Poovey, in memory of her husband, Mr. John Sylvanus Poovey; Mrs. Elizabeth Yates, in memory of her husband, Mr. John T. Yates; Mrs. Elizabeth Yates, in memory of her son, Mr. Herbert McNeill Yates; Mrs. Elizabeth Yates, in memory of her nephew, Mr. Lee Roy Hart.

Consecration of the New Chapel of the Church Charity Foundation.

The new St. John's Chapel of the Church Charity Foundation (Brooklyn), a memorial to Walter Gibb, erected by his wife, was consecrated on Monday, October 17, by the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., in the presence of a number of clergymen, and a large gathering of friends. The Rev. J. Howard Melish, D. D., delivered the eulogy of Mr. Gibb, who was a member of his vestry. The Rev. Charles Henry Webb, Director of the Foundation, presented the instrument of donation to the Bishop on behalf of Mrs. Gibb, and read the Sentence of Consecration.

The chapel is gothic with oak woodwork and marble altar font and memorial tablet. The windows, all of which are designed and executed by Otto W. Heinoke, are of the grisaille type, notable examples of which are to be found in Salisbury, York, Rheims and Chartres. The others are beautiful also, and all filled with symbolic meaning. In a bell-cote is hung a bell that was cast for the old building in 1859. The chapel is wired for microphone transmission, and it is intended that both the old and new hospitals as well as the infirmary in the Home for the Aged shall be wired so that a patient in any bed may listen to the service.

Mr. Rotherfel, known throughout the land as "Roxy", has agreed to give a receiving set with head phones for every bed in the new St. John's Hospital.

"Quiet Day."

Bishop Rogers of Ohio conducted the "Quiet Day" with which the Church Service League in Maryland began the winter's work. Assembled in the Pro-Cathedral for a day of Silence broken only by the Bishop's voice in meditation and the singing of some chosen hymns, women in every branch of the Church's work found a wonderful opportunity to come into a "place apart and rest awhile". Our Lord inaugurated this practice with His disciples and the Church has always emphasized its importance in the spiritual life.

The theme of the Bishop's meditation was "The Spirit That Prevails". The possession of this spirit depends on the "Inner Life" of the individual. It invites, nourishes and cultivates the companionship of this spirit, which is invincible. Prayer in all forms is its food. The Bishop read during meals from Evelyn Underhill's book, "Concerning the Inner Life". This Inner Life is our link with the great supernatural world all about us and in the Bishop's words, "Life is never blase to the dwellers of two worlds".

New Mother Superior of All Saints' Convent.

Sister Adelaide Frances resigned after serving for thirty years as Mother Superior of All Saints Convent, Ilchester. On Thursday, October 20, Bishop Helfenstein installed as the new Mother Superior Sister Catherine Angela.

Maryland Represented at Provincial Synod.

At the recent Provincial Synod the following were delegates representing this diocese: Clerical: Edward E. Burgess of Brunswick; the Rev. W. O. Smith of Ruxton, the Rev. Walter B. Stehl of Hagerstown, the Rev. Edwin H. Gibson of Ten Hills, Baltimore. Lay: Dr. Fell of Annapolis, Mr. Adrian Onderdonk of St. James' School, Mr. John G. Schlipp. Among others from the diocese who attended were the Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, the Rev. Messrs. W. B. Adams, A. B. Kinsolving, Romilly F. Humphreys, Henry M. Kloman, C. P. Spalding and T. S. Will. Several women's organizations were represented.

The Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, Jr., to Address Convocation of Towson.

The Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, Jr., rector of Calvary Episcopal Church, will address on October 26 the Convocation of Towson, Maryland, on the invitation of Archdeacon Hobart Smith. Mr. Smith is rector emeritus of St. Thomas' Church, Garrison Forest. This old church is famous for its John La Farge windows. Mr. Shoemaker's home is in this valley, and he is going back to give to the older clergy, many of whom have known him from childhood, a description of the work being done at Calvary, in personal evangelism.

St. John's Church, Kingston, Consecrated and the Rev. Wm. Poyntelle Kemper, M. A., Installed as Rector.

On Friday, October 21, 1927, the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., consecrated the new St. John's Church of Kingston, and installed as the new rector the Rev. William Poyntelle Kemper, M. A., formerly of Meadville, Pennsylvania. During the rectorship of the late Edward M. H. Knapp, the old down town church site had been sold and the church moved stone by stone to be built into the new and enlarged church and parish house in a residential part of Kingston. One of the most beautiful things in the new edifice is the memorial pulpit given by the whole congregation in memory of Mr. Knapp, their beloved rector who died just a year ago.

The Services of Consecration and Installation were combined. Bishop Manning preached the Sermon to a crowded church, in whose congregation were twelve ministers of other communions in Kingston. The Rev. Octavious Applegate, D. D., a former rector, was Epistler: the Rev. Charles Breck Ackley, D. D., of New York City, was Gospeler. The Sentence of Consecration was read by the Rev. S. Halstead Watkins. The Office of Institution was presented by the Rev. John Marshall Chew, rector of Church of the Good Shepherd, Newburg. Among the visiting clergy who assisted in the service were the Rev. Eli D. Sutcliff of Poughkeepsie; the Rev. Leighton Williams, D. D., Marlborough; the Rev. Emery L. Hawe, Saugerties; the Rev. Davis S. Agnew, High Falls; the Rev. Gregory Mabry, Kingston; the Rev. Charles Bratton Dubell, Philadelphia; the Rev. J. G. Cameron, Rosedale; the Rev. Frederick L. Bradley, New Paltz, and the Rev. Frederick B. Hornby of West Park.

After the church services were over the clergy and several of the ladies of the parish were entertained at luncheon by one of the ladies of the parish.

Opening of Fall Campaign.

The first gun was fired in the campaign in this diocese by the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell in the Church of the Ascension, Lakewood, Sunday evening, October 16.

No man could be found more accurate in his statement of the Church's position, and in his convincing interpretation of the true relationship between the Church and the Bishops. He was touched when the rector announced that the offering of the evening would be given to Idaho. But he let it be known that he was not preaching for Idaho. His ordination and Bishop Leonard's were not for Idaho or Ohio, but for the Church of God. The Church was the vehicle by which every offering is conveyed to the place for which it was appointed. The work of the Church in this department is represented by the National Council.

The financial drive was commenced at a dinner, held on Tuesday evening, in the Winton Hotel. The address of the evening was delivered by Bishop Barnwell; Mr. George C. Benham, Financial Secretary, rendered an illustrated talk on the Progress of the Church, and Bishop Rogers was toastmaster.

First Episcopal Marriage and Baptism.

On August 5 the marriage of Mr. Theodore Cleaveland and Miss Nellie Mildred Bean was performed by the Rev. G. J. Cleaveland, and on the same day Caspar Shunk Breckinridge, age four, was baptized. These are supposed to be the first Episcopal marriage and baptism in Summersville.

Opening of Trinity Chapel, Ranson.

Sunday night, August 28, Trinity Chapel, Ranson, was officially opened with service and sermon by Bishop Gravatt. Trinity Chapel is a parochial mission under Zion Church, Charles Town, and offers a fine chance for growth in that part of the town.

New Parish House, Christ Church, Fairmont.

This beautiful parish house was dedicated by Bishop Gravatt, Sunday, September 4, the service in charge of the rector, the Rev. Robert S. Lambert. The Church services will be held in it until the new church can be built.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Conference of Clergy and Laymen.

The Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop of Florida, has just conducted a Conference for the Clergy and Laymen of the Diocese of Atlanta in St. Luke's Church, Atlanta. Twenty-four of the clergy attended the meeting in the afternoon, and a large and representative body of laymen were present for the supper and conference at night.

Bishop Juhan presented the work of the diocese and of the National Church and the way in which a more generous support of both might be attained. Much interest was manifested both by clergy and laymen and the questions asked showed all were seeking to find out how the claims of the Church in all the fields could be brought nearer to the people of the various congregations represented at the conference. The Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., introduced Bishop Juhan and expressed his pleasure at having him return the visit which he had made to the Florida diocese during the Bishops' Crusade.

Meeting of the Executive Board.

On October 12 the Executive Board of the Diocese met at the Cathedral in Atlanta for its fall meeting. The work of this session is always largely a planning for the coming year and the preparation of the annual budget. In the budget there is included a salary for a missionary in addition to the ones now serving. There are so many smaller places in need of such services that it has been felt necessary for the growth of the work, and the Board is hoping that the response to the annual canvass will make this possible. A folder similar to that of the Bishop's Parish, gotten out by the National Church is being prepared so that the people may be able the more easily to understand the needs of the diocese.

New Music for Te Deum.

Mrs. M. H. Bland, organist for a great many years of St. Stephen's Church, Milledgeville, has just composed the music for the Te Deum, which the choir of this church is now using. It is the result of the felt need of music suited to the average church choir which could not sing the more elaborate settings and has been pronounced an excellent solution of the difficulty experienced by many organists. The music is dedicated to the rector, the Rev. F. H. Harding.

Conference of College Students and Pastors.

The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, of the Department of Religious Education, in charge of the college work, visited this diocese and held a conference of the college students of the Church as well as of the college pastors, in All Saints' Church, Atlanta, the week end of Oct. 22 and 23. There are so many colleges in the various towns of this diocese that it has become one of the most important works to minister to these students.

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop.

Trinity Church, Owensboro.

Trinity Church is making real progress under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. Cowin C. Miller. An endowment fund has been started. In addition to this, there have been added to the Church by Confirmation and transfer thirty-five. The Sunday School has increased two hundred and twenty-five per cent until the epidemic of infantile paralysis, and for the past two months there has been no Church School.

For the first time in the history of the Church, all diocesan assessments will be met in full, and more paid on the quota than ever before. There will be more Confirmations this year than have ever before been presented in the history of Trinity Church.

A successful mission has just been closed, which was held by the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop of Kentucky. The preparation made for the mission was intense, and the mission justified the work. The Bishop spoke at noon-day to the girls in the American Cigar factory, and also at the noon-day luncheon of the Optimist Club.

Fall Meeting of The Executive Council.

Important business of varying character was transacted at the fall meeting of the Executive Council of the diocese, held October 19, at Christ Church, Savannah. Every member of the Council was present. Of first consequence was the adoption of the Diocesan Program for 1928, which in total amounts to $33,455, divided as follows: diocesan budget, $17,655; General Church budget, $10,800; Advance Work General Church, $5,000. There is no provision for any diocesan advance work, but included in the budget of the Department of Missions is a salary item for a general diocesan missionary, who when appointed will constitute an advance step in diocesan work. A resolution was adopted stating that the diocese will pledge to the National Council the full amount of its budget quota.

The Council heartily approved and endorsed a new project of the Department of Religious Education to solicit funds for the purchase of a site on which to build a new house on St. Simon's Island for the young people's camp and for other diocesan uses. The camp quarters last summer proved so inadequate that the Department is faced with the situation of abandoning a camp entirely or getting its own new quarters. Ninety-two young people attended last July.

A resolution was passed to recommend to the Diocesan Convention that the Diocese of Georgia unite with the Diocese of Atlanta in giving its financial and moral support to the Negro School Collect for the Twentieth Sunday After Trinity.

O Almighty and most merciful God, of Thy bountiful goodness keep us, we beseech Thee, from all things that may hurt us; that we, being ready both in body and soul may cheerfully accomplish those things which Thou commandest; through Jesus Christ Our Lord.

Collect for All Saints' Day.

O Almighty God, Who hast knit together Thine elect in one communion and fellowship, in the mystical body of Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord; Grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living that we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love Thee; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Beatitude.

And is it well with thee?
Ay; past all dreaming, well!
For here we dwell
Where none may weep;
And Paradise is ours again to keep;
The tree of Knowledge in the midst thereof,
Time-ripened love—
The leaves no more for healing, but for food
Of live renewed,
Fresh with the dew, from vanished faith distilled,
Of hope fulfilled.
And round us angels be
To guard the gateways, not with swords of flame,
But fragrant breathings on the sacred Name,
That nevermore an after-thought of sin
May enter in.

—John B. Tabb.

The Communion of Saints.

In the first paragraph of the Creed we declare our belief in an invisible creating God whom we call Father Almighty. In the second, that in order to show Himself to the world He took a human body, and we call Him Lord Jesus Christ. In this third and last, we affirm that He also exists as an invisible life-giving spirit that acts directly upon the souls of men; the author of all good impulses, the source of all spiritual strength in each individual, and that He shows His presence and power by acting upon them collectively in organizing them into the body we call the Church, giving it a continual and common life in order that the Gospel may be proclaimed to all the world until He comes again. As our souls are to our bodies so is Christ to us and to the Church, guiding it and through it leading us to all truth. Here the Holy Spirit works with our imperfect bodies, and the Church for that same reason teaches the perfect truth often in an imperfect manner. Here we are given by it the divine law of the love of God and of the neighbor, and by reason of our imperfections we so often fail in both, but after death when we have cast aside this body, that St. Paul calls the "body of our humiliation", we will see God the Holy Spirit as He is, and without the temptations of our bodies will understand what the love of God means. At the same moment, freed from the flesh we will know and understand each other perfectly, we will have to forgive and be forgiven, we will have to love and be capable of being loved. There will then be one common life but we will never lose our individualities. This life will be eternal for common love and complete knowledge will bind us into one with each other and with God, and He is eternal.

Here men have often tried to make an ideal world by their own feeble wisdom without the aid of the Church and its revelation. They have always failed and always will fail, for hampered with our bodies we are led by their desires and can only see a little and judge the right by the little we can see. There, when we will know all things, and the spirit of selfishness that is caused by the blind desires of this body will be left behind, we will know and love each other by the inner true life. In happy, loving children at play we have a shadowy picture of the life beyond this, our Lord called it "Paradise" which really means play-ground.

"Except ye become like little children ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." The prophet's vision will be realized, "The streets of the City shall be filled with boys and girls playing in the streets thereof".

Therefore we say "I believe in the Communion of Saints".

"O blest communion, fellowship divine.
"We feebly struggle, they in glory shine;
"And all are one in Thee, for all are Thine."

—S. F. Adams.

Four Present-Day Christians

Takaharu Takamatsu

The Rev. Takaharu Takamatsu, D. D., of the Diocese of Kyoto, Japan, expects to be in the United States taking post-graduate work at the General Theological Seminary during the academic year 1927-28. He is rector of St. Mary's, Kyoto, one of the younger clergy of the diocese, and already a man of wide and increasing influence. Among other posts he holds that of official interpreter for the Imperial Family on its visits to Kyoto. In November, 1928, he is to act in this capacity when the enthronement of the present Emperor occurs in Kyoto.

Dr. Takamatsu has specialized in New Testament studies and some years ago was asked to write all the articles on the New Testament for a national encyclopedia projected by a firm of Japanese publishers. The plans call for a work on a scale not unlike that of the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Dr. Takamatsu expects to arrive in the United States about October 1, and will go into residence immediately at the General Theological Seminary. He speaks English excellently. He interpreted for Bishop Gailor and Dr. Wood during their visit in Japan in 1923-24.

Feng Yu-hsiang.

Bishop Gilman on his return to Hankow writes to the Department of Missions that on July 4, he, in company with Dr. F. C. Yen, a distinguished Chinese Churchman, had the pleasure of meeting the foreign secretary of Marshal Feng Y-hsiang. This Chinese secretary, together with two other Chinese Christians holding important political posts, told of Feng's consistent Christian living and of the continuance of strong Christian feeling and living among officers and soldiers.

Chuni Mukerjee.

Tagore has written a letter highly complimenting the work of the Indian gentleman who edits the S. P. C., K. publications in Calcutta, Mr. Chuni Mukerjee, a convert from the Brahmo Samaj, a thinker, scholar and linguist. Tagore says the usual Bengalese translations of the Christian Scriptures are contemptible, but that Mr. Mukerjee's translation deserves a place in Bengalese literature.

Nicholai Velimirovich.

Bishop Nicholai of Serbia, in this country as the guest of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, preached in the Cathedral of St. John in New York in August. Coming from the Balkans, between the East and the West, he spoke of Orient and Occident as twins who have become separated from and suspicious of each other. He said, according to a newspaper report:

The East says it represents wisdom and the West says it represents power. The East has been striving all through the years to get more wisdom, and the West has been striving all through the years to get more and more power.

What is wrong with the East is that it lacks divine revelation, and what is wrong with the West is that it lacks inspiration.

In consequence the wisdom of the East has sunken into a spiritual sadness, nothingness, idolatry, ignorance, and laziness. The power of the West has sunken into brutal wars, revolutions, suicides divorce, fear, crime, troubles everywhere that cannot be settled merely by human power.

In the East the wisdom has been collected without Christ, and in the West the power has been collected without Christ. So both are powerless. Him who brings a better wisdom and a better power, Him who is wiser than the East and stronger than the West both have failed to heed, and as long as this is the case the East and the West always will be hostile to each other.

In all this clamor Christ soothingly whispers through the generations, "Without Me ye can do nothing". He is wiser than the East. He is stronger than the West. Christ ought to come to the East to clean their minds and to elevate their hearts. He ought to come to the West to instill more kindness, more brotherly love.

What we need today most of all is that Christ's revealed wisdom should rectify and vivify the wisdom of the East, and that His Divine inspiration should spiritualize the power of the West.

The Holy Dead.

Calm are the holy dead
When the passion of life is o'er,
When the green turf flowers o'er the resting head,
And the turbulent dreams of the world have fled,
And the wild heart throbs no more.

Blessed are the holy dead,
Though dark were their lot before;
For healed are the wounds that on earth have bled,
And dried are the tears that on earth were shed
For the sorrows that lost they bore!

Wise are the holy dead,
Ah! wise with a noble love;
For to their clear glances are open spread
The scrolls where the secrets of God are read
In the heavens where the angels soar!
Oh! who will bemoan the dead,
As stricken with anguish sore?
Though the sod or the marble be o'er his head,
His beautiful soul with a song hath fled
To the rest that it loved of yore!

On Going to College.

Louis Deschamps.

Hundreds of young men and women are now entering college for the first time. At this season of the year, many whose college days are cherished in memory like to think of what college life may mean to the newcomers. Although times and conditions change, although many deplore the degeneration of scholarship and work in favor of athletics and social gaiety, there is still the same appeal, the same opportunity to all who will accept it. Wholesome pleasure and recreation are very necessary to students, but sometimes a college graduate may be an irresponsible sport, without the sterner habits of concentrated study and developed personality. Going to college is like four years in a gold field. One can develop his claim, dig deeply, be thrifty, or he may waste the time accumulating alloys, merely scratching the topsoil, or gambling all he has in the vain and foolish hope of an intellectual El Dorado of selfish egotism. It is to be assumed that the young man or woman entering college has received such depth of religious and moral conviction from their home training, that the variety and complexity of life's facts can be met and safely observed upon their respective merits.

The purpose of this article is to express the deep convictions of a college graduate concerning the real values of college education. No amount of "preaching" will affect the average young person of today. Moralizing on how to make the most of the college adventure is apparently lost on the young people. But there are fortunately times in the life of the most care-free when truth is sought, and things heard carelessly are remembered seriously. Because youthful spirits scorn suggestions of errors is no reason for declaring charts useless or lifeboats unnecessary. Truth should be available, whether used or not.

The following facts have stood the test of actual experience in proving the value of a college education:

Education is not primarily a matter of specific knowledge. Most of the technical facts learned in college are soon forgotten, unless used professionally. Education is the total effect of habits—moral, intellectual, physical—acquired by years of conscious effort, purposely directed by systematic teaching. Self-discipline is rare unless systematically cultivated. Education is more a matter of training than of fact.

Colleges and universities are the universal and historic centers of the world's culture and learning. To attend college is to partake of the same experiences of many of the greatest men in history. It is good to have known a quiet place where the thoughts and aspirations of great men survive in the immortality of literature, science, and the finer arts of life that have been so important in human progress. To have known the subtle charm of cultural atmosphere, uniting in solemn majesty the greatness of the past with the ideals of the future, may have been thought superficial at the time, but its mark is on the man or woman.

A college education is the crucible in which the real nature and possibilities of an individual are tried for their fitness to receive the heritage of mankind's achievements, to wield the power of thought. College life tempts with the possession of liesure, the opportunity to dissipate, the intoxication of knowledge to small minds, the development of snobbishness in mean natures. On the other hand, it may bring forth strength of character, self-reliance, initiative in work, a universal outlook, humility before the vastness of wisdom's dominions, responsibility for service.

One can not measure the value of a college education in terms of the money a college graduate may or may not receive after leaving college. Even professional men must experience the so-called "starvation period" before establishing themselves. Education is an investment in one's self, not a merchandise for sale. Only to the extent in which personal ability and good fortune favor the particular work in which the college graduate undertakes his career can his education pay cash dividends. If he is a more capable man for having been to college, his education has contributed to that end and indirectly to his income as such.

Perhaps this last advantage of a college education is too sentimental, too idealistic, or even too hoary with time's classic lore to be very intelligible in our materialism. It is simply this: a personality in which idealism and the finer sentiments are cherished in spite of life's disillusionments. To have been to college is to have viewed life from the mountain tops, with the soft haze of distance hiding the dusty plains and rocky gorges. This may have been deceiving, but it teaches the meaning of vision. There is current criticism of the modern college-trained men and women that their education has made them scorn their visions, ideals, finer emotions. If this charge is true, it means that the trend of education is changing from its humanitarian purpose. Probably the modern students neglect the classic courses in favor of the extremely scientific courses. Both kinds of training are offered. Students often make the colleges by their own demands and desires. But the man or woman who has taken the liberal arts course must certainly have found the real meaning of the idealism, the emotions, the finer sentiments of mankind. Personality is an elusive force, but one of its greatest attributes is a deep conviction of the truth and power of idealism. The dreams of prophets, the visions of poets, the unselfish ideals of religious leaders, the glory of simple and commonplace lives, the truth of beauty and the beauty of truth—all these are open to the college students whose lives may be saved from the meaningless materialism of modern times, if they will.

I Shall Be Satisfied.

Not here! not here; not where the sparkling waters
Fade into mocking sands as we draw near,
Where in the wilderness each footstep falters—
I shall be satisfied; but, oh! not here!

Not here—where every dream of bliss deceives us,
Where the worn spirit never gains its goal,
Where, haunted ever by the thoughts that grieve us,
Across us floods of bitter memory roll.

There is a land where every pulse is thrilling,
With rapture earth's sojourners may not know,
Where Heaven's repose the weary heart is stilling
And peacefully life's time-tossed currents flow.

Far out of sight, while yet the flesh infolds us,
Lies the fair country where our hearts abide,
And of its bliss is naught more wondrous told us,
Than these few words, "I shall be satisfied".

Satisfied? Satisfied? The spirit's yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred minds—
The silent love that here meets no returning—
The inspiration which no language finds—

Shall they be satisfied? The soul's vague longing—
The aching void which nothing earthly fills?
Oh! what desires upon my soul are thronging
As I look upward to the heavenly hills!

Thither my weak and weary steps are tending,
Saviour and Lord! with Thy frail child abide!
Guide me towards home, where all my wanderings ending,
I then shall see Thee and be satisfied.

What Science Cannot Do.

Science has lengthened vision. We can see in action, pictures of happenings in China. It has increased our hearing. Parisians listen to sermons preached in Pittsburgh. It has given wings to men. They have flown around the world.

So marvelous have been the works of man through science that the Creator seems forgotten in his own world. As a witty Frenchman put it: "Men allowed God to make the Universe, then bowed Him out."

But in the midst of all the progress and plenty there is uneasiness. Science has no cure for an aching heart, no relief for a guilty conscience.

What will it advantage if we travel fast and see and hear afar, and lose our souls.—Presbyterian Banner.

For the Young Folks

"Be Still, and Know That I Am God."

Be still, my heart! We murmur, you and I,
We fret and fret—while precious hours fly by.

Be still! The silent are the truly blest;
There is no rapture for a heart dismissed.

Be still, my heart! The deep, dark night is still,
The trees in prayer, the stars above the hill.

Be still, and to this promise softly cling;
The silent hear the great archangels sing.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus Our Captain.

M. L. G.

The Prince of Peace was Jesus, and yet He came, as He said Himself, to bring not peace, but a sword. For the Christian Cause is at war. Even after so many years have gone by and the truth has been so lived and proclaimed, there are enough enemies of the Gospel to wipe out any lesser force.

And the Christian life is also a warfare. Some of the fiercest battles are fought out where no eye but God's surveys the field or counts the wounded. If you see some old person, some saint who has not far to go before the gates of heaven swing open to him, be sure his patience and his faith have come by no accident, but by the slow overcoming of evil and gaining of good. "Sure I must fight if I would win!" says the old hymn.

But we do not go to this warfare alone. A Good Captain will not ask his men to go where he dare not; and ours is a Good Captain. He has fought the bitterest of our battles, He has conquered our enemies even the last Enemy. We can never be too hard pressed by the foe to see Him stand by our side, or too sorely wounded to know He was wounded too. Yes, He is a Good Captain! For He says not "Go on alone", but "Follow Me"!

A Story in a Nutshell.

"Here's a nut to crack?" said Uncle Ben who was managing the roasting of the Hallowe'en nuts.

"Just what for?" asked Freddy, accepting it to prove that he knew, first and foremost, that it was to be eaten. "I mean," he went on, "why do we have nuts, and why do we have apples as a kind of special feast?"

"It is the oldest Thanksgiving now existing, Fred," exclaimed Uncle Ben. "It was one given to pagan gods."

"Who are they?" asked Edith, the youngest of the two Burwash children.

"When our ancestors did not know about the Heavenly Father, they had make-believe gods. They made up stories about gods—one for every great force they say, like thunder, Thor. The one most loved, though, was named Freya, and she was the earth. Her husband was the Sun, Oder. She loved him so much that she followed him always: or so our ancient ancestors thought. They made her take the place of an example to all women as a wife; and, too, they thought that she helped all true lovers. She is the witch of Hallowe'en of long ago, she was the queen of that yearly Thanksgiving Festival. It was called the God's Feast, and it was held on November 1."

"How did she change into a witch?" asked Edith.

"She never really changed into a witch, dear. She never really existed except in men's fancy like some good picture—an imagined one—of the beautiful earth which, as the Bible says, "giveth her increase in due season". When the Christian missionaries brought the story about the true All-Father-God to those people, they said: "Your gods and goddesses are wizards and witches. They belong to the wilds, to the heath outside of the village and never inside of it."

"After that, any person found worshipping those old pagan gods was nicknamed 'heath-man', or 'heathen'. Also, the people had to think of them as the missionaries said. It was in that way that Freya, for whom Friday was named, became looked upon as a witch. Her daughter was named Idun, and she is the summer. She took care of the fruit, and especially the apples. Those were the favorite fruit of the gods. Their supposed home was named by the northern people, our ancestors, 'Valhalla'."

"I have caught just seven apples of Idun's tonight, then," interrupted Freddy.

"Yes, those are the symbol of Idun. The story in the nut shows how she escaped from the giant storm-king Thjassa."

"What a lovely fairy-tale," remarked Edith.

"It is just that, Edith, a fairy-tale to us; but, long ago, with Druids, or priests, with long white beards, and long white robes, the boys and girls heard this story as a true one. Loki, the tempest, the mischief-maker, had given Idun over to Thjassa, and the gods of Valhalla made him fetch her back. He borrowed the falcon-plumage of Freya and flew to the giant's cavern. As luck would have it, the giant was away fishing. Loki transformed Idun into a nut which he could easily carry in his claws. Thjassa came home and wearing his eagle-feathers, he flew after the pair. The gods watched them, and set fire to piles of chips on the walls after Loki and his precious burden were over: but Thjassa had his wings singed and had to go back."

"I see, then, winter cannot hold the earth always, or rather, keep back the summer," said Fred. "Since the apples and nuts are in memory of Freya, what about the pumpkin lanterns, they are the most fun of all."

"In India, where they come from, there is a myth, or fairy-tale about them. Isnia, a philosopher, placed his dead son in a pumpkin shell and put that on a mountain. From it—really mountains are the source of rivers—water flowed down to make the sea, and lakes, and rivers, with it, all pouring together, came fish—the first in the world; so they imagined. In China, too, the pumpkin is a symbol of plenty. In old Hallowe'en, it was the symbol of Shamam the Norse sea-god."

"What does 'Hallowe'en' mean, the old Valhalla God's eve?" asked Freddy.

"Far from it. The word, 'hallows', or 'halo-ed ones', means 'saints', in the Saxon, so in Great Britain, they called All Saints Day, 'All Hallows'. When the missionaries put All Saints Day on that date to stop the old pagan festival if they could, the people held it on the evening before. We still hold it; although a lot of us forget that the saints set for tomorrow. Those martyrs made it possible to spread the truth about Christianity. We sing about them as 'a noble army, men and boys, the matron and the maid, who 'around the Saviour's throne rejoice in robes of light arrayed'."

"There is a very huge story in this nut—all of Idun, herself the summer of our ancestors," said Freddy.

"The whole of summer is in every nut today, Fred," Uncle Ben informed him. "Summer is in everything which we eat; but, we know now that it is God who sends the seed-time and the harvest. We ought, it seems to me, to acknowledge Him on Hallowe'en as the source of our supply. We should banish the witch to the bracken, or heath, or, at least, transform her back to her first and better state, Freya, even if once a pagan-goddess, she is, as the earth, a handmaiden of the Heavenly Father, whom we sometimes call, 'Providence'." —The Presbyterian Banner.

The Magic Pumpkins.

One soft, still morning in late October a little boy left his wheelbarrow and the work that he was doing with it, and sat down in the shade to rest a little and wipe the sweat from his face. It was not yet ten o'clock, but the sun was warm, and the boy, whose name was Mark Knott, had been working hard at wheeling pumpkins from the field to the barn. The pumpkins were large that year. Some of them weighed as much as forty pounds, so that Mark could not lift them into the wheelbarrow, but had to roll them up a board one end of which he placed on the ground and the other end against the edge of the wheelbarrow floor. Of the larger pumpkins he could take but one at a time, and so he had to make many trips from the field to the barn; and what with the lifting and the rolling and the unloading, it was hard work. It seemed good, then, after he had made ten or twelve trips, to sit in the shade and rest.

All about him stood sheaves of ripe corn, gathered into stacks and tied at the top, so that they looked like a village of Indian tepees pitched upon the hillside. From where he sat, with his back against one of the stacks, he could see a long way down the valley, and on every side was something beautiful to look at. The groves of poplars stood like groups of yellow-burning candles, and among them here and there shot up a tall maple that made Mark think of a flaming red torch held on high by a hand that he could not see. And over everything there hung a soft, purple haze, as if some one had thrown a veil of thinnest gauze over the sleeping valley to protect it.

As Mark sat there and rested the cawing of the crows in the pine wood seemed to grow fainter; the whistle of the freight train sounded farther away; and the veil that hung over the face of the sleeping valley took on a deeper tinge of blue, till the shapes of the trees faded out and the church spire disappeared and Mark no longer knew where he was.

Then suddenly all about him was the sound of laughter, not loud, but very sweet, like the music of a brook running over little stones; and when he looked to see where the laughter came from he beheld at his feet a strange company of little men, long-legged, but no taller than a milk bottle, all looking up at him. One of them indeed—and he seemed to be the leader—was standing on Mark's very shoe, and his weight was no more than that of a squirrel.

Before Mark could say anything the leader of the little men spoke. "What are you doing?" he asked.

"I am resting," said Mark.

"And why are you resting?"

"Because I am tired from working hard at getting in those heavy pumpkins."

At that all the little men began to laugh and laugh. They held their sides and slapped their legs and rolled on the ground and clapped one another on the back and laughed till the tears rolled down their cheeks; and in the midst of the laughter Mark could hear them saying one to another, "Tired! Getting in pumpkins!" "He calls it work!" "He had to stop and rest!"

All this time the leader of the little men had been watching Mar's face, and while the others were still laughing, he raised his hand and cried, "Stop!" In an instant everything was still.

"He has not learned the way," the leader went on; "we must show him;" and then to Mark he said, "Follow us". At that all the little band marched a little way off to where a big pumpkin lay on its side, and Mark saw for the first time that each of them carried what looked like a little stick with a tip of glowing fire, like the slow matches with which he used to light fire-crackers.

With his wand the leader pointed to the stem of the pumpkin. "Do you see that?" he asked.

"Of course," said Mark.

"And that it is not straight but bent?"

"Yes."

"Like anything you ever saw before?"

"Why—why—it is almost like the crank of a bicycle!" cried Mark.

"Just so! Just so!" said the leader, nodding his head sharply; "and now watch." With that he stretched out his fire-tipped wand and touched the other end of the pumpkin, where the blossom had been; and out of that end sprang another stem, also bent, like the first one, but the other way; and then all the other little men ran, each to a pumpkin, and Mark saw what he had never noticed before, that the stem of no pumpkin was straight, but every one bent like a crank. And each little man touched the blossom end of his pumpkin with his wand, and a new crank sprang out; and then at a word from the leader each one of the band leaped astride his pumpkin and putting his feet on the pedals that the two stems made, rode the pumpkin down the lane to the barn so fast that Mark could hardly keep up with them.

When all the pumpkins were on the barn floor each of the little riders hopped down from his pumpkin, and all of them stood round Mark's feet. Mark looked down at the leader and said, "What is the little fire-tipped stick, and where can I get one?"

"That," said the leader, "is the Wand of Fancy, and is given to but few. Those happy ones that find it must work, as others work, but they work gladly, for it makes their work easy and like play."

And then in a flash the little men were gone, and Mark was sitting again by the stock of corn with a little shoot of witch-hazen in his hand; and his grandfather was standing before him; smiling down at him.

Mark looked about. The wheelbarrow was gone, and the pumpkins were gone.

"Where are the rest of the pumpkins?" he asked wonderingly.

"Why, I guess they must have rolled themselves down to the barn," said his grandfather, with a twinkle in his eye.

But Mark still keeps the little witch-hazel wand, and he still hopes that some day he shall find it tipped with fire.—Youth's Companion.

The Visiting Jack-o'-lantern.

Billy Bruce was a very happy boy, indeed, when the postman on the morning preceding Hallowe'en night came by his home and left a huge box on the porch.

"What ever can it be, mother?" asked Billy eagerly as he ran for the scissors to cut the string.

"I'm sure I can't guess," answered the mother, "but we'll soon see."

And just as mother said, so it was; in a jiffy she had cut the string, lifted the tissue paper in the top of the box—and lo and behold! there was the most gorgeous jack-o'-lantern Billy's two eyes had ever seen.

"Isn't that a beauty, mother!" cried Billy joyously. "Just look—it's made of silk and got a real honest-to-goodness candle in it!—and—there—there—" cried Billy excitedly, "is a card—see who it's from mother, quick!"

"Just as I suspected," laughed mother Bruce as her keen eyes read the name, "it's from your Aunt Jennie."

"Well," mused Billy pleasantly, "I sure am glad she thought to send it to me—but isn't it strange how silk jack-o'lanterns grow in big cities?"

"They don't grow, sonny," answered the mother, "they are made either by hand or machinery."

"But," protested Billy, "they look mighty like real pumpkins, don't they?"

"Until they are lighted," answered mother Bruce, "then you can see a vast difference."

Billy was sure his mother had spoken truthfully, but not until night was abroad in the land and the new lantern was glowing in the darkness, did Billy realize just how beautiful a silk jack-o'-lantern could be.

"I think my lantern is too lovely to take out of the house, mother," said Billy after the supper dishes had been put away and they were back in the living room enjoying the gift from Aunt Jennie.

"It is lovely," agreed mother, "but seems to me a rather selfish act to keep such a lovely thing all to ourselves. Couldn't we think of some way by which others might enjoy it with us?"

But all the children in this neighborhood," protested Billy, "have jack-o'-lanterns—pumpkin lanterns, of course—still they are lanterns."

"Yes," reasoned the mother—"but what about old Granny Lane and Aunt Lou Green—I wonder if they have a jack-o'-lantern tonight?"

Billy's eyes opened in surprise. "Of course, they haven't, mother," the boy exclaimed thoughtfully, "but—but—they shall help me enjoy mine for a little while; I'll take my lantern and go visiting, that's what I'll do."

"That's a nice idea," replied mother Bruce, "run right along."

So it happened that while all the neighborhood children were running from house to house with the pumpkin lanterns, playing tricks on each other and upsetting households in general, Billy Bruce with the silk lantern, was making calls on the helpless and the poverty-stricken of the community, and when at last he returned home his face was beaming with happiness.

"I'm so glad you suggested my sharing my lantern with the afflicted, mother," said Billy softly as he was being tucked in bed, "for I believe it gave a lot of joy to some very lonely people."

And a few days later, Aunt Jennie, who supervised the making of novelties in a big factory in the East, had a letter from her nephew, telling her all about the Visiting Jack-o'-Lantern, and the joy it gave, and just because her nephew had shared his one toy so generously, the busy forewoman made a note on her calendar for a bigger and brighter lantern to go to Billy Bruce the next year.—Presbyterian Advance.

How Kenneth Shared His Hallowe'en Present.

Kenneth went down town with mother and Baby Sister just before Hallowe'en and they looked in the store window while mother was shopping. It was full of such funny things—brownies and black cats and moons and old women in tall, sharp-pointed hats riding on broom handles and all kinds of jack-o'-lanterns. On the way home Kenneth was thinking about the jack-o'-lanterns. They looked so funny that he wished he had one.

After dinner he walked up the road to the big tree by the stone wall where he often sat—and watched the birds and squirrels. Many of the birds had gone South for the winter, but the squirrels were there, and soon Kenneth saw a litle squirrel running along the wall, carrying an acorn in his mouth. "He's getting ready for winter," thought Kenneth. "I wonder where his home is." As if answering his question, the squirrel jumped down from the wall, ran across the road, and disappeared into a hole in the ground under the bushes. Kenneth meant to watch for him to come out again, but it was warm and comfortable leaning against the big tree, and he fell asleep.

By and by something waked him, and there on the grass in front of him was a big round pumpkin. Up jumped Kenneth and picked it up. A farmer with a wagon loaded with pumpkins was driving down the hill. Kenneth ran after him, calling, "Wait, wait, wait, you've lost a pumpkin!" The farmer stopped his horses, and when Kenneth came up to the wagon, he said: "I believe that pumpkin doesn't want me to sell him for pies: I think he wants to be a jack-o'-lantern. You keep him, sonny."

"Oh, thank you!" said Kenneth. Then he ran home as fast as he could to show it to his mother. They went to work right away to make the lantern. Mother did the cutting and Kenneth took out the seeds, and while they worked Kenneth told mother about the squirrel.

"If you will clean those seeds and spread them on a paper, when they are dry you may take them out to your little friend and share this nice Hallowe'en present with him," said mother.

So Kenneth cleaned the seeds, and when they were dry he carried a pocketful of them up the hill and sprinkled them on the top of the wall. Then he and jack-o'-lantern waited very quietly for the squirrel to find them, and watched him carry them over to his home, packed in the little pockets inside of his cheeks. He was very busy all the afternoon, and in the long winter when jack-o'-lantern had disappeared, and Kenneth was sliding down the hill on his Christmas sled, chipmunk sat in his house, snug and warm, and ate the pumpkin seeds.—The Sunbeam.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted by the Vestry of St. Matthew's Church Houma, Louisiana, October 3, 1927.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in His wise providence to take out of this world the soul of our deceased brother, JOHN DALTON SHAFFER, who departed this life on August 1, 1927; and

Whereas, Mr. Shaffer was for many years a communicant of St. Matthew's Church, served as Senior Warden 1896-1898 and Junior Warden 1891-96, 1904-1921, represented this parish many times in the Councils of the Diocese, and during the years of his active life manifested the deepest interest in the welfare of this parish; therefore be it Resolved,

That the Rector, Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Matthew's Church, Houma, do hereby express their deep appreciation of the long devotion and service given by our deceased brother, John Dalton Shaffer to the cause of the Kingdom of God in St. Matthew's Church and in the Diocese of Louisiana, and that they pray for him an entrance into the land of light and joy in the fellowship of the saints.

Attest:
GARDINER L. TUCKER, Rector.
J. DAILONER, Senior Warden.
CHARLES C. KUMBHAR, Junior Warden.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

at Fort Valley. This was brought about by an address before the Council by the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., Executive Secretary of the American Church Institute for Negroes, who was present to explain that the Institute has been forced to withdraw its support from St. Athanasius' School, Brunswick, in this diocese, which, in consequence, has had to close its doors. This is due to the fact that the National Council has been forced to curtail all of its appropriations, and the Institute's policy now is to have only one school in a state.

E. D. J.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton. D. D., Bishop.

Fall Convocation.

The fall convocation of the diocese was held in Calvary Church, the Rev. C. S. Sale, rector, beginning Tuesday evening, October 11, the Rev. Karl M. Block, D. D., of St. Louis, preaching.

At the business sessions held on Wednesday morning and afternoon, the Rev. Dr. Block conducted a helpful conference on the "Church's Program", his theme being "The Marching Orders of the Master".

The Every Member Canvass, its plans and purpose, was also presented by Dr. Block in the afternoon.

At night on Wednesday ten children were presented for Confirmation by the rector.

The Rev. C. S. Hale, of Ashland, is the President of the Convocation, and the Rev. Paul Due, of Paris, the Secretary for the ensuing year.

On Thursday morning the Cathedral Chapter of the Diocese held its regular October meeting.

Girls' Friendly House Dedicated.

The Mary Cabell Richardson Memorial Hall, the new Girls' Friendly Home of Trinity Branch, Trinity Church, Covington, the Rev. J. D. Gibson, rector, was dedicated, with appropriate services, on Sunday afternoon, October 9.

The principal speaker was the Hon. R. C. Simmons, of Covington, a member of the State Senate.

This home is the gift of Miss Mary Cabell Richardson, a communicant of Trinity Church.

Trinity branch was instituted in October, 1920, with nineteen members. Its present membership is two hundred.

The Rev. James M. Magruder, D. D., of Oxley Hall, Annapolis, Md., will be the locum tenens for six months, beginning November 1, in Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, during the illness of Dean Massie.

Dr. Magruder comes to this diocese as no stranger, he having served as rector of Trinity Church, Covington, from 1908 to 1914.

While in the diocese Dr. Magruder served as deputy to the General Conventions of 1910 and 1913; and also as president of the Standing Committee.

Plans for a new parish house for St. Paul's Church, Newport, the Rev. F. E. Cooley, rector, are now under way, with the prospect of beginning work soon.

The new parish house for St. Andrew's Parish,, Fort Thomas, is nearing completion; and will be a very great addition to the work of this aggressive parish.

T. H. G.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Chas. L. Brent, D. D., Bishop.
Rt Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Coadjutor.

An Interesting Ordination.

On Sunday morning, July 10, there was held in Lambeth Palace Chapel an ordination which is of particular interest to this diocese. At this service Bishop Brent advanced to the priesthood Eversley Ferris, the only son of Bishop Ferris.

Though this chapel, rich in the history of Church and state, has seen since 1250 the consecration of three hundred and fifty Bishops, among them Provost and White, never before had an American ordination been held there, and never before had an American Prayer Book been used.

Bishop Ferris presented his son, the Rev. Mr. Sackville of Providence read the Litany, and when it came to the Laying on of Hands, those who joined with Bishop Brent were the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishop Ferris, Mr. Sackville and Mr. Haig, Chaplain to the Archbishop.

By a happy coincidence some old friends of Bishop and Mrs. Ferris from Pittsburgh were present, also Dr. Sturgis of the Church Missions House, Deaconess Massey who had served under Bishop Brent in the Philippines and the Lambeth Palace household.

Service Broadcast.

Through the courtesy of radio station, WKBW, Buffalo, the Rev. James Cosby, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, has, for some time past, been broadcasting, at nine-thirty A. M., each Sunday, a Morning Prayer service, with short sermon, and hymns by a part of the church choir.

This service is gladly received, and appreciated by people who are unable to attend the services of the church.

The Chapel of Grace Church, Lockport, at Olcott Beach, was practically destroyed this summer by a devastating fire at that resort. The vestry have decided not to rebuild but to invest the insurance money in a fund the income of which can be used for parochial missionary work.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Andrew F. Forsythe, formerly of St. Mark's Church, Macon, Georgia, has accepted the appointment as minister-in-charge of Trinity Mission, Charlottesville, Va., and St. Paul's Church, Gordonsville. He will be in residence at Charlottesville.

The Rev. E. J. Saywell, of Middlesboro, Kentucky, is locum tenens during October, at Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Kentucky, during the illness of the Rev. R. K. Massie, D. D., Dean.

The Ven. F. F. Wentworth, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Lexington, has assumed charge of Emmanuel Mission, Winchester, Kentucky. The Archdeacon, in addition to this, ministers to several other missions in the diocese.

The Rev. William T. Travis, formerly rector of St. Mark's Church, Kansas City, Missouri, has accepted a call to St. Simon's Church, Chicago, with address at 4525 Dover Street.

The Rev. Frederick H. Sleep, formerly assistant at Christ Church, Fitchburg, Mass., has accepted a call to the Church of the Good Shepherd, Fitchburg, Mass., with address at 30 Parsons Street.

The Rev. Paul Due, of Paris, Ky., has resigned the charge of Emmanuel Mission, Winchester, Ky., his resignation taking effect September 1. Mr. Due, besides his work at Paris and Cynthiana, has assumed charge of the missions at Georgetown and Nicholasville, Ky.

The Rev. William E. Forsythe, formerly minister-in-charge of St. Jude's Church, Walterboro, and the Church of the Mediator, Edisto Island, S. C., has accepted a call to Faith Memorial Church, Waverly Mills, and St. Cyprian's Church, Georgetown, S. C., with address at Waverly Mills.

The Rev. Thomas B. Barlow, formerly rector of the Church of the Messiah, Pittsburgh, has accepted a call to St. Luke's Church, Niles, Ohio, with address at 53 Linden Avenue.

The Rev. L. D. Vaughan, formerly rector of St. James' Church, Boardman, Ohio, has accepted a call to be minister-in-charge of Grace Memorial Mission, Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio.

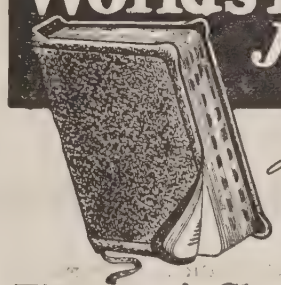
The Rev. Edward S. Doan, formerly of St. Andrew's Church, Las Cruces, New Mexico, has accepted a call to Emmanuel Church, Petoskey, Mich.

The Rev. Lewis R. Anschutz, formerly minister-in-charge of Holy Cross Church, Cumberland, Maryland, has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Springfield, Missouri, with address at 1412 Benton Ave.

The Rev. Harmon C. St. Clair, D. C. L., formerly rector of St. Stephen's Church, Ferguson, Missouri, has accepted a call to the Church of the Holy Communion, Paterson, New Jersey.

ORDINATIONS.

In Trinity Church, Edgefield, South Carolina, on October 11, the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop of Upper South Carolina, ordained William Hayne Folk to the diaconate.



The candidate was presented by the Rev. E. McC. Claytor, of Quincy, Fla., formerly rector of Trinity Church. The Rev. J. M. Wright, of Augusta, Ga., read the epistle and the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan of Columbia read the litany. The Bishop preached the sermon.

Mr. Folk is to be minister-in-charge of St. Paul's Mission, Graniteville, S. C., with address at Graniteville.

In Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, on September 22, the Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D. D., Bishop of California, ordained William Ellwood Craig to the diaconate for the Bishop of Los Angeles. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Dr. H. H. Powell, of the Cathedral, and the sermon was preached by Bishop Parsons. Mr. Craig will continue his studies at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, with address at 1051 Taylor Street, San Francisco.

THE BOOK THAT PROVES THE BIBLE INSPIRED

The trouble to-day is that thousands of people try to live a Christian life who depend for their knowledge of the Word of God on the man who preaches in the pulpit. You have no business to depend upon any man for your knowledge of the Word of God. You and I must read the Word for ourselves. Read your Bible regularly; read it consecutively, not anywhere you happen to open. Where are you to begin? In Genesis. You are troubled about the inspiration of the Bible and do you want to know a good book on the subject? I know a splendid book that settles the question. The Bible. I come to this Book on my knees and I am ashamed of how little I know of it, but what I do know enables me to realize that it is a precious Book.—G. Campbell Morgan.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S TOOLS

After all, the finest equipment any church can have is a corps of consecrated, enthusiastic, and active workers and teachers, well equipped both spiritually and materially for efficient service.

Any list of tools for the Christian worker must necessarily begin with the Bible itself. But there are many types and styles, from the large and handsomely bound pulpit Bible down to the very small pocket edition, each designed to fill a particular need. To sincere Bible students and teachers, a good reference Bible is well-nigh indispensable. In such, the results of years of careful research and Bible study of some of the world's greatest Bible scholars have been combined with the actual Bible text in such a way as to make quickly available a wealth of information and throw a flood of light upon the Scriptures. Sometimes a system of footnotes is used throughout the text. In other editions synopses of the books of the Bible are given, either immediately preceding each book or grouped together as a separate feature. Many reference Bibles include a list of all proper names, showing the verses in which they appear; a Bible atlas; a condensed concordance; and a carefully worked out subject index.

As is often the case where the good is found, the harmful may be found masquerading as the good. It is of prime importance, therefore, to the Christian worker to be able to recognize that which is not true to the Word and to the faith once for all delivered to the saints. Southern Churchman readers have come to realize that any reference Bible or translation of the Scriptures offered in its advertising columns is such that Southern Churchman can unqualifiedly recommend as true to the Word.

Equal care is exercised in the matter of advertising of helps and accessories for the Sunday-school teacher and the class. Bible picture cards, lesson scrolls, and lesson helps. If you have questions as to where to purchase anything in the way of Church equipment that is not found in the columns adjacent to this article, full information will be quickly furnished, if you will write to Church Equipment Service, Southern Churchman, Richmond, Va.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Every possessor of light is a debtor to those who sit in the dark.

"Love makes long service short, and hard service easy."

The fruit that will ripen to eternity, does not ripen in a moment.

To attain unto Christian objectives means much more than abstaining from wrong doing.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

The only doubts to be ashamed of are those you are proud of.

No change of circumstance can repair a defect in character.—Emerson.

"If none were sick, and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad
We never could be tender."

To secure a strong and spiritual life God's Word every day is indispensable. —Andrew Murray.

We know that He cares for us always;
We know that He keeps, and His name
Is the I Am, the true and the faithful,
The changeless, forever, the same
So if once we have known He was with us,
If once His great might He displays,
If for one day He leads us in triumph,
Why not all the days?
—Annie Johnson Flint.

Will God in very deed let me put my hand in His before I take one step into the rough, cold world, where there is so much to chill the heart and throw a cloud over the face of truth and purity and love? If He will, then I will lift my hand to His, and say, "Father, spurn not Thy poor weak child!"—Joseph Parker.

The editor of one of Japan's large ailies pays a glowing tribute to Christianity in the following words: "Look all over Japan. Over more than forty millions have a higher standard of morality than they have ever known. Our ideas of loyalty and obedience are higher than ever, and we inquire the cause of this great moral advance. We can find it in nothing else than the religion of Jesus Christ."

God accepts obedience without emotion, but can not accept emotion without obedience. To advise generosity and be selfish, to praise heroism and be a coward, to say, "Lord, Lord", and not do the things the Lord says—this is self-deception and self-destruction. God is willing to wait for grace and beauty, the high color of feeling, the glow of enthusiasm, if He gets plain obedience. —Maltbie D. Babcock.

BISHOP AND CANON

Secular newspapers have the saying that when a dog bites a man it is not news, being a frequent occurrence; but if a man should bite a dog it would be news because unusual. By that reasoning the clergyman who devotes himself to his sacred calling, preaches the pure Gospel, carries comfort and hope and brightens and lifts human hearts and souls wherever he goes and whenever he speaks is not news. He is usual. When a man with "Rev." before his name proclaims himself deserter from the Lord of Hosts, traitor in His camp, false to his own solemn vows, he is unusual and, therefore, news. A short and quick way for a "Rev.", panting for prominence, longing to see himself on front pages, is to cling to the "Rev." and publicly and blatantly repudiate and renounce all that "Rev." should mean, is entitled to mean.

One of the most recent travelers on this primrose path to display type, of the same style and size allowed for sensational murders, divorce cases, prize fights and political and financial scandals, is a "Rt. Rev."—the Rt. Rev. Ernest William Barnes, Bishop of Birmingham, of the Church of England. He arranged with the adroit skill of the advance agent of a circus or leg show to obtain the greatest possible publicity without payment of advertising rates. He preached in Westminster Abbey, proclaiming, among other proclamations, "Stories of the Garden of Eden have become for us only folklore. Darwin's triumph has destroyed the whole theological scheme. Man is not a being who has fallen from the ideal state of perfect innocence. He is an animal who is slowly gaining spiritual understanding".

When the Bishop of Birmingham was confirmed he renewed, in presence of God and the congregation, the solemn vow of baptism to believe all the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed and manfully to fight under Christ's banner. When he was ordained priest he declared himself persuaded that "the Holy Scriptures contain all the doctrine required as necessary for eternal salvation through Jesus Christ". He promised, by the help of God, "with all faithful diligence, to banish and drive away from the Church all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word". Consecrated a bishop, but three years ago, he renewed all these promises. Trampling them all, now, he pockets the stipend, enjoys the privileges and claims the respect allowed him on condition of his allegiance to those vows.

The soldier who deserts to the enemy openly, accepting the penalties and perils of desertion, is honorable compared with the soldier pretending to remain with his army and flag while laboring for their defeat and destruction, claiming all rights due his oath of allegiance while false to it.

What we plain, unlettered Churchmen cannot understand is how a sane, self-respecting man can thrust himself forward in such a position, vaunting publicly what looks to us like his own degradation and treason. Another point we cannot understand is how a mere animal, as this bishop says man is, can develop a spiritual life, how many generations or us must struggle for it by his estimate, before it is attained and what is to become of us who must live and die in the interval before attainment. As I gather from his sermon, none of the apostles or the persons we are accustomed to think of as saints and martyrs have reached it. And if there be no God, or if we have within us no spark of divinity, what can "spiritual" mean? Is it entranced immersion in the arts or the upper realms of arithmetic, or that indefinite condition known as "culture"? If so, what are the prospects for us who must work for our livings and be in contact continually with the rugged realities? Will art, or arithmetic or culture or philosophy —even Stoic philosophy—alleviate the anguish of the partings forced by death, subdue our evil impulses and passions, relieve us of remorse for evil done, make comfortable poverty, debts and the inescapable cares of life?

Another puzzle for us work-a-day folk is how these learned and highly cultured and cultivated can concede the existence of a Creator with power, purpose and knowledge beyond our comprehension, able to establish the law of gravitation, by which planets and systems of planets swing smoothly in appointed orbits, and yet contend that the miracles were impossible. We are obliged to confess inability to see sense in argument that the Power that gives life could not take and restore it, that the Creator of nature as we know it is forbidden to change its accustomed course at His will.

If Genesis is folklore, as the Bishop of Birmingham says it is, how did the writer of it know that this earth once was without form and void and that darkness was on the face of the deep? Was that a tradition brought down through millions of generations of apes and pulpy formations in warm lagoons?

There is no need for questioning, however. Convincing, conclusive, very instructive teaching is manifest in the contrast between the Bishop of Birmingham, scornfully ridiculing the doctrines and teachings of our Church as those of "Tennessee", and Canon Bullock-Webster, who arose promptly to rebuke and controvert him. Their biographies tell the story.

Both are Cambridge graduates. The bishop has taken high honors at the university, was tutor there. His one rectorship, he tells us, was as master of the Temple, his parishioners chiefly professional intellectual, most of whom he found skeptical in religion, "wistfully agnostic", too absorbed, we may suppose, in self-adulation to accept simple, straight, clear theology which the most uncultivated may comprehend and welcome. The bishop has been three years Bishop of Birmingham, a diocese containing many thousands of poor, humble, struggling souls, gasping for consolation and encouragement, to whom he has given small heed.

Canon Bullock-Webster is son of a soldier. He has been seventeen years rector of a busy parish in the city of London.

Their literary productions are known. The bishop has written and published "Gamma Functions", "Integral Functions", "Linear Differences in Equations". The canon has written and published "Manual of Missionary Intercession and Thanksgiving", "Handbook for Large Church Expression", "The Churchman's Manual", which has gone through six editions. The bishop went into higher mathematics. The canon went into the Church and its work. The bishop, sequestered and aloof, pampered his human mind, hampered, as all minds are, by human limitations, directed it through twisted paths of hypotheses, speculations, theories, to a desert of aridity, yielding only crops of ugly and stinging doubts. The canon, true to soldier blood and breeding, marched straight along the road of his duty, expanding, illuminating and warming his soul, to labor and service.

The contrasts are eloquent. They explain perfectly the contrasting attitudes and actions of the two men. Such contrasts in this country explain why the "Bible belt" encircles, pervades and maintains our republic. It encircles and controls because the huge majority of us, of all stations of life, are people with actual, practical needs and cravings and clear sense to realize them, and have real work to do, needing the guidance of the Bible to hold our feet in straight paths, to comfort and sustain us in our troubles and sorrows and gladden our hours of death. Intellectual and theological dilettante, dabblers, theorists, professors with kiln-dried minds, clergymen with nothing to do but think they are thinking, while cramping, pinching, freezing their own souls, strive to deprive us of the Bible, while, like the Bishop of Birmingham, offering us no recompense beyond vague, unmeaning suggestion of vague, indefinite spiritual development, to be attained nobody says how nor when. And this development is to be for animals in whom there is no kinship with Divinity, for whom there is no future nor life beyond the grave and decay.

LANGBOURNE MEADE WILLIAMS.

ANOTHER GOSPEL

The time has come for the unmasking of every serpentine system that is at work in the Christian Church destroying the Christian faith. We have no love for polemics and hold no personal brief against any one, but when supposedly brethren start a propaganda to substitute for the Christian faith a rival system of religion which is nothing more than Unitarianism in Christian garb, we cannot hold our peace. The recent conference of self-styled Liberal Evangelicals in Virginia is a call to arms to all who believe the Bible and hold the faith once delivered.

Their definition of Evangelism to begin with was vague and meaningless. It is true the word means good news, but what is the good news? The Bible tells us in these words: "Christ died for our sins according to the Scripture and that He was buried and that He rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures." But denatured evangelicalism says He did not die for our sins, and the Scriptures seem to have little weight with them, and that He did not rise bodily the third day; hence the evangelical part of the conference was a hoax—a semi-religio-modernist masquerade. Under this school there is to be no true final appeal to Scripture. Proof texts are an abomination. Why this?—because they have not Scriptural sanction for what they teach and further they claim the Bible is not God's infallible Word, at least the Old Testament is but a treasury of spiritual experiences; hence it has no authority. Their camouflaged authority is rationalism. How different from our Lord Jesus. He appealed to Scripture. Its testimony was an end to all argument—"ye do greatly err not knowing the Scriptures"—"have ye never read?"—"The Scriptures cannot be broken"—"He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself". The Modernist's Bible is not that of our Lord's. Their use of it is different and with a different Bible they have a different Christ from the Christ of the Word. If you will take note you will perceive that liberal evangelicalism constantly contradicts our Lord Jesus Christ. Will the Christian people of our Church stand for a Professor, who does not seem to believe the Bible, except in chosen spots, teaching in our Seminary.

The changes were rung on the changing Gospel to suit each age.

Like the critical theorizers, these vain doctrinaire freelances spin their spider webs out of their own subjective reasoning powers, to find later that they are false and must be changed. This new attitude is a reflex of the age. Jesus said that the Pharisees found fault with Him because he did not respond to their whims. "We have piped unto you and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you and ye have not lamented." Our Master was no reflex of His age. Their freedom is desire for wild speculative adventure while they ride the hobby of the newest phase of current Philos and bow at the bar of man's Reason. It is a man imposed authority. It is an effort to adjust unbelief to the gospel program. It is a gospel based on a rejected Old Testament. It arrogates the freedom to reject the soteriology of the apostles as Pauline; therefore not an integral part of God's Word, to emasculate the Gospels, questioning, if not denying the Virgin Birth, and Bodily Resurrection and with the residuum of a modified Unitarianism, with ethics as the paramount consideration —this is the mangled gospel that you have left—this seems to us to be self liberal evangelicalism, forsooth. The question is, whose word will stand, God's or their's. What God says is not subject to change. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever. It is the everlasting Gospel. Paul did not receive it from man. "If any man preach any other gospel than that ye have received, let him be accursed." If we seem intolerant, how about this statement of Paul's. To the law and to the testimony—if they speak not according to this Word it is because there is no light in them. Beware of this self-styled liberal evangelicalism. The apostles of this darkness are headed for the rocks. We have had the first installment—the preliminary skirmish. There is a vast deal yet to come. The carefully concealed unbelief and doubting has begun on the Bible. Get rid of this binding authority first. Now it is announced the next move will be to remove or explain away the Virgin Birth and the Bodily Resurrection. It is not surprising that the Creed is to them just a symbol with no binding significance—some elactic generalities to play fast and loose with. It is an attack worthy of Celsus and Porphyrius. This antique position, this ancientism has been wailing in all ages. "An infant crying in the night, an infant crying for the light and with no language but a cry." Such freedom, or rather license, means that you have your ears to the ground for the newest theory rumbling down the pike. It means being blown about by every wind of vain doctrine. It means the right to attack Scripture and to cut the sinews of gospel effort with the complete ignoring of gospel truth in announcing to men a second chance after death. This puts these liberal evangelicals in a class with that blasphemous, counterfeit cult of Russellism. Freedom from the authority of the Word began in Eden with Satan. The exciting cause is conceit of intellect, puffed up in knowledge, vanity of minds, sitting in the scorners' seat and hurling poisoned arrows of skepticism at the impregnable rock of Scriptures. The abuse of the word freedom by this school is nothing less than Satanic. To explain that liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free as applying to a licensed infidelity sounds like the devil's use of the Bible in the temptation of Christ. Freedom such as the Bible teaches, this liberal party ignores. Freedom in Christ means salvation, redemption from the curse which the Modernists deny. It is freedom from the law of sin and death. The wider evangelicalism seeks to make a sin-cursed world a desirable place to live in and denies the pilgrim character of the Christian life. It makes little of another world. Christ choosing His own out of the world seems to them a mistake. They deny that we are redeemed from this present evil world and that the whole world lieth in the wicked one. To them God's estimate of the lost and His picture of a ruined world is a back number. Science has changed it just as they say the second coming of Christ was a mistaken notion of the early Church. Such a wholesale destruction of all the essentials of sound evangelical faith, calling itself liberal evangelicalism is a reductio ad absurdum. This wider evangelicalism is in line with the Prince of this World. Paul's words apply here, "for such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ and no marvel for Satan himself would be transformed into an angel of light; therefore, it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness whose end should be according to their works" (2 Cor. 11:13-15). Ought men who have lost faith in God's inspired Word, and who deny its plain truth to stay in the Church? The heart of evangelicalism is salvation. With no blood atonement and no Resurrection there is no salvation. It is the gospel of misery. "If in this life only we have faith in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." The wideness of this so-called evangelicalism makes every one his own saviour. It is a modern Tower of Babel. It is another gospel. Promoters of such, God says, are accursed. "If Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins." These are the implications and underlying principles of the liberal evangelical conference recently held in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia. It was a very adroitly launched campaign. Forewarned is forearmed. Unless Christian people awake to combat this movement, the Episcopal Church will suffer. Doubters, scoffers and unsaved people will applaud, but those who know and love the Word, mourn such sad departure from the faith and can have no fellowship with such radical side-track movements that seem to have for their object the gathering in of the multitude by letting down the bars of straight thinking and sacrificing simple faith, as expressed in our Church Creeds through an overindulgence in a smoke screen of idle words and vain conversations.

"In law, what plea, so tainted and corrupt,
But seasoned with a gracious voice obscures the show of evil;
In religion what foolish error,
But some sober brow will bless it and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossest with fair ornament."

BISHOP EDWIN S. LINES, A NOTABLE CHURCHMAN

IF Bishop Lines of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Newark had an outstanding characteristic it was his humanness. There was little of the ascetic ecclesiastic in him, but much of broad understanding. A true priest, a wise prelate, a good man.

His Diocese, his Church, the City of Newark and the State of New Jersey will miss the Bishop. For more than twenty-four years he has been coming and going about his leadership, always friendly, helpful, sympathetic. As he grew in years he seemed to widen his mental horizons. Some of his public addresses were masterly in their grasp of the essentials of modern civilization. Always an optimist, he accepted changed conditions, new outlooks, and saw in them something that made for good. A blessed sense of humor forbade intolerance for aught but wrong and meanness and failing faith.

The Bishop was a stranger, in a sense, to the diocese when he came from a New Haven parish, even as did some of the original settlers of Newark, to be its Bishop. That was in 1903 when the diocese was not the important institution it since has become, largely through his direction. It was not long before the members of his communion realized that they had made no mistake in selecting him to succeed Bishop Thomas A. Starkey as the third prelate to guide the diocese since its erection in 1886.

Patriotic to the core, Bishop Lines was ever active when the interests of his city, state and nation needed him. At all celebrations of a patriotic character he took a leading part. Without self-exploitations, he exerted great influence in many fields. He never lost his trust in the basic good in people, nor in the sure triumph of the right. So passes a beloved bishop, fit company "For all the saints who from their labors rest".

The Bishop of Newark died at his home about noon, November 25. He had been prostrated by the heat early in the summer; and, while he recovered largely later at Matapoissett, he never again was able to take up work.

After a brief illness he suffered a stroke of paralysis early Tuesday morning and the end was not long delayed: a beautiful way to die, without the tedious, weary suffering of a long illness and without the shock of sudden death.

Bishop Lines was born in Naugatuck, Conn., November 23, 1845. He had a district school education and at an early age went to work in a rubber factory there. Possibly his memories of those years of adolescence had something to do with his earnest fight against child labor.

Later he had a better chance, at the Episcopal Academy at Cheshire and eventually worked his way through Yale College, had a year at the Yale Theological School, and another at Berkeley and was ordained in 1874 and became rector of Christ Church, West Haven.

Five years later he was called to St. Paul's, New Haven, where he worked for twenty-four years and then became Bishop of Newark, being consecrated on November 18, 1903.

Last May, he had announced to the members of the Convention of the Diocese that while he was not yet ready to resign as Bishop, he was turning over practically all the work to Bishop Stearly, the coadjutor.

He had hoped to round out the full twenty-five years in November, 1928. His mind remained clear and his memory distinct until the last, but his strength failed and the hope was not fulfilled.

Bishop Lines' first characteristic was earnestness and the second industry, both richly flavored with love to God and man.

He was a great student of books and of men, a great reader of the papers. Part of his support in college was from work as a reporter.

He studied hard and he held fast what he read; and he remembered distinctly the peoples he came to know and carried them in his mind and heart continually. Some humble and humble-minded woman wrote to him that he "would recognize her name because he always remembered the poor people". "The people in the hard places in life" and "The unprivileged classes" were expressions he often used and they stood for children of God who were very dear to him.

If genius is indeed unlimited patience he had genius. He could wait; and while he waited he worked. "The Union" would have disapproved vigorously of his daily round of study, parish calls and guild meetings. And his work told. St. Paul's was built up into a strong, united parish. The Diocese of Newark was both strengthened and harmonized. The Church at large felt the influence of his good judgment and strong faith.

All good works in the community in which he lived were welcome to whatever help he could give.

THE DIETY OF CHRIST

By P. R. Nugent

When on trial before the high priest Christ was asked, "Art Thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed"? Christ replied in the affirmative and was at once charged with blasphemy. Mark 14:61-63.

"Thou, being a man, makest thyself God," His hearers said. John 10:33.

The testimony of Thomas was, "My Lord and my God". John 20:28.

Christ's prayer, "Glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was". Preincarnate glory. John 17:5.

Christ forgave sins—the prerogative of God. Mark 2: 5-7.

Jehovah of the Old Testament identified with Jesus in the New. This is seen by (1) His name Jesus. Matt. 1: 21. This is the Greek form of the Hebrew Joshua, or Jehoshua, meaning Jehovah-saviour (or salvation). This name signified His office and His work of salvation. He was called Jehovah-saviour because He saves people. Jesus does it; Jehovah does it. They are one.

(2) His name Emmanuel—God with us. Matt. 1:23.

(3) What is said of Jehovah is said also of Jesus—Jehovah is Israel's King (Isa. 44:6). Jesus is Israel's King (Luke 23:3; Matt. 21:5). Jehovah is Redeemer (Isa. 54:8). Jesus is Redeemer (Eph. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:30).

(4) In Ex. 3:17 God gives His name as "I am". In John 8:58 Christ said, "Before Abraham was (Greek, genesthai, meaning, primarily, to begin to be, be born), I am (Greek eimi, meaning, primarily, to exist, to be)".. The latter word did not indicate a beginning as did the former.

(5) "These things said Isaiah when he saw His glory and spake of Him" (John 12:41). Isaiah's vision is recorded in Isa. 6:1-5, 9, 10. The seraphim in that vision are worshipping Jehovah. Jehovah and Christ are the same, for Isaiah saw the One whom the seraphim called Jehovah (Jehovah is indicated in the Old Testament by the word Lord in capital letters).

Christ "is before all things and by Him all things consist". Col. 1:17.

"Christ came, who is over all, God blessed forever." Rom. 9:5.

In 1 Tim. 3:16 it is: "God manifest in the flesh," etc.

Referring to Christ John says: "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." John 1:14. In 1:1-3—"The Word was God." (In the Greek, the word God occupies the prominent place of emphasis.) The One who made all things, who, therefore, is God, is the One whom John saw on earth veiled in human nature (1 John 1:1-3).

THE BLOOD SACRIFICE

By Thurman B. Rice, M. D.

HOW can we suppose that the shedding of the blood of a goat or an ox might absolve one of his sins? How can we believe that the blood on the door posts spared the Children of Israel on the occasion of the First Passover? or that the blood of the Man of Naareth can save us from the natural consequences of our sins? It doesn't sound very scientific in this matter of fact age. It isn't reasonable and logical according to modern standards. It sounds like some sort of superstitious fetishism.

But not so fast—not so fast! Isn't there abundance of evidence—scientific evidence if you wish—for the statement that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins? Until some one has suffered, bled and died progress has lagged with heavy feet and slow. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church" is no more true in religion than it is in science.

A certain city in Indiana, had been in the throes of an epidemic of scarlet fever for months. Only a few children had died of it—five or six—many had been quite ill, and several had been seriously injured. The people of the city had become blase on the subject of scarlet fever, Then the four fine children of a well loved minister of the city took the disease. For some unknown reason—it may have been a hereditary hypersusceptibility or the presence of some horribly virulent contaminating germ in the family, or just coincident—the disease suddenly assumed a most malignant form and within a week all four children were dead and buried. The poor man and his good wife were left without a child. A horrible catastrophe! But their blood was not shed in vain, because immediately the town arose and completely wiped out the disease. No more children died in that epidemic.

In 1916 we were appalled at the horror that swept over the Eastern States, and particularly struck New York City. Hundreds of children were dying of the dread poliomyelitis and other hundreds were having their beautiful strong legs and arms converted into useless dangling impediments. Our hearts bled for the tiny bodies so maimed and broken on the cruel wheel of infantile paralysis. Society arose as an irresistible force to protect its children. Doctors, research men, nurses, social workers, philanthropists, everybody gave money, time, and infinite effort to save the kiddies.

At last the epidemic subsided, and when the vital statistics for the year were compiled the amazing fact was revealed that in spite of the terrible epidemic fewer babies and children had died than ever before in the history of the city. Why? Because so much attention had been given to the well children, which they otherwise would not have gotten, that they were protected from other diseases not considered serious, but which kill many more children than infantile paralysis. In a sense the babies dying in the epidemic had given their lives for others.

When Louis Pasteur was a boy of nine he was passing the village blacksmith shop. He saw a great crowd standing about and heard terrible screams coming from within. A man had been bitten by a mad dog, and his neighbors were holding him while the smithy heated great irons white hot and thrust them sputtering and sizzling into the living flesh. A few weeks later several other neighbors, died horribly of the most dreaded of all diseases—hydrophobia.

The sensitive lad never forgot the horror of the scene, but who shall say that those poor wretches died in vain? When the boy Louis grew to be the great scientist Pasteur he resolved to conquer the dread disease that had made such a scene possible. Today thousands who are bitten take the treatment devised by this man and are saved from death in its most horrible form.

Roux and Von Behring exeperimented with deadly cultures of diphtheria germs. They tested the poisonous qualities of their cultures by injecting them into Guinea pigs. Later they determined the potency of their wonderful antitoxin by testing it on more Guinea pigs. Those were hard days for the poor pigs, and as a matter of fact these animals are still used in great number for the purpose of testing the killing power of the toxin, and the saving potency of the antitoxin. Who knows how many have been used? Probably a million or possibly several million of chittering, squealing pigs. But because their blood was shed the Angel of Death passes the homes of children whose parents have obeyed the edict of God concerning such matters, and the blood of Guinea pigs and horses saves the children of today just as the blood of goats and sheep saved the children of Israel in ye days of old.

Young Dr. Garre, enthusiastic and self-sacrificing—believed that the staphylococcus was the cause of boils. He isolated a culture of them, and deliberately poured it on his arm and rubbed it in. He found out all right! An enormous carbuncle surrounded by great boils appeared on the site innoculated. He suffered horribly, and came near losing his life or at least his arm, but he was satisfied—he had proved his point and the knowledge has helped millions.

Dr. Thuillier of the French Commission to investigate the cause of Asiatic cholera which was ravaging the world at the time waded into the dangerous work and gave his life fighting an unknown and invisible enemy. Others stepped into the breach and risked everything to find and slay the thing which was far more deadly than ten thousand dragons. By the shedding of their blood the world was made safe from cholera or at least that part of the world that was willing to clean up and obey the God-given commandments which show us the way.

Think you the blood of Walter Reed and Jesse Lazear was shed in vain? Willingly Drs. Carroll and Lazear, with Privates Kissinger and Moran, allowed themselves to be bitten by mosquitoes carrying the deadly germs of yellow fever. The first two were doctors and understood the danger quite well. They had seen the terrible suffering of patients with this disease. The other two were privates in the regular army. The danger was explained to them. "Very well," they said, "we volunteer solely for the cause of humanity and in the interest of medicine, on the condition, however, that we are to receive no extra pay for these services." Oh! how sick they were! Carroll came within an inch of losing his life. Lazear did not take it from this exposure, but later allowed himself to be bitten again, and this time died—a martyr. But yellow fever was conquered and is now practically eradicated from the earth. The blood of martyrs has miraculous powers!

Consider the heroism of the men of science who have recently worked out the cause of the dangerous disease tularemia. Practically every man who has spent any amount of time on it has developed the disease, and one of them has died of it. Would you, my reader, willingly and of your own free will undertake the study of a disease which was so infectious that you were practically certain to get it while pursuing your studies? Would you have undertaken the study of hydrophobia at a time when there was no remedy for it that was worth a snap of the fingers? Pasteur's laboratory was full of howling, snapping dogs dripping the most deadly saliva. Consider the sacrifice of Jesse Lazear. "Greater love than this hath no man that he should lay down his life for his friends."

God favored the blood sacrifice of Abel over that of the cheaper offering of Cain, and He since that day has set His blessing upon the offer of blood on the altar of service. It isn't because He is cruel or arbitrary, but rather because He knows that the world is made that way. Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin.

A CLERGYMAN'S WORK

J. deHart Bruen

A POPULAR idea of vacation is doing nothing—a rest. Two weeks' rest is enough—more than enough for most clergymen. A clergyman's little boy, saying his prayers the night before they started, said: "Good-bye God, we are going on a vacation." What clergymen need is not to say good-bye to religion even for two weeks, but a change of work. They must acquire in the first few years two forms of knowledge without which they cannot succeed, knowledge of themselves and knowledge of the world. They must learn their own limitations and take in sail. They must learn how little they know, and with increasing humility and reverent hands touch the holy things of God. For at least seven years they have lived with students in the classical light of educational institutions. When they plunge into the outer world they find other standards of judgment—experience substituted for authority and public opinion given undue weight. Parish management, parish visiting, two sermons a week fill their entire time. The text books are pushed back upon the shelf, and the lines of study followed in the last seven years are neglected. Natural sciences sweep on at terrific speed. They find little use for modern languages and ancient languages are lost in the past. Dust gathers on their Hebrew Bibles and with a sigh they push aside their Greek Testaments. They sacrifice their advance studies on the altar of present duties. Their statements about natural science bring smiles to the faces of men who have kept up to date. Their Bible quotations lack the freshness and beauty of thoughts taken directly from Hebrew and Greek springs—the very words used by the prophets and by the Master Himself. They are drifting toward disaster. The "dead line" is just ahead of them. They should never have lost their knowledge of Bible languages. They should have kept their German and French Bibles in constant use, for these translations throw new light on many a text. They should have kept in with the world's advance in the general sciences. In order to accomplish these purposes they needed to turn their churches over to others and reenforce their daily studies by vacations of work. Many summer schools have arisen to meet this need; the ablest instructors are employed, and thousands of teachers and preachers spend four to six weeks in intensive work. A short time given to hard study free from interruption, with the latest books and ablest teachers, restores lost knowledge, brings them closer to the Holy Scriptures and out into the sunlight of modern science.

Perhaps the experience of a man of eighty may be of use to younger men. Although I have always found my Greek and Hebrew Bibles my closest friends, and have kept my German and French Scriptures at hand for reference, I have felt the need of a period given exclusively to intensive and advanced study. For the last forty years I have gone to a summer school, leaving my church in the hands of others, and attending five or six lectures a day. Then before returning to my parish, I have left civilization behind me and with my tent, canoe and fishing rod, have spent two weeks in the great forest. In this last year, still in charge of a Church, I have, by my pen, reached more people and accomplished more work than ever before in the same length of time.

This unfinished poem was found in the pockets of the Rev. S. Hall Young, the Alaskan missionary and explorer, after his death by accident a few weeks ago.

Let me die working,
Still tackling plans, unfinished tasks undone.
Clean to its end swift may my race be run.
No lagging steps, no faltering, no shirking,
Let me die working.

Let me die thinking.
Let me fare forth still with an open mind.
Fresh secrets to unfold, new truths to find.
My soul undimmed, alert, no question blinking,
Let me die thinking.

Let me die laughing.
No sighing o'er past sins, they are forgiven.
Spilled on this earth are all the joys of heaven,
The wine of life, the cup of mirth still quaffing,
Let me die laughing.

THE MUSINGS OF A LAYMAN

J. Jones, Birmingham, Alabama

IT IS to be regretted that the subject of evolution remains so uppermost and so fixed in the minds of men; and particularly is it to be regretted that so many of the strong and meaty discourses from the pulpits of the Church have to be supplemented with a touch of evolution, by way of dessert. Is it beneath us to receive the Gospel of the Kingdom as little children? Is it to be considered the part of ignorance not to proclaim that concerning which we do and can know little or nothing about?

What is evolution, not the beautiful unfoldings of nature, but as it is taught today in regard to the human race? It is a science falsely so called, for it is submitted that a science to be truly so called must be based upon facts and be capable of demonstration.

It has become quite amusing the way mortal men toss about their thousands and millions, yes, and even billions of years, even as children play with shuttle cock and battledore, whereas time, in the abstract, like space is altogether beyond our comprehension. Time like space is eternal, it cannot be divided for the division would be equal to the whole, and it cannot be multiplied for the sum would be no greater than before. All we can know about time is what we accomplish or fail to accomplish between the characters on the dial of the clock, or between the rising and the setting of the sun; and if everything should be accelerated one hundredfold we could never know the difference. Time is no factor with the Almighty, with Him past and future are alike and present. So when the great Apostle, repeating the thoughts of the Psalmist says that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousands years as one day" makes it very clear that, if "a moment"—"the twinkling of an eye" is sufficient to change the corruptible into the incorruptible body, it is equally sufficient to bring into existence the corruptible as we know it, even though it must pass through all the various stages that the created would suggest to the Creator. Time to mortal man is, and must ever be, the measure of his incapacity.

The study of the great minds of the nineteenth century, Haeckel, Spencer, Darwin and the like, also, those who preceded them, reveal the fact that they are not agreed. They do but formulate and offer us theories and opinions, however fascinating those theories and opinions may be. Their evolutionary teachings do not evolve Christian faith, nor do they tend to steady the little faith of this faithless generation. They do but drift us toward the day of battle, the inevitable conflict between Divine revelation and questionable science, bringing to mind Christ's own question, "When the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth"?

There are, undoubtedly, many truly Christian characters and leaders, even among the highest dignitaries of the Church, who in their very charity, which believeth all things, are willing to accept the theory of man's development from "mere protoplasm" through a long line of descent which includes the monkey and ape. But their treatments of the subject are not fully satisfying to the thinking man. While they and Charles Darwin are in agreement that evolution does not necessarily interfere with the belief in an Almighty God—the First Cause of the scientist—they neglect to inform us at what period in the course of evolution, from protoplasm to man in his present exalted position, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, not as Darwin admits the possibility of, but so that man became a living soul, if it be so that man has a soul and so apart from all else in creation. Surely that Living Breath was not bestowed upon protoplasm, for then all animal life, man and beast, would be on an equal footing. Was it upon the aboriginal Indians of Patagonia, whom Darwin in his travels styled a race of monkeys? Or was it upon the poor Bushmen of the twin cape? Must this question be left to the evolutionists who would teach us, or allow us to believe, that sonship is not the direct gift of God but the gradual result of evolution which will eventually roll away the stone from the sepulchre and throw open the gates of everlasting life, or, with the imaginative, to hold that all material, even the dust of the earth, will be done away with by evolving into the spiritual and so return to God?

Again, evolution has at best, and of necessity, a misty and uncertain starting point; and none of the advocates of the descent of man from a protoplasmic beginning have dared to predict the end of evolution, its final goal, while all seem to agree that it is still in progress.

If the foregoing be true, it must necessarily be true that when the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity took upon Him to deliver man and to become incarnate by taking our nature, He became united to, and according to the early Fathers never to be separated from, a being which was as yet imperfect. If St. Paul the great metaphysician knew what he was talking about he certainly decried any such thought when he proclaimed the God-man, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday and today and forever".

When this same Jesus Christ who "sitteth on the right hand of the Father" "shall come again with glory" in His Godhead and in His Manhood "never to be divided" will He find man an altered and a different creature from the One who walked the paths of Galilee some two thousands years ago? But this is leading to untold speculation as inconvenient as unbearable.

The writer, while realizing the wonderful workings of Nature, fully and firmly believes that God created man in His own image, that He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and that he became a living soul; and that he has never been so perfect as when he left the hands of his Maker, except through Redeeming Grace, for "the path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day". But there is a path which leadeth unto darkness where "the last state is worse than the first".

Evolution need not be always upward progress. In the opinion of the writer who neither claims to be theologian or scientist, except that he thinks he has mastered the science of putting two and two together, there is more and stronger evidence that the monkey or ape descended from man than that the man descended from the monkey; and that God did not create the monkey as he is any more than He created the dragon of the Apocalypse. The writer's opinion is based on the following:

Without entering into the question as to the authorship of the Pentateuch or the date of such authorship, all will agree that the law, generally attributed to Moses, was written by a wise man, for all our boasted moral jurisprudence is built upon it; and that no wise man would frame a law to suggest a crime. So when a law is made and the penalty affixed it is to be supposed that the crime for which the law is made is apparent, even in the case of the law against sexual confusion, first mentioned in Exodus 22:19 and repeated again and again.

The Rt. Rev. Lord, Bishop of Birmingham, England, says that man is not a fallen creature; but Jesus Christ the God-man says that He came to save that which was lost; and His coming called for a Gethsemane and for a Calvary.

THE WYCLIFFE JUBILEE---A CALL

By the Reverend Professor Dyson Hague, D. D.

BY the grace of God and by the energy of His Almighty Spirit, this may be and shall be a great year for Evangelical Churchmen where Wycliffe men are found; and wheresoever in the whole world over the influence of Wycliffe operates.

This Year of Jubilee, 1927, all who bear the name of Wycliffe are summoned in the unity of the faith and of the glory of the Gospel to a great re-dedication of heart and mind and will to the great principles for which Wycliffe has stood, and for the truths more needed than ever today that have made it what it is. Fifty years ago in a day of very small things, Wycliffe College started. A small handful of men with very large faith and big hopes began this work. This year we are to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of that beginning, admiring with deep humility the great Grace of God and the working of His Spirit through the past years, and shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, hand in hand, with charity to all and malice to none, stand in solid phalanx prepared to do greater things for Christ's sake and the Gospel in our beloved Church of England in Canada.

The Time Has Come.

We believe that the time has come for a great forward movement on behalf of the principles for which Wycliffe College and Wycliffe men have stood and are standing today. We believe that this Jubilee Year should be a year for an unprecedented advance of the forces of Evangelical Churchmanship in Canada. We are on a rising tide. The successes of a quarter century ago seem insignificant now. Doors have opened in many Dioceses at home, and in many lands across the seas. Victories have been won by the Grace of God at home and afar. Our men have gone to the uttermost parts of the earth. Today the name of Wycliffe is known through its historic missionaries, its Bishops, its missionary activities in every continent in the world. Great and various fields of service have opened before Wycliffe men, and in obedience to the beckoning Hand of the Master our men have pressed in to preach the Gospel of Christ in its purity and power. But if great doors and energetic—effectual (1 Cor. 16:9) have opened before us, there are many adversaries, and if we are to withstand, and having done all things to stand, we must realize that today we must have a great revival in the Wycliffe body of the passion for Reformation truth and that passion for souls which was the very heart and soul of the original Wycliffe College movement.

A Bishop's Rallying Call.

Across the ocean a few weeks ago at the Centenary Islington Clerical Conference, that great English Bishop Chavasse sent out a clarion call to Evangelicals that might well be re-echoed across the seas in the ears of all Wycliffe supporters. Answering to his own question, "What can the Evangelical School do to help the Church of England at this present moment"? the Bishop declared: First—There must be love. We must cultivate unity. We must hold together. History warns us of the sin of internal dissension. Unless we hold together the Spirit of God cannot use us.

Second—We must be faithful to Evangelical truth. We must tell men of salvation, of faith which is the gift of God. Out of the fullness of our own experience, we must tell that Christ forgives sins. Too much of our Evangelical preaching is earnest, reverent, scholarly, interesting, up-to-date, but it's ineffective It does not bite. It doesn't touch men's hearts and consciences. It fails to tell of the blood that cleanses from all sin.

Third—There must be self-sacrifice. Easy going lovers of comfort, ready to avoid hardships and to choose out easy places, restless to change, prompt to retire; these men will never advance the Evangelical cause. We must be content to bear unpopularity for the sake of the Lord.

The Bishop's Appeal.

The Bishop closed his magnificent appeal with these great words:

"As Evangelical Churchmen, let us close our ranks, stand by each other, fight shoulder to shoulder, and be united. The danger of Protestantism is excessive individualism leading to disintegration. The devil's policy is to divide and rule. We must make it our object to thwart the devil. Then we must stand by our old methods, we must teach Christ, live Christ. We must educate and not agitate. A policy of fierce controversy, stern denunciation, legal prosecution spells disaster and defeat. Let us prevail by patient penetration. And we must stand by the Church. Stand by the Church of England. There will be a great revival in our Church, stand by it. As Bishop Ryle said, 'We occupy an impregnable position. The Bible, the Prayer Book, the Articles are all on our side'. The standard of the faith has ever gone forward. Let us stand together in faith and hope, sacrifice and enthusiasm, conviction and courage until He come, and still greater victories will mark our cause."

The Duty of the Hour.

Our duty as Wycliffe men and supporters is clear. Up with our hearts! Up to the Lord let us lift them; to our Risen, Reigning, Returning King! This is a day of good tidings, a day when the world is waiting for the men who preach the Word with unfaltering conviction and voices unashamed. If we hold our peace, our silence will be our punishment. Now therefore come, that we may go and tell the King's household (2 Kings 7:9).

The Call To Go Forward.

If ever there was a day when Wycliffe men should stand fast with courage, and go forward with the great hope, it is today. We have won our place in the Church. The days of abuse and boycotting are gone. Our right to exist, and our place as loyal Churchmen is universally acknowledged. Our graduates are honored in every Diocese, and in many a Parish and Deanery their spiritual earnestness has breathed new life and brought new strength. For the genius of Evangelical Churchmanship has ever been twofold: first spiritual, and after that practical. The Evangelicals in England transformed the Church by Gospel preaching, personal work, prayer meetings, Bible classes, missions, Sunday Schools, social service, lay and Deaconess workers, foreign missions, hearty services and simple, and all with enthusiasm and devotion as loyal Churchmen, glorying in the fact that they were the true representatives of the teaching and order of the Church of England.

This great Heritage, this great Unfinished Task, this Vision Splendid, is ours today. Ours is the Pauline glory. Ours it is to carry a flag that won a thousand battles, the glorious Gospels (2 Cor. 4:4-6). Ours it is to win back to Christ and His Church the myriads who have been driven away by the deadness and dryness of formal Churchism. Ours it is to carry on with ever increasing power the victorious achievements of the past.

Only let us be humble. Only let us be grateful. Only let us be brave. Only let us be true; more love-filled, more spirit-filled, more Word-enriched (Col. 3:16). Only let us be clear, knowing not only what but Whom we believe. Only let us be more and more experts and specialists, not carried away by every modern fad, and up-to-date worldly methods, but minding our Father's business. Then, so far from being a waning or a dying force, we will as Evangelicals go from strength to strength, and by the Grace of God help to inaugurate the Great Revival the world and the Church of the Twentieth Century so greatly need.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

LESSON NO. 6.
TOPIC—WHAT THE TRUE CHURCH REALLY IS.
(Read all of Col. 1.)

We have now advanced nearly two thousand years into the Sixth Dispensation or Church Age, and it is vital to know whether we truly belong to the Church which our Lord will some day call to be with Him. It matters not so much about the corporate name so far as non-essential denominational issues are concerned, but rather, have we been united to that invisible body, redeemed by the precious Blood of Christ and of which He is the head. We need to get very straight on this as thousands with names enrolled upon the records of the visible churches, appear to know nothing of being "born again", and without assurance of their names being written in the Lamb's Book of Life.—Rev. 21:27.

We should, therefore, consider with deepest interest, what the Written Word reveals concerning the Church.

1. The Church is a company of believers, called out from a world that lieth in wickedness.—John 15:19; 1 John 5:19; 1 John 2:15.
2. The Church is formed of "born again" ones.—John 3:7; 1 Peter 1:23; Eph. 2:22, 23.
3. An organism united to Christ, who is the head.—John 15:1-8. Eph. 1:22, 23; Col. 1:18.
4. Concealed in "Old Testament" but came into view at Calvary. A mystery.—Acts 2:1-47; Rom. 16:25, 26. Acts 20:28.
5. Purchased with His own Blood.—Acts 20:28.
6. The Church, the Bride of Christ.—2 Cor. 11:2; Eph. 5:23-27.
7. As members, we are complete in Christ.—Col. 2:9, 10.
8. Every believer a necessary part and related one to the other.—1 Cor. 12:12-27; Eph. 2:22.
9. Cleansed by the Word.—Eph. 5:26.
10. The Church's true mission; preaching and witnessing. —Acts 1:8.
11. Serving and waiting for her Lord.—1 Thess. 1:9, 10.
12. To live soberly, righteously and godly: "Looking for that blessed hope" and which is the end of the Church Age.—Titus 12:13; 2 Thess. 4:16, 17; 1 Cor. 15:52; Matt. 25:10.
13. Triumphant return of the Church with her Lord when He sets up His kingdom on earth; establishes His reign of righteousness, and "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea". —Matt. 24:29, 30; Rev. 19:7-21; Isa. 11:9.

Note.—The careful student of the Word will be careful to distinguish the difference between our Lord coming for His Church "as a thief in the night" (unexpected) and His coming with His Church, when every eye shall see Him". The first is known as the "rapture" and the second as the "revelation". These stupendous events in the world's history will be treated in some future lesson.

When mankind comes to its completeness in Christ it will be able surely to rejoice in every triumph of God in this world, and at the same time be filled with love and tenderness for the most hateful of those who work against God. What is the passage in the New Testament to set alongside the song of Deborah? "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord." Turn to the great New Testament and hear the prayer of Jesus on the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Between that barbaric cry of triumph over the destruction of God's enemies and this infinite compassion of our Saviour what a vast difference.

Not until we have come to the place where we shall absolutely rejoice in every work of Christ, with that testimony of our joy which comes only from our complete dedication, and, at the same time, having nothing in ourselves but that pity and desire to help even the worst of men, not until then do we show ourselves to be true disciples of the Master.—Phillips Brooks.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

APPROVAL.

Mr. Editor:

No bill has come from you to me for the coming year, so I enclose check for $3 for subscription, ending October, 1928. Your paper is a spiritual joy.

ANNA G. KELLOGG.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Mr. Editor:

Kindly change my address from 211 Beacon Boulevard, Sea Girt, New Jersey, to Hotel Covington, West Philadelphia, Penn. I am here until May and do not want to miss a single copy of The Southern Churchman, which is my own dear home Church paper. Keep up the good work you have started for His sake. The Bible is the Book we all need today, every day and forever.

(MISS) ALICE GRAY FAUNTLEROY, R. N.

AN APPEAL.

Mr. Editor:

Please, if you please, in a few words, say that Wm. R. Savage, "a missionary and the son of a missionary", would be glad of used copies of the Mission Hymnal with and without music, for his mission stations in the Diocese of Western North Carolina. His address is Glendale Springs, Ashe County, North Carolina.

WM. R. SAVAGE.

A WARNING.

Mr. Editor:

A man traveling from the West Coast to the East Coast under the name of Fred L. Meyers, having letters from clergymen in New York City, forged two checks to the amount of $30, using my name. This man is sixty-three years of age, about five feet ten inches in height, is slightly lame and has a good "line" and convinces one that he is a Churchman.

A wire to the Very Rev. John W. Day, the Deanery, Topeka, Kansas, in regard to this man's whereabouts will be greatly appreciated.

JOHN WARREN DAY.

ST. PAUL NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor:

I am sure you will be willing to let your readers know how the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School is progressing with its Building Program. Early in the year we set out to raise $100,000, towards which the General Education Board pledged $33,333.34, or one-third of the amount asked for. We, the American Church Institute and the School, soon found that this sum would not be sufficient to erect and equip the much needed buildings and cancel the School's outstanding obligations, hence our objective was placed at $200,000.

I am sure your readers will be pleased to learn that we are moving toward the goal. The first of October found us short of the goal by $68,000, and an appeal from the School to its old friend, Mr. Julius Rosenwald, brought his pledge of $10,000 on condition that the School raise the remaining $58,000 by December 31. The Institute and the School will renew their efforts to meet Mr. Rosenwald's offer.

Surely Churchmen will not allow the offer of Mr. Rosenwald, our Jewish friend, to be lost. Will not our rich and well-to-do Churchmen respond at once, and thus make the Principal's seventieth birthday, December 20, the happiest of all the days of his forty years as principal of the School? I beg your readers to come to our rescue. Checks may be made to Mr. Charles E. May, Treasurer, or to the Treasurer of the Institute, marked, "Special for St. Paul's Building Campaign". I beg you to accept my thanks in advance for your kindness.

JAMES S. RUSSELL,
Principal and Archdeacon for Colored Work, Southern Virginia.

ENDORSEMENT.

Mr. Editor:

Never before in the history of the able editorship of The Southern Churchman is it as well entitled to receive the deserved support of all its readers, cleric and lay. Maybe it may please you, as once before, to have a theologian rally to your standard, one returning after a life's study from a monastic and priestly contemplative life to the purest doctrine of the simple Episcopal Church, surely none other than that we all claim found in the pages of an Ignatius, Irenaeus, and a Cyprian.

Your fervor and truth in the battle for the entire inspiration of Canonical Scripture and for the entire support true Science gives to the same is but the continued testimony of those first great Christian martyrs. Fundamental teaching of the true Episcopal Church of the United States and Great Britain today, no matter how a number of well-meaning, but misdirected by erroneously preconceived ideas, Churchmen try to define the expression fundamentalism in a limited sense—essential truth is fundamental.

Keep on valiant defenders!

Let no rude blast shake your sturdy growth. Your pen is itself your doctor's degree. It is red from the color stained on the Cross. Your triumph the conquest of our Seminarians, youth and professors, the gain from error of our devoted men and women workers in that effort towards reunion with the Eastern and divided brethren who themselves are loyal and devoted to the integrity of the Bible. Archaeology every day turns up with the spade Scriptural confirmation. The greatest geological work of the year, "The New Geology", of Professor George McReady Price, proves the Flood, a great catastrophe, is admitted by the greatest scientists the only proof of existing flora, fauna, strata. The Bible itself is truly scientific, properly interpreted, not parade away.

History repeats itself. Weakness in the pulpit yielding to false science, only to find religious profession has been abandoned together with Science—alas! Is it forgotten God is Author of both?

A CHURCH AT WORK.

Mr. Editor:

Since the "Peccavi" and "Gaudeo" editorial, I feel inclined to make a contribution to the subject of "Vacations".

Vacations are necessary evils;; but they may be made to work out for the good of the parish, instead of passively being accepted as a detriment.

Of course it is taken for granted that they are for the good of the parish, in that the minister will be much refreshed, and can do better work. And often they are used for "repair work". I know of two who spent most of their time at hospitals this last summer; and such has become quite a practice.

The other benefit to the parish I will show by a concrete example. Before leaving for vacation on August 15, I selected seven laymen (all of whom had previously been appointed by the Bishop as lay-readers) to carry on the morning services during my absence—a month.

First, I prepared a Bulletin for the Board, and a copy for each of the seven, showing lessons, psalms, and title of sermon-substitute for each day. On some Sundays three men would take part in the service, one having the service, one the lessons, and another the sermon. Next I visited each one, and told him what I wanted him to do. Each one accepted it as his work.

Three laymen saw the Sunday School through the same period. There was no break anywhere. The congregation responded wonderfully; and it did the laymen a world of good.

Evangelistic Organizations.

Apropos another editorial, may I contribute this. I have a group of men, six in number, who meet at the rectory sometimes once a week, or once in two weeks, or once a month, as the work indicates.

We meet around a table very informally—for prayer, some study about Evangelism; and then we take up the spiritual work of the parish, how we may re-kindle the dying embers and strike a spark in the jungle of the indifferent.

These six men head six groups, in which are included every member of the parish. There are two purposes of equal importance—one to arouse the members to fulfill their duties of worship and work; and the other to see that every non-Church member in the city has the right kind of an appeal made to him to become a Christian.

To fulfill the first purpose the leader will get a meeting of his group and talk over the matter of their responsibility and influence for or against the Cause. Those who do not come to the meeting will be seen personally.

The "Possibles" are divided up among the leaders, according to our best judgment, and each will be approached as seems wisest. This particular plan was originated by men alone for men; but they did not stop there.

We decided to ask the Director of the Daughters of the King to select some leaders to do a like work among the women. The Chairman of the men and I met them and explained the proposition. Later the minister met the leaders around the table, and the same kind of work was done as with the men.

These groups propose to present a Confirmation Class in December of a certain minimum, that is not less than one to each group.

Do not get the idea that this is a "red and blue" race, et cetera, with the spectacular circus trimmings. People will not hear of it at all except as I have stated. It is the substitution of an endeavor to do a definite thing for an aimless "do-nothingness".

Church Intelligence

The Conference of Virginia Liberal Evangelicals.

Reported by Thomas Semmes.

This conference, which was held in the Parish House of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, October 25-26, was attended by over one hundred of the clergy. A few of the Richmond laity were present and a very good congregation assembled in the church Tuesday night to hear Dr. Thos. K. Nelson's address entitled, "The Modern Use of the Bible".

Dr. B. D. Tucker, Jr., rector of St. Paul's, who called the conference together, in his opening address stated that the idea of the conference was similar to that of our Church Congress. At the closing session Wednesday afternoon a motion to continue it was carried and a committee will be named consisting of three men chosen from each of the four Virginia dioceses to plan for future meetings. The mover of the resolution suggested that it be made more of a conference, that the program should not be so heavily loaded that time could not be allowed for a discussion of the questions presented. At this conference the "discussion", for the most part, was another paper or two on the same subject. An exception to this was Tuesday afternoon on the subject of the "Parson". Three very able and brilliant papers were read followed by speakers without notes.

In this article the writer is not only making a report of the conference, but some comment on one point at issue, because time did not allow for it at the conference.

Such discussions should be planned with great care and reasonable time allowed for expressions of opposing views on all the subjects treated. As Dr. Tucker put it in his opening address, he hoped that the conference would be "an open forum for the frank discussion of problems which confront the Church's faith and the Church's life".

The scope of this article does not permit even a brief outline of each of the papers presented. Most of these papers were of unusual merit and quite up to the standard of conferences addresses.

The Rev. F. D. Goodwin's address on "The Country Parson" was a fine statement of the present-day conditions of the country parish and its needs. The chief need now is the same as in times past, a strong, consecrated man filled with the power of the Spirit of God to give his life in devoted service. Such ministries invariably bring forth much fruit. Virginia has some notable examples of much beloved Country Parsons.

Dr. Wm. A. Brown of Portsmouth read one of the best papers of the conference. It was well thought out by a man fully acquainted with his subject and able to express his thought in clear and suitable terms. It would make good reading, if printed, in our Church papers, and we hope to print it in full or in part in the Southern Churchman.

Rev. Noble C. Powell, rector of St. Paul's Church, University of Virginia, presented the difficulties of "The College Parson" in a very brilliant paper. If the difficulties of the city parson are many and complicated, think of the problems confronting the pastor of hundreds of college students. All the tactfulness of St. Paul and the wisdom of Solomon are needed to lead the average school boy to think in terms of personal devotion and consecration to God and his fellow men. And yet Christ has as great an attraction to youth as to maturity. The problem is to bring the boy and Christ together, and to "lift up Christ" so that the boy will be drawn to Him.

The evening ssesion of the conference was held at eight o'clock in St. Paul's Church. The church was well filled with the same sort of audience the noon-day lenten services attract.

The title of Dr. Nelson's address was "The Modern Use of the Bible", but the address was chiefly occupied with two theories of Biblical inspiration, the verbal and infallible and the personal or vital inspiration. He began with the usual discussion of the contradictions and errors of the texts and versions showing that full verbal inspiration was impossible and that such a theory "tends to produce unnecessary conflicts between religion and science". Much of the cruelty and persecution in the Church was the result of a false conception of God and a misapprehension of His nature and character through the theory of verbal inspiration. He pointed out that the imprecatory Psalms reverse the teachings of Christ and also the teaching of Leviticus 19:18, and that there was absolute contradiction in the doctrinal teaching in Ecclesiastes with the repeated and clear teachings of Christ as to a future life.

The Church has never been able to follow this theory to its logical conclusion, he said. Men within the Church have made deadly use of texts and teachings of the Old Testament to justify murders and crimes, in the name of God. The theory has also destroyed the faith of many in the Church.

The other theory of personal, vital inspiration is the guidance men have had of the Holy Spirit in the deepest and most spiritual experiences of their inner life. Holy men of old, patriarchs and prophets, apostles and saints of the Church spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. This belief in inspiration leads men into the purest and highest spiritual life. It is the working of the Spirit of God upon the spirit of men. "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth, so is every one born of the Spirit." It was St. Paul's conviction, born of the Spirit, when he said, "not I, but Christ liveth in me".

Inspiration has not ceased. God still speaks to humble minds. The Holy Ghost "shall guide you into all truth". With this belief in inspiration the Old Testament loses nothing of its power and authority over men.

Dr. Nelson was followed by addresses from the Rev. N. E. Wicker, of Danville, Virginia; the Rev. A. C. Tebeau and the Rev. W. H. Laird, of Richmond. Mr. Wicker read a carefully prepared and conservative paper which deserves special mention.

On Wednesday morning the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, of Staunton, Virginia, read a paper on "The Interpretation of the Creeds". From our hearing of his address we cannot see an honest reason for using the creeds. To be sincere we cannot say that Jesus was born of a virgin unless we truly believe it. If we do not believe it we ought not to say it. Playing with the truth is not a real approach to the God of Truth. Creed means what we believe. If a creedless Church is impossible, as Mr. Gibbs states, then the Church must put in her creed the statement of the truth as she truly believes it and when her members stand up in the presence of God, in His holy temple, and repeat their formula of faith, they surely ought, in such Presence, to mean what they say. This was the position of the early Church.

This second note of the real purpose of the conference to discuss the vital articles of the Christian faith was followed by a proposal or recommendation of Dr. Goodwin that he thought it would be advisable to reconstruct the creed with the articles, "born of a virgin" and the "resurrection of the body", omitted. Dr. Tucker, the chairman of the conference, asked if he desired to put that in the form of a resolution, and Dr. Goodwin said no, but he suggested it as a recommendation.

There is no reasonable doubt that the apostles and early Church accepted the bodily resurrection of Christ and the Church grew rapidly in the belief of that fact. The Acts of the Apostles and the epistles of St. Paul abound in references to and teaching based upon the bodily resurrection of the Head of the Church. If the Church rejects this article of faith, in this day, She must build another foundation for a modern and different Church. She must take out, as Thomas Jefferson did, the supernatural and miraculous records of the New Testament. She must class the apostles and evangelists with St. Paul and all the master minds of the Church in all the centuries, down to the middle of the nineteenth, as men who could not separate fiction from fact. The whole system of theology, beginning with St. Paul, of redemption, atonement reconciliation and justification falls as a house of cards.

The Rev. Carleton Barnwell, of Lynchburg, followed Mr. Gibbs in a more conservative style on the credal formulae.

Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, of Williamsburg, Virginia, delivered a very earnest address on "The Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion". The address was filled with beautiful spiritual thoughts approaching at times the mysticism and spiritual vision of Thomas a Kempis and Gerson.

Dr. Cary Montague received the most general and prolonged applause of the conference as he rose to speak on "The Church's Place in Community Activities". His address was characteristic and brief. He urged cooperation of the Church with the state and communitly activities. The Rev. Robert Nelson stated that the Church and its ministers did not cooperate with the community interests and benevolent work.

This is not true of Richmond. The Rev. William Meade Clark, of blessed memory, once stated to this writer that practically every benevolent work in Richmond had been begun or supported by Episcopalians. The Associated Charities of Richmond was strongly supported by the Richmond Clericus when it was organized and its first two presidents were rectors of churches here. This writer was on the first committee to consider the establishment of Catawba and Pine Camp and our present City Missionary is a shining example of cooperation with all kinds of community welfare.

The Rev. C. W. Sheerin, of Fredericksburg, read a brilliantly written paper on Recreation and Amusements. The ability of this young rector gives promise of large usefulness in the Church.

The ladies of St. Paul's Church served an ample and most delightful lunch at two o'clock, which seemed to be unanimously approved and inwardly received. It was the noisiest and most satisfactory event of the day.

About three o'clock Dr. H. H. Covington, of Norfolk, presented a paper on "The Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. of America" in his usual effective way. He recited incidents and points in the history of the early Church in Virginia, which were unfamiliar to most of us. It was a paper worthy of preservation and we hope to print it for the benefit of the readers of the Southern Churchman at an early date.

The Rev. W. E. Cox, of Richmond, in a very gentle but firm manner spoke out his conviction that "we need to be reconverted to 'faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and Him Crucified'. Christ did not send us out," he said, "to solve the problems of the Universe. He sent us to be witnesses to Him, and when we have witnessed to Him and to His Church, we have fulfilled our share of responsibility and can trust Him for results."

Mr. Cox stated that he did not presume himself nor did he sponsor any man who did presume to "check up" on Jesus Christ. He accepted Him as Lord and Saviour and was fully satisfied with Him as the New Testament revealed Him.

The final address was made by the Rev. A. C. Zabriskie, of the Virginia Seminary, on the progress of Church Unity. He showed a very thorough understanding of the present status of the great effort to bring unity to the Church and the difficulties and problems connected with its accomplishment.

The conference adjourned after the singing of the hymn, "Blest Be the Tie". The Bishop of Southern Virginia had opened the conference with prayer. The Bishop of Virginia closed it with the benediction.

Philadelphia Conference Brotherhood of St. Andrew, October 15-16.

Two hundred and twenty-three men and older boys, representing eighteen dioceses, mainly of the First, Second and Third Provinces of the Church, came together for the Philadelphia conference of the Brotherhood.

The sessions, held mainly in Holy Trinity Parish House, were opened Saturday afternoon, October 15, by Percival H. Granger, President of the Pennsylvania Diocesan Assembly. Addresses of welcome were made by National President Bonsall, representing the local Brotherhood; by Dr. Tomkins, for the host parish; and by Bishop Garland for people of the diocese. Dr. Tomkins led in a devotional period, and set a high spiritual note for the following services.

An outstanding address was that of Prof. Edwin B. Twitmyer of the University of Pennsylvania, who spoke of the psychological aspects of leadership of boys.

Following a reception at the Bishop's House, supper to two hundred was served in the Church House, and again in Holy Trinity Parish House, to a large company. Mr. Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood, delivered the charge to the conference. He stressed the parish program of evangelism adopted jointly by the National Commission on Evangelism, the Daughters of the King and the Brotherhood. and outlined the suggested work of the smaller and newer chapters as being the actual bringing of men to Church, and suggested for the larger groups the varied organized work possible in the new program.

Bishop Cook conducted the preparation for the Corporate Communion Saturday night in Holy Trinity Church, and said humility, cheerfulness and seriousness of thought and purpose should be among the attributes of the devout Christian. The Corporate Communion followed the next morning in the same church, with Bishop Garland as celebrant, assisted by Bishop Cook, Dr. Tomkins and the Rev. Vincent Bennett, assistant in the parish.

Bishop Lloyd preached the conference sermon in Old Christ Church. It was an intimate address to the Brotherhood, referring to his own beginning days in the Brotherhood nearly four decades ago, and urging the members because of the Brotherhood's achievements among men, not to grow weary in well doing. Such things as the Brotherhood stands for are the important things today no matter what men say, the Brotherhood and others of like mind are in a strategic position, with duty before them.

In Holy Trinity Parish House that afternoon an open conference was held on "Practical Plans for Personal Workers", with addresses by the Rev. John R. Hart, Jr.; Captain Mountford of the English Church Army, and the Rev. Frank Cox, rector of the Ascension Memorial Church, New York City. Some of the high lights of the conference were: "If witnessing means persuading (and it ought to) then we who try to persuade must be persuaded ourselves first." "When we can get the man in the pew to go out (after men) we can get the man in the streets to come in." "It is needful to bring men to Christ as well as into the Church."

Former Senator George Wharton Pepper was the speaker at Holy Trinity Church for the final public service Sunday night. His subject was, "The World Awake to Evangelism". He gave full credit for much that has been done, but the Brotherhood, he said, should be so fine in its leadership that it would be entitled to the designation Exhibit A in the work of evangelism.

The Juniors had their own program, but in many of the main things of the conference joined with the men. Those taking part exclusively in the Junior part included the Rev. Edmund L. Gettier of Baltimore, the Rev. John W. Irwin and the Rev. John McGrory of Philadelphia; Messrs C. Lawson Willard of Bayside, L. I., Clarence W. Brickman of Yonkers, Haydon O. Merrill and Raymond Patton of Philadelphia. Their preparation for the Corporate Communion was conducted by the Rev. Stanley V. Wilcox, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church in South Philadelphia.

Episcopal Clergymen Opposed to Debate.

Portland, Ore., Octo. 19.—Declaring that "God's commands are to be obeyed not debated", clergy representing the Diocese of Oregon issued a statement today opposing the Judge Ben B. Lindsey and Rabbi Lewis I. Newman "companionate marriage" debate.

Lindsey, who won fame as juvenile court judge of Denver, and Newman, a modernistic rabbi of San Francisco, are to debate on Lindsey's marriage, divorce and parenthood ideas here Saturday night.

"God has decreed that one man shall have as wife one woman, by whom alone each may have of the other children, who, with the parents shall constitute the social unit, the family," the statement of the Episcopal clergy says. "We believe," continues the statement, "this position to be so irrefutably established not only as the law of God and of the Church, but by human experience generally, as not be to susceptible of debate."—The Dallas Daily Chronicle.

Bishop Brent To Rest.

The Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, D. D., Bishop of Western New York, has been advised by his physicians to take two months of complete freedom from any responsibility whatever, during which period he is to be under medical treatment. He will be unable to receive any communications during that period, and requests that all letters relative to diocesan matters be referred to the bishop coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Gift to Diocese.

This diocese has come into ownership of property near the Main Line district valued at upwards of $40,000, the gift of the rector, the Rev. George Calvert Carter, Wardens and Vestry of the Church of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr.

The Church of the Redeemer's gift comprises the ground and building occupied by St. Joseph's Chapel, Merion Square. This chapel has been under the parochial care of the Redeemer Parish for a number of years. "Mother" Church at Bryn Mawr is now turning over the Chapel to Bishop Garland and the trustees of the diocese. The diocese receives a property equipped for further development as a diocesan mission.

Anniversary Celebration.

The congregation of Christ Church, Germantown, on Sunday, October 30, began a week's celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of its foundation as a parish.

Speakers for the various services were: the Rev. Charles Henry Arndt, D. D., rector of the parish; the Rev. Franklin J. Clark, the Rev. Philip J. Steinmetz, D. D., the Rev. "Jack" Hart, Colonel Sheldon Potter, the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, D. D., LL. D., and the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, S. T. D.

Christ Church, Germantown, was founded in 1852 and was the second Episcopal Church in that part of the community. During the Church's seventy-five years it has had but four rectors.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Gift to Washington Cathedral.

Three hundred thousand dollars in the form of four gifts of $75,000 each, has been received for the construction of the four massive central piers of Washington Cathedral, it was announced by George Wharton Pepper, Executive Chairman of the nation-wide movement to raise $6,800,000 immediately, and $30,000,000 ultimately for the stimulation of the religious life of the country by the completion and adequate endowment of the cathedral and its associated institutions.

Three of the piers are being built through the generosity of three Washington citizens, Charles C. Glover, James Parmelee and Dr. William C. Rives, all trustees of Washington Cathedral.

The fourth pier is being built by Mrs. Frank Shaw Stevens of Swansea, Mass., in memory of Henry Vaughan, the original architect of the edifice, who now rests in the crypt beneath the Bethlehem Chapel, which also is the burial place of Woodrow Wilson, Admiral George Dewey, and other illustrious Americans and Church dignitaries.

French Services.

The services in French, conducted by the Rev. Florian Vurpillot, French vicar in charge at St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street, are held every Sunday afternoon at four o'clock. Beginning with November, there will also be a French service on Friday afternoons at 4:45 P. M. The committee in charge announces that definite plans are under way for the establishment of a Foyer Francaise in the parish house of St. John's Church, under the direction of Dr. and Mme. Vurpillot. These French services are designed for persons of all faiths and creeds who prefer to worship in the French language. They were begun last year during Lent.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

Cornerstone Laid.

The first house of worship of the Christian faith to take its place in the long white stretch of residential cliffs which faces Central Park on Fifth Avenue from Fifty-ninth Street to Cathedral Parkway, received official blessing when the combined parishes of the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Beloved Disciple presented the foundation structure of this new church at Ninetieth Street and Fifth Avenue to the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of New York, for the ceremony of the laying of the cornerstone on All Saints' Day, Tuesday, November 1. Bishop Manning was assisted by the rector, the Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D., and a former rector, the Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of New York, together with the vicar, the Rev. Herbert J. Glover.

Memorial Windows.

The late Countess Hildegarde von Brockdorff, formerly deaconess of St. James' Episcopal Church, Madison Avenue at Seventy-first Street, will be commemorated Sunday morning, October 30, at the dedication of a memorial window given by Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Gould Jennings. Deaconess von Brockdorff, who died on November 17, 1918, was well-known in New York for her many years of Church service, which included ten years at St. George's, ten years at St. Mark's-in-the-Mouwerie, six years at Grace Church in Providence, Rhode Island, of which the Rev. Dr. Frank Warfield Crowder was then rector; and several years in St. James' Parish after Dr. Crowder became rector of St. James.

Three other memorial windows will also be dedicated on Sunday morning, October 30. One is a clerestory window in memory of William Tucker Washburn, Mary Rosina Washburn, and William Mayhew Washburn, who represent one of the oldest families of St. James. It is the gift of the Washburn family. The other two windows are in the center vestibule, and are given by Samuel McL. Loweree, in memory of his wife, Pauline Wessel Loweree. The Rev. Dr. Crowder, the rector, will didicate the memorials. All four windows are the work of the Henry Wynd Young Studio, New York.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Rector Installed at Covington.

On Sunday, October 23, at Emmanuel Church, Covington, Bishop Jett formally instituted the Rev. Dennis Whittle as the new rector of Emmanuel Church. The Rev. Dr. E. R. Rogers, Superintendent of the Boys' Home, assisted in the service.

Several months ago the Rev. Mr. Whittle resigned his charge of Luray Parish in Page County, Diocese of Virginia. For five years he had been engaged in mountain work there under Archdeacon Frederick W. Neve. After a brief vacation in England, he returned to take up the work at Covington.

In addition to Emmanuel Church, he will have charge of the Mission at Low Moor and Grace Mission at Boys' Home.

New Congregation Organized at Lynchburg.

With a view to carrying into effect the union of Grace Memorial Church, and old Epiphany Church, formerly a mission of St. Paul's, to form a new Grace Memorial Church, there was held at the Fort Hill Club on the evening of September 19 a meeting of the persons most interested in getting the work under way. At this time the new Grace Memorial congregation organized and elected a vestry as follows: Messrs. Edley Craighill, Thos. A. Allen, Walter S. Nelson, R. A. Ralph, A. P. Craddock, Jr., G. M. Shumate, George J. Tompkins, John L. Shaner, W. F. Whately, John Cosby, H. T. Nicholas and L. P. Mann.

On the evening of September 23 these vestrymen elected the following officers: Wardens, Dr. George J. Tompkins and Mr. H. T. Nicholas; Treasurer, Mr. George M. Shumate, and Registrar, Mr. L. P. Mann.

Also the following committees were provided:

1. Building Committee, to sell the old properties and take steps toward the erection of the new building; the members of this committee to be appointed later by Dr. Tompkins.

2. A committee of three—Messrs. Walter S. Nelson, Edley Craighill and Thos. A. Allen—to procure temporary quarters for Sunday-school and Church services and to report to the vestry.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Southern Virginia Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council convened in Emmanuel Church, Phoebus, and St. John's Church, Hampton, October 25, 26 and 27.

Mrs. Walter Whichard, of Norfolk, was the presiding officer.

The outstanding event of the entire convention was the beautiful memorial service held on Thursday to Maria Washington Tucker, wife of the beloved Bishop of the diocese, conducted by the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of this diosese. As a tribute to the late Mrs. Maria Washington Tucker, Dr. H. H. Covington, of St. Paul's, Norfolk, presented this proposed memorial: A cottage to be built at the Jackson-Feild Home and to be known as the "Maria Washington Tucker Cottage". Dr. Covington said in part: "Mrs. Tucker was essentially a mother and home builder. What finer memorial to a mother and home builder than that which will aid in the caring for homeless children who need mothering." The delegates with a rising vote unanimously adopted the memorial resolution, giving hearty approval and endorsement, pledging their support and cooperation in all plans which will be made to erect this memorial.

The Woman's Auxiliary Branch of St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, of which Mrs. Tucker was a member, asked the privilege to present at once, a contribution of $100 to the memorial fund.

The following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That in the death of Mrs. Maria Washington Tucker, Honorary Vice-President of the Woman's Auxiliary, we have lost a faithful and devoted member. That in the inspiration of her example and in gratitude for her life of service, we go forward with renewed hope and faith and live for the Master whom she loved and served."

The Woman's Auxiliary everywhere shared in the shock and sense of loss caused by the news of the death of Bishop Brown. Resolved that the Woman's Auxiliary of Southern Virginia places on record this sense of loss to the Missionary forces of our Church and expresses to the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Virginia its love and sympathy.

A budget of $2,240 was proposed and accepted for the coming year. The money will be distributed in the diocese, in the nation and in the world. The meeting was brought to a close by a Reconsecration Service led by Mrs. Whichard, in which every delegate took a part.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor

St. Clement's, Wilkes-Barre.

On the Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity, St. Clement's, Wilkes-Barre, observed what the rector, the Rev. Joseph Groves, calls "Family Sunday". He reports that most of the families were present with their children and sat in the family pew filling the church to overflowing.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Convocation of Nashville.

The Convocation of Nashville met at St. Peter's, Columbia, October 18, 19 and 20. Dr. E. P. Dandridge, of Christ Church, Nashville, opened on Tuesday night with an address on "The Bishops' Crusade and After". Wednesday the Dean, Mr. P. A. Pugh, assisted by the rector, the Rev. Thos. N. Carruthers, M. A., celebrated the Lord's Supper. Immediately following, the Rev. J. R. Sharp spoke. Reports from the field showed that four new men are now at work in the Convocation and all departments are doing well. Bishop Maxon concluded the day by a stirring call to action, based on the "Acts of the Apostles".

Thursday morning laymen from all over the district conferred on Church finances. Pulaski, under the inspiration of Mr. Dudney, deacon in charge, showed the largest and best attendance.

A new preaching station is now opened at Lebanon, headquarters of Cumberland University, and seat of Wilson County. It is served by the Nashville clergy.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Church Choral Society.

Choirs representing five national groups have been organized into a Church Choral Society at St. John's Church, Detroit, and are planning a season of national programs which will be closed next spring with a musical festival service.

The Society will include an American group, composed of the male and mixed choirs of St. John's Church, a Negro group, composed of the choir of St. Matthew's Church, and the choirs of the Armenian, Russian and Bulgarian congregations which meet in St. John's.

New Parish House for Colored Parish.

The colored population of Detroit, 100,000 strong, is represented in the diocese by St. Matthew's Parish, the Rev. E. W. Daniel, rector, and the missions of St. Augustine and St. Cyprian. Last Sunday Bishop Page officially opened a new parish house costing $85,000 for St. Matthew's. In a service of dedication preceding a banquet, Bishop Page spoke of the large gifts of white Churchmen towards the new hall as a gesture of goodwill, and a contribution to an increasingly serious national problem. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford and a number of the clergy of the diocese were present at the opening ceremonies.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop

The Rededication and Reopening of Emmanuel Chapel, Mont Alto.

On Tuesday, October 11, Emmanuel Chapel, Bishop Potter Memorial, Mont Alto, was rededicated and reopened by Bishop Darlington. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop, assisted by the Rev. George D. Graeff, of Chambersburg, and the Rev. Arthur G. W. Pfaffko, of Blue Ridge Summit. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Geo. F. Nelson, D. D., Canon of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City.

The Archdeaconry of Harrisburg held its autumn meeting at the chapel, and elected the Rev. Paul S. Atkins of York as Archdeacon to succeed the late Ven. William Dorwart. The chapel was crowded at the morning service.

During the summer the interior of the chapel was thoroughly renovated. The restoration has been carried out in a conservative way, and it is now an attractive rural church, said by many to resemble the old Saxon churches in England. As a parish, Emmanuel Chapel has been defunct for more than forty years, its decline being attributed to the closing down of the Mont Alto Ironworks more than forty years ago. In later years the Reformed Church used the building, but finally abandoned it. Bishop Darlington, aided by Mr. Thomas J. Brereton, of Chambersburg, finally secured possession of the property for the Church and this diocese.

For the past twenty years services were held in the chapel at irregular intervals. Two years ago the chapel seemed to have no future—its congregation had vanished—and the building was in a sad state of disrepair. The chaplain decided to serve the students of the State Forestry School, and now it has an average congregation of fifty, mostly students, at the Sunday evening services. Under the superintendency of Professor Shaw, a Church School is being established. It is more than likely that this old parish will be revived, and again take its place in the life of the diocese.

It was built in 1854, and is of interest because Bishop Henry Codman Potter, of New York, had charge here during his student days at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

Autumn Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The autumn meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg was held in St. Bartholomew's Church, Millersburg, on Thursday, October 13. The day opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, by the Rev. E. W. Foulkes, vicar. Mrs. M. Freck, on behalf of the parish, delivered an address of welcome. This was responded to by the Archdeaconry Vice-President, Mrs. Caleb S. Brinton, of Carlisle. The Diocesan Secretary, Miss Batzele, conducted a study class on "The Church Awake". Mrs. James H. Spotts, of Lancaster, gave an address on the subject, "What the Study Class Does". Addresses were also given by Bishop Darlington, the Rev. A. M. Judd, Archdeacon Atkins, the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, the Rev. Stuart F. Gast, and the Rev. Oscar F. R. Tredor, D. D. An address on "Woman's Part in the Church's Program" was given by Mrs. Caleb S. Brinton. The day closed with the benediction pronounced by the Rev. John T. Ogburn, of Holy Cross, Harrisburg.

The Rev. Oscar F. R. Tredor, D. D., has been elected a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese to succeed the late Rev. Leroy F. Baker.

Church School Institute.

To provide an opportunity for the second year, of obtaining credits in the National Accredited Teachers' Association, the Department of Religious Education of this diocese conducted a Church School Institute in Savannah at Christ Church Parish House, October 17 to 21. Seven credit giving courses made up an unusually fine program with a faculty composed of members of the diocese with the exception of the Rev. Gardner L. Tucker, D. D., Executive Secretary of the Provincial Board of Religious Education, who gave his remarkable course on the Bible in dramatic form. The registration totaled fifty-eight, exclusive of the faculty, with a few from outside of Savannah, and several who were not Church School teachers. Conferences were held in the afternoon, and between each study period, supper was served by a committee from a different parish each eve-

Collect for Twenty-first Sunday After Trinity.

Grant, we beseech Thee, merciful Lord, to Thy faithful people pardon and peace, that they may be cleansed from all their sins, and serve Thee with a quiet mind; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

We Mothers Know.

"Peace," they have said.
Though the sad profit of our pain
We grieve till time is gone,
We shall not learn to build again
The bricks of Babylon—
Our sons are dead.

Stilled are the guns.
Good will, they say, shall heal, shall bless
The lands now, year by year,
But though the merciful possess
The earth, they shall not hear
Our little sons.

They were our friends;
Our thought, our breath, our blood we gave
To make them so;
They bought us peace and in the grave
Is all the peace they know,
To make amends.

Leaders and lords,
Who in your pride decree that thus
Or thus shall scores be paid,
An age is building when with us
Your reckoning shall be made,
Who have no swords.

We mothers know;
By the world's hearths we sit and dream;
Again we watch them die;
They willed the peace that you blaspheme,
And, though you will deny,
It shall be so.

—John Drinkwater, in The Graphic (London).

Lest We Forget.

Memory is God's divinest gift to men. There is something cleansing and regenerative about memory. And its ministry is to arrest the drift of the soul and to call us back to ourselves, our better selves.

We need to be reminded of the army that went "over there" and the spirit with which they went. "Call to remembrance the former days," cries the sacred writer. Call to remembrance the way in which America entered the war.

I see America casting her dearest and best into that cauldron of blood and fire. And all for what? Was it worth while? It was not worth while if it was for the sake of wealth or power. Commerce was not worth it; dollars were not worth it. It was not for the flag, proud of it though we were and are, that America went in. It was for an idea, a grand and unselfish idea. It was to preserve the invisible things of the spirit. It was to save the spiritual heritage of humanity. It was to win for the soul of mankind an atmosphere in which it could breathe. It was that we might have a world that children could say their prayers in.

And this was the spirit in which our men went over the wild Atlantic. They caught the S. O. S. signal from old England, and heard the Macedonian cry from bleeding France and Belgium. Two million strong they went.

Call to remembrance the victory they gained. That laughing host of youthful Samsons made short work of the foes of freedom. In a few months they turned the tide of war, and shattered the Kaiser's dream of world conquest.

. . . . .

We need to call to remembrance the army of the dead and pay reverent tribute to the men who gave their all that the right should prevail, and now shrd "dark to the triumph which they died to gain". Only the immortal eloquence of a Pericles could do justice to their fame and to the eternal debt which humanity owes them.

Three colors linger in my memory of France. There was the gold of the waving wheat; there was the red, like splotches of blood, of the poppies of the fields; and there was the white of those forests of crosses, past hundreds of thousands of which I rode as in a dream.

Scattered are the brave dead in their resting places. Some rest in the sacred soil of France, and some rest in the deep seas, and the dear dust is in little cemeteries all over our land. And some lie we know not where. Scattered in place, but how one in consecration.

Let us not "forget"—how that word returns to our lips!—that there is an army which will never be demobilized, but will ever stand on guard in serried lines, holding eternally their lonely trenches against all that is mean and unlovely to the minds of men, and watching us to see how we carry on—

Our soldier boys who snatched Death's starry prize,
With life still radiant in their fearless eyes,
Bartering dull age for immortality
That you and I might live.

Let us call to remembrance those wounded, maimed, or otherwise disabled as the result of the war. They gave limbs and health for the welfare of America and the good of the world. They bear in their bodies the terrible marks of the agony and the fire. It is easy to bar tribute to a wounded soldier while he is still wearing a uniform. For the uniform is a symbol, a sign of his sacrifice. A limp arm in khaki—ah, how eloquent it is! But when our men have drifted back to civilian clothing and the old level days have returned, the temptation comes to forget what they did for us through the long days of peril and pain.

Four years ago we needed them; now many of them need us. They do not need nor do they want our pity. They do not regret their sacrifice. They do not whine nor groan. They won their crutches and their disabilities, even as the dead won their crosses, standing between the bullet and the flag. They are proud to have the history of their country written on the tender parchment of their own flesh.

They seek no charity. They would scorn it. But we must not forget the incalculable and unpayable debt we owe them. We must not forget that many of them are in need, and suffer for lack of the material things of life, as much as they do from the wounds of war. We must not forget that they have a blood-bought title to our love, our gratitude and our help.

The tumult and the shouting dies,
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice—
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget; lest we forget.

—H. A. P., in Christian Index.

Called Unto His Glory.

There is glory for the time to come. A great many people seem to forget that the best is before us. Horatius Bonar once said that everything before the true believer is "glorious". This thought took hold on my soul, and I began to look the matter up and see what I could find in Scripture that was glorious hereafter. I found that the kingdom we are going to inherit is glorious; our crown is to be a "crown of glory"; the city we are going to inhabit is the city of the glorified; the songs we are to sing are the songs of the glorified; we are to wear garments of "glory and beauty"; our society will be the society of the glorified; our rest is to be "glorious"; the country to which we are going is to be full of "the glory of God and of the Lamb".

Thank God, we are to gain by death! We are to have something that death cannot touch. When this earthly body is raised, all the present imperfection will be gone. Jacob will leave his lameness. Paul will have no thorn in serves the name of life—happy, glorious, everlasting; the body once more united to the soul, no longer mortal, subject to pain and disease and death, the flesh. We shall enter a life that debut glorified, incorruptible, "fashioned like unto His glorious body", everything that hinders the spiritual life left behind. We are exiles now, but then we who are faithful shall stand before the throne of God, joint heirs with Christ, kings and priests, citizens of that heavenly country.—D. L. Moody.

Our Deathless Hope.

Beyond the sunset and the night we are to live again, and live on forever. The nature of man demands immortality. The instinct for immortality is the prophecy for its fulfillment. It is an intellectual absurdity to suppose that the grave is the final chapter for those who vanish from us. The character of God presages immortality. Surely He who cares for the falling sparrows and for the blooming flowers cares for His children with an infinite love and provision. The experience of Jesus is the crowning proof of immortality. He really died, and was buried, and rose again, the grave being emptied of its contents. He has explored every chamber of the grave, and He has the keys of death swinging at His girdle. Because He is the victor over death, His people likewise are to be victors, and they are to live with Him, and with each other, forevermore! "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."——From a sermon preached by Dr. G. W. Truett at the funeral of Dr. Geo. W. McDaniel.

Here is This Night.

What though the day was full of weariness,
With many a jarring sound and fretful sight,
Here is this night.
Whatever went before, here is an hour
Of pure, clear dark, with peace on wood and hill
And every flower folded honey-cool,
And every quiet pool
Brimful of starlight, and the winds all still.
The day went hard, and with tomorrow's light
May come new care; but by the tender grace
Of God's good thought there falls a little space
Of dusk and dew and dreams—
Here is this night.

—Nancy Byrd Turner.

Trust Him.

I learned to swim in boyhood, but it was only this summer that I achieved complete mastery of myself in the water. For thirty years I had assumed that I must constantly put forth effort to keep from sinking.

One day an expert swimmer watched me for a few minutes and then cried: "Stop fighting the water and trust it to hold you up. Use your strength to get somewhere."

Under his direction a few moments sufficed to convince me he was right. I lay flat in the water without moving hands or feet and to my delight it held me up. Then I struck out, using my strength to forge ahead. What a revelation! Why did not some one tell me that years ago?

So many constantly struggle to be Christians, when if they would only trust Christ they would be kept. How suggestive is that advice when applied to the Christian: "Stop struggling and trust God to keep you. Use your strength to get somewhere."—Selected

The Test of Fire.

Dr. Stuart Holden once told his congregation how, when he visited a factory in the North of England, where costly china was being made, the thing that interested him most was the painting of the finished product. "It had been through many processes, and was taken to a studio for the artist to complete. I saw the pattern being put on in various colors, and noticed that a great deal of black was being used. On asking why, I was told, 'It is black now, but it will be gold when it comes out of the fire'." Is not this just as in our lives?—S. S. Times.

Humanity's Opportunity.

A family is humanity's great opportunity to walk the way of the Cross. Mothers know that; some fathers know it; some children grow up to learn it. In a home where this is true, where all other aims are subordinated to this one of making the home count for high character, to training lives into right social adjustment and service, the primary emphasis is not on times and seasons for religion; religion is the life of that home, and in all its common living every child learns the way of the great Life of all.—Henry F. Cope.

A Morning Prayer.

Mary Davis Reed.

Another day to love, to live;
Another day to help, to give;
For this, dear Lord, I thank Thee.
Another day Thy charge to keep—
To cheer and comfort those who weep;
For this, dear Lord, I thank Thee.

Another day for praise and prayer;
A day to lighten care;
For this, dear Lord, I thank Thee.
Another day of toil and song;
A day to speed Thy word along;
For this, dear Lord, I thank Thee.

Another day in which to share
The cross that some one has to bear;
For this, dear Lord, I thank Thee.
Another day to do Thy will;
My earthly mission to fulfill;
For this, dear Lord, I thank Thee.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus the Victor.

M. L. G.

We have spoken of Jesus as Our Captain. We know how He goes with us, and before us into the thickest fight. It is a great thing to realize too that He is leading us to victory. "I have overcome" He said, Sin, disease, death—all are defeated foes, some day to be gone from our life. They may seem, and do seem, to older heads as well as young, to be rampant, filling the world with misery. But in truth they are doomed; they must go. Already they have sounded retreat. They have been overcome by our Captain; and His cause is triumphing, and we'll move on to greater victories, following the Captain of our salvation and all the world's.

So do not be discouraged at the wrong you see, not even at the wrong within yourself. It is a beaten foe, if you link your battle with the Best Friend's.

Some day in one of the mansions of our Father's House, we shall share His triumph, as here we share His warfare. And we shall be glad for every hour of loyalty to our great Captain, and for every moment when we have felt in the fiercest struggle that He was just ahead.

Pets Came First With Flood Children.

Down in the Mississippi Valley, where the flooded river swept over parts of seven states, a Red Cross rescue boat was engaged in taking of flood refugees from the upper stories of their flooded homes. The small craft, loaded with people, had just pushed off from one of the water-swamped houses when a little boy in the party demanded that the boat be turned around and pulled back to the house he had left. The Red Cross boatman, who probably had been on duty for many more hours than one usually works in a day, had seen many things and was hardly to be surprised at anything by this time, but the little boy's request was something new. No one he had taken from a flood home that day had wanted to go back. What was more, the boatman did not intend to go back this time, but his young passenger was insistent.

Finally, to keep peace in the crowded boat, and probably also to find out what was so important in the little boy's home that he had to go back to it, the boatman steered his vessel around, and went back. Arriving at his abandoned home where the water was now up to the second story, the little fellow who had caused all the trouble scuttled through an upper window, and a moment later was back in the boat. He had with him a cage, in which was his pet song-bird, which he had refused to leave behind, no matter how many other people had to wait.

This story was told by one of the men who had charge of a Red Cross rescue boat in the early days of the flood. It is typical of the little sidelights attending their work—a very big piece of work. Not all of the pets were saved, even when their young owners were equally as anxious as the young one who owned the bird.

A story brought back from the flood by one Red Cross relief worker, told how he visited a camp full of flood refugees, arriving there by airplane. One little fellow stopped him to relate what was to this little boy the one great sorrow of the whole flood, how he had lost three kittens when he had to leave his home hurriedly, and how much he wanted the Red Cross man to take an airplane and go out and look for those three kittens. Of course, the Red Cross men could not do this, because so many grown people were in danger that no one could stop for just kittens. But others, grown-ups and children, too—clung to their pets, whether kittens, pups, or birds, and the Red Cross camps sometimes had in their limits all kinds of pets saved by their owners.

The flood drove many wild animals up from the deep woods and swamps. These took refuge on crumbling levees, on high bits of ground—anywhere to get away from the water. Often humans and animals huddled together on these places of refuge until the boats came. Occasionally these animals would even come into the refugee camps themselves, and more than once, wild deer became tame after being fed at the camps by the children, to whom they became great company and entertainment in these places.

Then, besides the wild animals, many people brought their pet dogs into camp, when it was possible to move them out of the way of the flood. Others brought their cows and horses and pigs, and chickens, all of which the Red Cross helped care for, the horses and mules being fed in great droves, while the pigs were kept in other places, and the cows in still others. The biggest henyard in the country was started by the Red Cross to provide for the flocks of chickens brought into the refugee camps by people from everywhere. Sometimes, when they couldn't bring these chickens along with them, the Red Cross people would stop long enough to throw some corn and feed to them before everybody had to leave to get away from the water.

These children in the camps were not forgotten by children in other parts of the country, especially those who belonged to the Junior Red Cross. The children of the Junior Red Cross, and others, worked to raise money to feed their friends in the camps, and sent them clothing and toys and other things.

The Junior Red Cross has many children in it, more than the grown-up membership in the American Red Cross. During the eleventh annual Roll Call, which will be from November 11-24 this year, the regular Red Cross will try to enroll as many members as the Juniors.

Joe Robs the Bees.

The bee-hives stood in a neat row along the orchard fence. The sun was warm, the air was fragrant with clover blooms, and the bees went back and forth from the hives to the flowers, droning pleasantly. From where he sat on the limb of an apple tree, eating an apple, Joe watched them with interest. He decided that they were almost as intelligent as folks and not nearly as lazy. And such friendly little creatures! He had often seen his Uncle Alf rob the hives and take out all the fresh honey, and they didn't sting him a single time. Joe thought it would be nicer to raise bees than cattle or sheep or hogs. Just look at the honey you get. Joe liked honey better than anything he had ever eaten. Yes, he would be a bee farmer when he was big.

Presently Uncle Alf came out to say that he was going to town. "Want to go along?" he asked. But Joe shook his head. He lived in town. There was nothing there as pleasant, on a hot July afternoon, as an orchard full of bees.

"You'll be by yourself, you know," said Uncle Alf. "But I'll be back before dark." Joe nodded. He liked to be by himself out here in the quiet old orchard. When his uncle had gone he climbed to the top of the tree to see if the young mocking birds had hatched. They had. Four very big mouths, lined with bright yellow, opened wide when he peeped into the nest. "Their mouths are bigger than they are!" Joe decided. He did not touch them, but looked at them from a respectful distance. But when the mother bird got back with food, she darted at him angrily, and he climbed back down to his comfortable perch below.

After a little he got hungry and went in search of bread and honey. He couldn't find any, so he said: "I guess I'll just rob me a bee-hive!" It was a thing he had always wanted to do. He fixed a torch, to smoke them out with, wrapping some rags around the end of a short stick. He lit it and blew upon it lustily. He lifted the lid of the nearest hive. The torch made a little fog of smoke. The bees seemed to be going into the lower story of the hive. Everything was lovely, and Joe reached to take out a rack of honey. He said "Ouch!" and hastily dropped it. A bee had stung him on the leg, then another and another. The bees were mad.

He started to run. The bees followed him, an angry black cloud of them, and peppered him with stings. As fast as he could go he fled to the branch below the calf lot. And only when he lay down in the water, with only his face sticking out, did the bees relent. They buzzed around a bit, then drifted away toward the orchard. He dreaded for Uncle Alf to see him. He knew he would laugh. But he was hurting so much that he crawled out and went along the back fence and came at last to the house.

He was still there when Uncle Alf came.

"Look here, boy!" said Uncle Alf kindly. "Looks like you and those bees didn't get along very well while I was gone! Didn't try to rob 'em, did you?" Joe nodded miserably. "Well, you lie still now," said Uncle Alf. "I've got some medicine that'll stop that pain in no time. He went and got it and poured it on the little boy's stings. He got him a cool drink of water. When Joe was comfortable he said: "You know, Joe, I've been needing a partner to help me with my bees. I was thinking maybe I could get you."

A lop-sided grin appeared on Joe's swollen face. A twinkle showed through the slit in his right eyelids. "I don't reckon I want the job, uncle," said Joe. "I've kind of lost my taste for bees!" —Christian Observer.

The Optimistic Frog.

Two frogs fell into a deep cream bowl,
One was an optimistic soul;
But the other took the gloomy view.
"We shall drown," he cried, without much ado.
So with a last despairing cry
He flung up his legs and he said "Goodbye".
Quoth the other frog with a merry grin,
"I can't get out, but I won't give in.
I'll just swim round till my strength is spent,
Then will I die the more content'.
Bravely he swam till it would seem
His struggles began to churn the cream.
On the top of the butter at last he stopped,
And out of the bowl he gayly hopped.
What of the moral? 'Tis easily found:
If you can't hop out, keep swimming round.

"Why?"

When Peggy and Rose were little girls, they had the "why?" habit. When father and mother told them to do anything they would invariably say, "Why?" Father often said, "Soldiers never ask why; they obey without asking the reason".

One day mother said, "It's such a nice, sunshiny afternoon, let's take our lunch and go in the woods". Peggy and Rose were so overjoyed that they forgot to ask, "Why?"

They made little, tiny, thin sandwiches and rolled them up in waxed paper, tucked these with some fluffy sponge cakes in a basket, and started.

It was only a little way to the woods, and Peggy and Rose hopped and skipped merrily over the road, while father and mother walked behind; and presently they turned into the cool shade of the chestnut grove. Just beyond the woods was a high bank, along which was a railroad track; and Peggy said, "May we go and see if any trains are coming?"

Trains always had a great fascination for the little girls, so father and mother said yes, and they all went farther on and sat on a rock in the field, where they could see the train if it went by.

Presently Rose said, "Father, I see something moving on the bank, close by the track. What is it?"

And Peggy said: "Look, there are five, six, seven little animals there!"

Sure enough, there was a big, fat woodchuck and a family of little baby woodchucks, and they were running up and down the bank and up over the tracks.

"Probably some of the cars drop grain, and they are hunting for it," said father.

Suddenly the mother woodchuck sat up alertly and made a queer little noise. Instantly every baby woodchuck flew to her, and together they disappeared into their hole.

"Why," said Peggy and Rose together, "why did they do that?"

Father was silent. Not a sound was heard for several seconds,; then away off in the distance an engine screeched, then a rumble was heard, nearer and nearer, and a train rushed over the track. After it was gone, and everything was quiet, father said, "Did either of you hear one of those woodchucks ask why they must go in when their mother called?"

And do you know that Peggy and Rose never asked, "Why?" foolishly again!—Youth's Companion.

Boys Who Succeed.

Thirty years ago Mr. H——, a nursery man in New York State, left home for a day or two, says the "Springfield Republican". It was rainy weather and not a season for sales, but a customer arrived from a distance, tied up his horse and went into the kitchen of a farm house, where two lads were cracking nuts.

"Is Mr. H—— at home?"

"No, sir," said the eldest, Joe, hammering at a nut.

"When will he be back?"

"Dunno, sir. Mebbe not for a week."

The other boy, Jim, jumped up and followed the man out. "The men are not here, but I can show you the stock," he said, with such a bright, courteous manner that the stranger, who was a little irritated, stopped and followed him through the nursery, examining the trees and left his order.

"You have sold the largest bill that I have had this season, Jim," his father, greatly pleased, said to him on his return.

"I'm sure," said Joe, "I'm as willing to help as Jim, if I'd thought in time."

A few years afterward these two boys were left by their father's failure and death with $200 or $300 each. Joe bought an acre or two near home. He has worked hard, but is still a poor, discontented man. Jim bought an emigrant's ticket to Colorado, hired as a cattle driver for a couple of years and with his wages bought land at forty cents an acre, built himself a house and married. His herds of cattle are numbered by the thousands, his land has been cut up for town lots and he is ranked as one of the wealthiest men in the state.

"I might have done like Jim," his brother said lately, "If I'd thought in time. There's as good stuff in me as in him."

"There's as good stuff in that loaf of bread as in any I ever made," said his wife, "but nobody can eat it. There's not enough yeast in it." The retort, though disagreeable, was truth. The quick, wide-awake energy which acts as leaven in a character is partly natural. But it can be inculcated by parents and acquired by a boy if he chooses to keep his eyes open and act promptly and boldly in every emergency.—Ex.

Do today's duty, fight today's temptation; and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things which you cannot see, and could not understand if you saw them.—Charles Kingsley.

"A wise man built his house upon a rock--- and the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock."

Like rock house foundations, the essential quality of rock for monuments is durability. Other important qualities are beauty, legibility of inscriptions and adaptability to design. Granite is the only stone that fills these requirements, and many granites do not possess all these qualities.

Winnsboro Blue Granite

is a true granite, as pure a granite as is known. It possesses all of the above essential qualities for the ideal memorial, and it contains less deleterious ingredients—iron, lime, water—than other granites. It is, therefore, the most durable.

Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Write for Free descriptive literature, also for facsimile reproduction of a polished sample of Winnsboro Blue Granite that you may see its beauty.

When you have purchased a monument specifying Winnsboro Blue Granite write us giving name of your Memorial Merchant, and we will send you a polished Winnsboro Blue Granite paper weight.

IN MEMORIAM.

On the tenth day of August, 1927, the soul of MARIANNA SCOTT QUARRIER CHILTON passed into the Great Beyond at the early age of twenty years. She was the beloved and only daughter of Charles B. and Harriett Hamilton Chilton. In her home she was ever a joy and comfort and infinitely dear to her parents and brothers, towards whom she was always unselfishly thoughtful, helpful and loving.

Her school life can not be better told than this excerpt from a letter of one in charge of students at "Old Hannah Moore", where she matriculated and which she loved very dearly.

"Marianna Dear: I am so glad you received so many prizes, especially mine. I watched the girls all the year, and I felt you came nearer the ideal school spirit than any other there. I noticed especially your thoughtfulness for the older people in the house, and so many times you helped me in so many different ways, when you really were not aware of helping. I noticed, too, how kind you always were to the girls who did not have many friends. I am not telling you this to please you, but because I am proud and thankful you see life this way, and because there is so much more in life for those who serve. I never had to ask you to go on Chapel duty—it really seemed a pleasure to you. Let me know your plans, now you have finished at Hannah Moore Academy. I shall watch with greatest interest the lives of my dear girls."

Before sorrow or disappointment had cast a shadow over her young life she entered into the land of sunshine and perfect love, where every pure and kindly wish flowers into loving deed; and though our earthly eyes no longer see her, we feel her presence ever near and know

Death doth hide, but not divide,
Thou art but on the other side.

Some workers quickly do their tasks of service and of love
So their promtion early comes to higher work above.

They pass from work to better work
And rest before the noon.

HOLY BIBLE

"The word of God, which liveth and abideth forever"
1 PETER 1:23

THIS IS THE BOOK WE STAND FOR IN THE CHURCH, THE HOME, AND IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOL

"This Book contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's Paradise. Here Paradise is restored, heaven opened, and the gates of hell disclosed. Christ is its grand object, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently and prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, a Paradise of glory, and a river of pleasure. It is given you in life and will be opened in the judgment and will be remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor, and will condemn all who trifle with its sacred contents."—Selected.

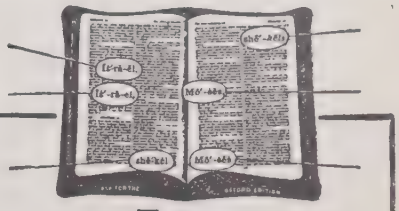
Home.

Home with the wind in the sails,
Home from afar,
Out of the grip of the gales,
Over the bar.

Breathing a welcome calm,
Blue are the skies,
Softly the mariner's psalm
Lovingly sighs.

Home from the wanderer's way,
Home with the tide,
Wide as the gates of the day
Love's arms are wide.



—Robert MacGowan.

There are some Christians who think they are excused from prayer and meditation in secret, because they are so busy. Their work presses them so in the morning that they cannot possibly get time to pray. Their cares occupy them so all day, that they do not find one quiet moment to go apart with God. In the evening there are so many social, or other engagements—meetings, societies, parties—or they are so tired, that prayer is crowded out. The example of Christ speaks its solemn rebuke to all such trifling.—I. R. Miller.

Will God in very deed let me put my hand in His before I take one step into the rough, cold world, where there is so much to chill the heart and throw a cloud over the face of truth and purity and love? If He will, then I will lift my hand to His, and say, "Father, spurn not Thy poor weak child!"—Joseph Parker.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Thou art the love with which the heart loves Thee."—St. Augustine.

No one can cherish a worthy ideal, and strive and sacrifice for its attainment, without undergoing a certain gracious transformation.

Life estimated by discontent may be a desert; life measured by gratitude may be a garden.—Dr. J. H. Eccleston.

If you are going to do a good thing, do it now; if a mean thing, wait and think it over.

The big things are not "the things that are not seen". "Seek peace and ensue it." "Seek the things that are above." "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." Such are the goodly pearls.—J. H. Jowett.

These are many people who are only waiting for grand opportunities. But there is an immense difficulty in getting them in the meantime to do the next thing, the nearest thing, a very simple thing. If the prophet bade them do some great thing, why, they would do it with trumpets and songs and drums; but to do the little duty, the daily task, the common round, is too much to be expected of genius.—Joseph Parker.

"To be anxious for souls and yet not impatient; to be patient and yet not indifferent; to bear the infirmities of the weak without fostering them; to testify against sin and unfaithfulness and the low standard of love free and full and open; to have the mind of a faithful shepherd, a hopeful physician, tender nurse, a skillful teacher;—this requires the continual renewal of the Lord's grace.

"Holiness is not incompatible with any legitimate calling in life. In fact, you may find men and women everywhere, in the various avocations of life in the enjoyment of full salvation. Preachers, lawyers, physicians, merchants, traveling-men, farmers, mechanics, trainmen, sailors, fishermen and soldiers, have all found Christ a complete Saviour from sin, and have gone on discharging their duties in their various fields of activity and find that God's grace especially qualified them for better work in that field."

Paul's thorn was not pleasant to him. He prayed to be rid of it. But when he found it had come to stay, he made friends with it swiftly. It was no longer how to dismiss, but how to entertain. He stopped groaning, and began glorying. It was clear to him that it was God's will, and that meant new opportunity, new victory, new likeness to Christ. What God means is always too good to be lost, and is worth all it costs to learn. Let us learn as swiftly as we may. Time is short.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

MOSAIC AUTHORSHIP OF THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY

Modern critics tell us that it is one of the "assured results of Scientific Criticism" that nothing existed of the books of Moses up to the time of King Josiah, B. C. 623, except what they call C., that is, the Covenant Code consisting of the Ten Commandments and its accompaniments.

In that year (623 B. C.), during the repairs being made in the temple, Hilkiah, the priest, found "the Book of the law". He immediately had this Book read to Josiah, upon whom it made so profound an impression that he instituted the great reform of his time.

The new critics declare—

1. That the Book so found was Deuteronomy and only Deuteronomy.

2. That the Book was especially written, either at that time or a little before, for express purpose of producing the Josian reform.

3. That the reformation consisted principally and primarily of a centralization of the worship.

4. That because the laws of the Book were unknown to Josiah and his court, it must have been a recent production.

Now even a cursory reading of 2 Kings 22 and 23 should convince anybody that these statements are, to say the least, doubtful. It is not clear from the history that the Book found was Deuteronomy alone. What is as clear as day from the history is that Josiah's work was to break up idolatry, to eliminate the worship of Baal, Ashtoroth and the rest. The great sin of the people sorely needing reform was not so much the lack of a central place of worship as it was the practice of idolatrous worship. It was rather the worship of false gods than the false worship of the true God that needed correction.

Now C., or the Covenant Code, strongly condemns idolatry, the very sin that was rife in Josiah's day (Ex. chapters 20 to 23, and 34:10-26). This C. code condemned to death one who sacrificed to false gods. So that it is plain that Josiah and his people were quite as ignorant and careless of the C. or Covenant Code as they were of D. or Deuteronomy. Therefore, if this ignorance makes D. late it must make C. late also. And thus by this argument of the critics not only D., but also C., must be brought down to 623 B. C. This they dare not do for other reasons of importance to their scheme. But it cannot be permitted to the critics to apply the argument of ignorance or disuse to the one code and not to the other. Either C. must be dated in the seventh century B. C., or else it must be granted that D. may be as old as C., however much it may have been ignored or forgotten.

Besides, we learn from the history (and it should be noted that the history is not denied) that the newly found Book was in the opinion of all an old Book. It was "the Book of the Law", an old and authoritative code. It may have been neglected, but it was known by everybody to exist (2 Kings 22:13) and acknowledged to be the Law of God.

It was the discovery of an old and sacred Book of divine authority that made the reformation. Everybody submitted not to exhortations and warning of an anonymous reformer, but to the message of God that came through God's great prophet Moses. They all knew and believed, as did St. John, that "the law was given through Moses". And the Book found in the Temple was recognized as this law.

And yet everybody, according to these modern critics, was deceived. Josiah, Huldah, the priests, the whole nation were deceived. It seems, too, that Christ and His apostles were deceived. The Book found did not have Moses for its author, according to this so-called scientific theory of criticism. It remained for a group of scholars of the nineteenth century, who had no more to go upon than the old documents and the old facts, to discover this error under which God's people had labored for thousands of years! This is so extraordinary that it should not be accepted as true unless it shall be demonstrated in a way to preclude all doubt and uncertainty.

When we make some study of the great Book of Deuteronomy, the wonder of this thing grows.

If this Book had for its prime purpose the centralization of worship in one only Sanctuary, why is so little said about it in the Book? Why is all that is said on this subject immersed in a multitude of regulations, ordinances and rites? For such a reform what need is there of elaborating a great civil and religious institute? Why give with this especial purpose in view, an extensive outline of the law, with large additions and modifications of the same, in such way as to overwhelm almost what is said about the Central Sanctuary so that we must look for it to find it. It is as if in seeking to reform certain crimes touching forgery, for example, we should review the whole history and Constitution of the United States. The thing is in the face of it unfounded. There is indeed less harmony between D. and the Josian reformation than between that reform and C.

There are besides in Deuteronomy a great many matters that do not fit the times of Josiah. These have been repeatedly, and yet in vain pointed out to the critics, ever since the able writings of the great German scholar, Hengstenberg.

Why, for example, does Deuteronomy demand the extermination of the Canaanites and of the Amalikites, when in 623 B. C. these people had disappeared for centuries? Why is no king mentioned when the armies go forth to battle? What the sense in the seventh century before Christ of the warnings against the return to Egypt, and the command not to make a foreigner king? Why is there no mention of the temple, only of the tent of meeting? It is remarkable, too, that when the two kingdoms had been set up, when the Northern Kingdom had gone into captivity and when Assyria was the great menace, nothing of these things appear in the great Mosaic discourses. Think of a prophet like Jeremiah, who lived in Josiah's time, uttering any warning or prophecy with no hint of these grave matters.

On the question of the author of the Book, however, the whole theory collapses. Deuteronomy is confessedly one of the most eloquent and intensely earnest books of the Bible. No priest certainly could have written such a book: for there is nothing priestly about this lofty and deeply spiritual prophecy. How could a man of such splendid genius and such burning moral earnestness dream of reforming the nation in the strange, indirect way indicated?

He is supposed to write this grand prophecy, a book worthy of Moses, to put the name of Moses to it, to hide it or get it hidden in the temple, and then to trust to chance to bring it to light! Some critics think that this was done fifty or sixty years before the discovery of the Book. Was ever anything so extraordinary, I would say incredible, were it not that so many scholars think it credible?

But I do solemnly protest in the name of truth and reason, against the theory that calls such imaginary vagaries historical criticism.

What, moreover, shall be said of the undoubted references to Deuteronomy before the times of Josiah? Such references have been often noted and are not possible of denial. Hezekiah, the great-grandfather of Josiah, instituted a notable reform of which we read in 2 Kings 18. There is no doubt that Deuteronomy was known to him. Amaziah still earlier is said not to have put to death the sons of his father's murderers, in obedience to the law of Moses. A command found only in Deuteronomy (chapter 2 Kings 14:6 and Deut. 24:16). Joshua, by command of Moses, erected an altar on Mt. Ebal, a command of Moses recorded only in Deuteronomy. Cf. (Josh. 8:30 fol. and Deut. 27:2 fol.) There should be noted, too, the reference to Deuteronomy in Josh. 13. The episode of Micah and the Levite, cf. Judges 17:12, etc., is inexplicable if, as the critics say, there were no Levites at that time.

Now, what explanation is given to these and other like facts in the documents? One is almost ashamed to write what these exalted historical critics pretend. These references to Deuteronomy are the work, we are told, of a redacter, an unknown person who may be called Dr. He is supposed to have put Deuteronomy into shape out of a mass of legendary Mosaic traditions, and inserted into the history at the right places these references. In other words, the history was touched up a bit, so as to make Deuteronomy appear older than the history, while in fact it was much later! Such the composition of a Book that is confessed to be an important part of God's inspired revelation to Israel and to us.

It may well be asked, How do we know that even 2 Kings 22, 23, assumed to be real history, may not be the work of this clever redacter? How are we sure that anything is fact in a history into which unscrupulous, though devout and pious, redacters wrote or left out what they pleased? and what sort of science of criticism is this that arrogates to itself the right to make historical what it approves and to hand over to deft "redacters" whatever it does not like? It does not require a deep knowledge of Hebrew or a super-scientific mind to perceive that such criticism can be used to make hash out of any history. Not only Washington's hatchet and cherry-tree, but even Valley Forge and Yorktown might thus get "redacted" out of the record.

The view that Deuteronomy is the repetition of the law, given in the great discourses of Moses on the plains of Moab, wherein the law is set forth in concise and popular form with the additions and modifications needed for the changed life of the nation, has its difficulties and its problems; but this modern criticism lands us in impossibilities. The Book may need much study to understand and resolve its historical and legal questions; but this does not warrant a denial of its genuineness. If a man has heart disease. doctors do not cut out his heart to cure him.

One other circumstance, a very painful one, must be frankly noted. These modern critics, men of Christian position and distinction, would have us believe that a Book openly acknowledged to be a literary forgery can be a revelation of the holy God. For Deuteronomy is not simply a harmless literary personification of a great Man; it is a plain, persistent, determined assumption of his person and place. The critics say the Book is "pseudipigraphic"; it is a "falsarius", etc. But the clear issue is not thus evaded. Dr. Neville has shown that no work of classic antiquity under like conditions could escape the charge of forgery. To compose a book of laws, claiming to be laws divinely imposed and to give them authority and validity by putting them in the mouth of Moses, the man of God, certainly must be stamped as a forgery that is both flagrant and profane.

We shall scarcely be persuaded that in the great days of Jeremiah, in the times of Amos, Hosea and Nahum, such impostures for moral ends were judged to be moral and eminently pious. Nor can we be easily convinced that such a carefully and cunningly prepared piece of religious deception is in full keeping with the lofty moral tone of Deuteronomy. And still less does the painful explanation of Dr. Driver satisfy us. He contends that these great discourses of Moses are in the same class with the speeches found in Thucydides or Zenophon, that they are reports of what Moses might have said. The comparison does not hold. Speeches of the kind referred to did not pretend to accuracy—they do not need to be exact—for nothing of real import depends upon their exactness. But codes of civil and religious laws are in a different class: without compelling authority, they are futile. And so their source and authorship are of the last importance. Deuteronomy claims to be a great civil and moral institute given of God through Moses. The name and character of Moses guaranteed the divine source of these great discourses. Now, if this Mosaic guarantee be a mere figment, falsely assumed to gain acceptance and obedience, then unquestionably Josiah and his people were imposed upon by a fraud of an exceptional kind.

Suppose a set of brilliant men (like the fabled "redacters") anxious, let us say, to establish episcopacy over against papacy, were to compose for this purpose a gospel of St. Peter; suppose they should get this Book hid in some old Eastern monastery and then should succeed in having it, as by accident, found, and suppose further that this Book should be so well done as to deceive the scholarship of the Christian world and be accepted everywhere as a genuine work of the inspired apostle. Now, if, after a generation or two, it should be found out that it was no work of St. Peter's at all, would there be any force in the plea that its inspiration was not affected—as it was Petrine—and contained what St. Peter without doubt believed and taught?

The case of the forged decreetals of Isidore, for a generation or two held to be genuine and profoundly influencing the whole polity of the Church from the effects of which indeed the Church has never quite recovered, is an instance in history of a work whose authority depended upon its authors, and which by consequence lost that authority when found to be an imposture.

I submit then that the modern criticism of Deuteronomy should be rejected for the following reasons:

1. Because it largely depends upon the assumption, unsustained by history, that a law cannot be ignored or unknown unless it is recent.

2. Because it makes use of this very assumption in an arbitrary fashion, applying it or refusing to apply it, as the exigencies of the theory demand.

3. Because it depends upon a supposed harmony as of cause and effect, between Deuteronomy and the reform under Josiah, though the history reveals no such harmony.

4. Because it plays fast and loose with historical documents, deciding at will what parts must be taken as actual fact and what should be put down as glosses and "redactions".

5. Because it ignores the plain fact that Deuteronomy contains many incidents, teachings and references that cannot be put in time of Josiah.

6. Because it requires an imaginary author for this great Book, under conditions that are neither credible nor ethical.

7. Because it involves the nullification in much of the wonderful history of God's chosen people, that for more than two thousand years has been accepted as authentic by men of all creeds.

8. And lastly because, and I would speak kindly and yet frankly, this whole theory must with justice be branded as profane, offending as it does, by its low notions of Revelation, against the very holiness of God. And in proof of this we need only to cite Wellhausen, who is perhaps the chief authority for the whole scheme. He mockingly declares that while the Germans traced the imposture back to the Jewish reformers, the Scotch made God Himself a party to the fraud!

It is truly one of the strange anomalies of our strangely anomalous age, that a theory with such an origin, of such flimsy foundation, and with such grave consequences should be accepted out of hand by so many Christian men.

James W. Morris.

LAUGHTER

Caught clearly in a foolish lie, which might have done harm if undetected, the man confessed, shamefaced—

"The worst trouble with me, all my life, has been that the first thing I think about is to get a laugh out of somebody, anyhow."

Which explained why he was a drifter from one small job to another, tolerated everywhere, trusted and respected nowhere.

He was of a distinct type of humanity which occasionally amuses, frequently annoys, most of us and of which there are several varieties. Almost every little school has its boy or girl, or one of each sex, whose real purpose in life is to make somebody laugh, with or at them. Each village and rural neighborhood has its recognized and quoted fun-maker. Every company of soldiers and ship's crew has its chronic joker. Fortunately, most of these, as they meet the hard knocks and facts, learn to subdue and restrain their inclinations and realize that to provoke cachinnations is not the most important and admirable of ambitions. Unfortunately, there are those who never recover from what may be classified as a mental disease, who go from childhood to gray hairs persistent, incurable, importunate, habitual jesters. Yet, more unfortunately, the higher we go in the social scale the more of this kind we find. The associates of people who think and speak in roughly direct terms tires presently of his or her own crude, homespun comedy or finds it unrewarded by even a simulated grin. It is in what we call polite society, where we must pay little penalties of hypocrisies, that the diligent angler for laughs infests most grievously, becomes an abiding affliction, always dangerous, sometimes acutely harmful.

By merciful help of the Almighty and our own brave, faithful, patient striving, we may make of our sorest disasters our sweetest and brightest blessings, transform our heaviest burdens to spiritual wings on which to rise to realms of beautiful hope and consecration. At instigation of the evil forces within us and by our own neglect of self-watchfulness and our yielding to folly, we may pervert our best natural gifts to blights and basest uses. Few possessions are more useful or desirable than a keen sense of humor. We have the right to enjoy it as we do other luxuries and pleasures granted us to brighten our own lives, lighten and gladden any circles in which we move.

Most of us are fortunate enough to know some whose mirth is kindly as spontaneous, clean, sweet, wholesome, with no poison of venom or ribaldry, who can, and do, make sunny atmosphere wherever they go. These are valuable as delightful. Many an ugly quarrel has been averted by timely jest, many a painful situation relieved by a good humored laugh, many a swollen fallacy and pretentious fraud punctured by witty, incisive epigram. Sane and healthy people crave laughter naturally and properly as they do food. We may respect sincerely the comedians on the stage, the humorous writers and picture-makers in the newspapers and books, the clowns in the circus, as persons trying to earn honest livings by giving us pleasure, even if, now and then, they verge on coarseness or fall to dullness. They cater to diversified publics and by their dependence are kept within safe limits. It is the professional joker, jester, humorist, in private life who, urged on by eagerness to provoke the laugh, is prone to defy proprieties and decencies.

Few things are more dangerous than reputation for social brilliancy. The temptation to live, think and talk down to it is strong. Probably many a promising career has been stunted or ruined by one keen, smart, widely quoted flash and subsequent laborious contriving to devise others as good and popular. When we find love of fun and desire to make fun becoming an obsession, directing all our consideration and estimation of things and persons, we are in peril. It is time for us to take strong and serious grip on ourselves and to beg very earnestly to be delivered from this evil. Otherwise, we easily may become nuisances and then, by infliction on the ignorant, defenseless or unfortunate of wounds which will not heal, venting malicious gibe and cruel, cynical criticisms, desecrating sacred subjects, offending the Deity, become disturbing and injurious nuisances, severing our friendships, incurring hates and contempt for a conventional smile or pretense of a giggle.

As we go on in life nothing is sweeter or dearer than echoes of laughs coming faintly across the years and from the graves—gleeful laughs of children, the tinkling music of the laughter of happy, gracious women, the roaring joviality of good fellows and good friends of the long ago—all unsullied by filth, unmarred by malice. Each of us may hope that our laughter, our jokes and wit and stories, however they may be, will be echoed sometimes in hearts living after our hearts have ceased from answering to mirth or mourning. It is for each of us to use vigilant care that those echoes shall be unclogged by suggestion of labored effort, carry with them no stain, be associated with no sting.

ALFRED B. WILLIAMS.

"THE ILLIMITABLE WORD."

"God's Word is the universal beacon. It lights the way of all humanity.

"The appeal of the Word of God is of no single age or race; all other religions are for a special time, place or people, but Christianity is for all men, always and everywhere.

"Wherever the Gospel has gone it has found an echo in the hearts of men. It conquered Rome in the first century; it is conquering heathenism today. It preserved the Middle Ages from dry rot; it is preserving us today from pride of purse and progress. Christ is better for the Turk than Mohammed, for the Hindu than Buddha, for the Persian than Zoroaster, for the African Negro than his fetishes and witchdoctors.

"And if its appeal is not limited by age or race, neither is it limited by class, station or stage of culture. It converted the Emperor Constantine and the tinker Bunyan; it saved St. Paul the scholar, and Onesimus the runaway slave; it gripped Peter, the fisherman, and Apollos, the cultured Greek; it claimed a Lord Shaftesbury, a descendant of England's bluest blood, and Martin Luther, the son of a charcoal burner.

"So stands the Eternal Word as a beacon light in a stormy sea. Against it the waves of human force and cunning have beaten for centuries. Around it the winds of unbelief, ridicule and a wisdom overwise, have impotently howled. Human follies and passions has sought to veil its light. But still it stands, that ancient beacon, flashing out into the darkness its word of life."—The Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan, D. D.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

The Reverend Frank Cox

Acts 1:8.

MORE than a year ago a group of clergymen in the Church felt the great need of a publication devoted to Evangelism, Personal Work and the Office and Work of the Holy Spirit to give power for service and strength to overcome in the Christian life. The Evangelical Churchman, a monthly publication, was the result of this decision. This paper was widely used for the purpose intended. The Southern Churchman has offered its columns to supply this need in the Church and has taken over the subscription list of the Evangelical Churchman. We in turn are permitted to present these truths each week through the medium of this column. The leader would welcome suggestions or questions along this line.

We open with a selection from a searching address on the Spirit-filled Life by Rev. W. Graham Scroggie, D. D. The address was delivered at Keswick Convention.

"The Master's last promise, ere He ascended to heaven, was of power for witness, and this power was to be ours by the coming of the Holy Spirit. Apart from Him there can be no true service without. He is Christ in the heart and life and our dependence on Him for holiness and for ministry is complete.

"And now the question is: Is the Spirit in control of your life? Are you letting Him make you more like Christ every day? Are you at His disposal to go where He would send you, and to do what He commands you? Is yours a Spirit-filled life?

"The worth of our service for Christ can never go beyond our personal experience of Him. There cannot be service-power where there is not soul-victory, and victory is only by the Spirit.

"Countless Christians are daily fighting a losing battle. Without the energy of the Spirit they are constantly at grips with impossible odds, and from the conflict they emerge scarred, broken and almost despairing. Occasionally there is a victory, but the common experience is one of defeat. Is that true of any of you? I am here to say that no man or woman need suffer defeat. We can have victory all along the way and against the greatest odds, until we see our Master face to face. There is no need for any of us to be overcome, for we are called to be overcomers.

"There is victory through the Risen Christ and that victory will be yours when He is enthroned in your life as Lord and His rule administered by the Holy Spirit.

"Are we, who minister in holy things, satisfied with our service and its results? Must we not own to a large measure of failure? Yet why?

"There is as ripe scholarship today as there has ever been and as good preaching, but there are not the old-time results, because so many preachers and teachers are without power. What we all need is power. How dare we go into the ministry at home or abroad without power? And this applies not only to preaching, but to all forms of Christian service, to work in the kitchen and at the desk, as well as in the class and on the platform. To do our work as it should be done, we need power, the power of the Holy Spirit.

"You can face this matter here and now, and before you go farther you may pass the greatest crisis in your life, the crisis, not of accepting Jesus as your Saviour, which you may have done, but of letting the Holy Spirit enthrone Him as absolute Lord and Master of your life so that never again will you question His authority or willingly disobey His commands. That control is your supreme need, as it is mine, and the need may be supplied.

"I know that there is a first filling of the Holy Spirit which constitutes a crisis in the life of a man or a woman, and life after that experience can never be the same again. It came to me more than twenty-five years ago. Though I look back with deep regret over much failure during these years, yet I know that in a little room in our home God filled me with His Holy Spirit, and made Christ Master for the first time in my life. Life has never been the same since."

O, that we might have many in the Church, both clergy and laity, who would so dedicate themselves to God that He could fill them with that same Spirit, and give them each an experience of His power as we find recorded above.

WHY THE CHURCH TEACHES A DEFINITE CREED

By Bishop Johnson

From The Witness.

IF religion is a fundamental reality in human life, and I believe that it is, then I am very sure it is something that God reveals to man in His way and not something that man imposes upon God in his way. By this I mean that just as the facts in nature were created by God and discovered by man, so I believe the great spiritual truths which lie at the basis of true moral action are revealed by God through divinely ordained instruments. I do not question the ability of men to create a religion if they want to; I am merely intrigued by its futility and am no more impressed with the effectiveness of such religious inventions that I would be impressed by the manufacture of wooden nutmegs as an addition to the botanical assets of the world.

I am sometimes ashamed of the religious world when it endeavors to instruct scientists about the well-established facts which they have laboriously worked out, but in the same breath I am irritated by the arrogant assumptions of little pedagogues, who, having no religious experience themselves, deride the honest convictions of men who are intellectually their superiors.

All human actions which lie beyond the realm of life's necessities are founded upon a basic assumption which cannot be demonstrated in a syllogism, but is justified in an experience. A young man may well ask, Why should I be a scientist and bother my head about the logical sequence of events? I would rather eat, drink and be merry. Such an ignoramus may be anything he pleases except criticize a scientist, for he knows nothing of that about which he presumes to judge. But it is equally true that if a man rejects religion and refuses to pursue its experiences that whatever he may do, he is making a fool of himself when he assumes to judge the religious experiences of men wiser and better than himself. Of course, like Sinclair Lewis, he may attempt to demonstrate the folly of religion by scoriating hypocrites, but that is on a par with abusing naturalists because there are nature fakirs in the world.

It is true that the scientist, the artist and the saint begin with an assumption, but each in his turn ends in a personal experience by which he justifies himself in his pursuit. An atheist is one who believes that the universe is a spiritual vacuum. That is his own affair, but on what grounds does he endeavor to impose his vacuum on me? I cannot see anything in a vacuum to make such a noise about. The concerted effort of atheists to establish societies for a promulgation of a spiritual vacuum is just like the efforts of fundamentalists to legislate science out of the world. After all, they are the same kind of folks who become bigots in thrusting their negations on other people.

If I believe there is a wonderful thing in a certain building I have a reason for asking my fellow men to come in and see it; but if I am certain there is nothing there it would seem foolish to make much fuss about it.

Now the Church has a definite Creed because it believes in certain facts which lie at the foundation of spiritual life. I emphasize the word "facts" because our religion, like science and business, is based on facts. You may deny the existence of these facts and reject the creed of Christendom, but you may not substitute theories for these facts and have the same religion which the apostles received from Christ.

It is a curious phenomenon in an age that is insistent upon facts as the basis of scientific knowledge that men should regard a minimum of religious conviction as the proof of a maximum of intelligence.

What is the Apostles' Creed?

It is the assertion of certain facts of an historic character having an intimate relation to our lives. The testimony as to those facts may seem to you inadequate, but if they do it is folly to replace those facts by theories. The result is to change the whole character of religious life. If I believe that Christ was born of the Virgin Mary my faith rests upon a fact. If I explain away the fact there is no method of turning back the hands of the clock and substituting something else.

If I believe that Christ rose from the dead in the same body as that which was crucified, I accept the evidence as to the fact. When I substitute some theory, then I have qualified the validity of the evidence. I have nothing but a theory to substitute for it. The substitute is a different kind of a thing, and so the spiritual result is different. My point is that Christianity comes to us as the life of Christ. When we substitute man's theories for these facts we have a different kind of a thing. In the one case God may have revealed something to us; in the other we are imposing our opinions upon God.

I am intensely interested in the one possibility and have become very much bored by the other. I am very well aware of the objections urged against the acceptance of the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection of the Body. I am told that they are miracles contrary to the experience of the race. But then I am an evolutionist, and as such I am unable to see how the successive evolutionary developments could possibly have ever occurred if the principle is sound that nothing can happen in God's world except that which is a matter of previous experience. I cannot see how the grass could have appeared unless it had a virgin birth; or how the monkey could have become a man unless something happened which was beyond the experience of the whole Simian family. A universe in which nothing could occur but that which had previously been observed would be a static universe without progress or evolution. The fact that I am an evolutionist makes me expect the supernatural as the only method by which men can be evoluted into something better than he is.

In fact, a religion without the supernatural has always been about the deadest thing in the world just because it has refused to acknowledge the principles of evolution and seems to take for granted that man is the last word of God's creative genius. I have enough faith in God to believe that man is not nearly important enough to explain the universe and that the final purpose of creation is neither a mausoleum or an ash-pit, but a new heaven and a new earth, peopled by new creatures.

If this latter assumption be the more reasonable of the two, then I look for a virgin birth and confidently expect that this body which we now inhabit is the basis of our risen body.

It is an assumption I will grant, but so is the opposite view. I maintain merely that as an evolutionist my assumption is the more credible.

The Church has a creed—

First, because we believe that God revealed Himself to human nature, in Christ, as love.

Second, because we believe that the supernatural is merely that unseen world beyond man's observation which Christ has revealed unto us.

Third, because that revelation took the form of a life which was supernatural to us, therefore Christ imparted the elements of the faith to the apostles and they faithfully passed it on to us.

Fourth, because this revelation embodied in the creed and conserved by the Church has been the most potent spiritual factor in human life.

Truly it does not always develop saints any more than universities always produce scholars; but it has produced enough saints in proportion to the whole company of saints who have dwelt upon earth to give it the same potency in religion that universities maintain in education.

If the Christian creed, believed and lived, produces some saints it has demonstrated its power.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND THE MODERN MIND

By Kenneth Mackenzie

A QUALIFIED authority describes Modernism as "a method of thought; not a school of belief; it is an intellectual attitude towards revealed religion". So also Dean Inge: "The Modernists ridicule the notion that God is a personage in history; they assume that for the historian He cannot be found anywhere; they proceed to rule out all alleged instances of divine intervention in history."

We have previously contended that Christian faith cannot be weighed in the scales of rationalism; that science under the name of the New Knowledge has no reagent in its laboratory by which it can be tested. Its frigid and unsympathetic venue towards faith, which is essentially fervid and ebbullent, disbars it from exercising any potential influence in the spiritual life of man. That was a clear note sounded by the late Dr. Steinmetz: "Where science ends, faith begins." He would deem the boundary which separates the two as impassible. Cold facts, which the modern mind exacts, shall be adduced to prove hostile to faith, may not in the final analysis be found to have any authority in the realm of belief.

This is not to ratify the statement of a Roman Catholic scientist: "When I am in my laboratory, I am not a believer in the faith of the Church; when I am at mass, I am not scientific in my mental processes." There must be some reconciliation between that which a man thinks to be true scientifically and that which he associates with his spiritual life. But he must be sure it is true. For much that is certified thus to be, is but the vaporings of a passing idea, which the next generation may consign to the scrap heap. The "assured results" of the past are the laughing stock of the present age among so-called scientists themselves.

Then rather, the immensity of the universe, the laws which govern the cosmos, the manifestations of order and beauty which display the divine touch, challenge the true believer to see God in everything. Rather than weaken his faith, these things and their corollaries hearten him to deeper reverence and devotion.

The relation of the Holy Spirit to this realm of thought charges us to deep thought and prayerful questioning. Do any of the advanced views of the modern world presumptuously invade the realm in which He is the sole mentor? Are we to allow that His imputed limitations are a betrayal of His incapacity to "guide into all truth" (John 16:13)? Shall we listen to the argument that He must of necessity move into fresh fields of discovery and adapt Himself to modern predilections? This is virtually being proposed. A condescending noblesse oblige on their part would demand of Him that He shall espouse and vivify what modern thinkers have determined to be the last court of appeal.

There can be no question to the true believer that demonstrably experimental testimony has shown the Holy Spirit to be very Lord of the spiritual world (2 Cor. 3:18; 1 Cor. 2:10-16), of which the modern mind is densely ignorant. If that be conceded we are forced to admit the presence and operation of another mind insinuatingly moving the thoughts of men into courses of speculation which must be antagonistic to the world in which the Holy Spirit exercises benign inspiration and unction. Our Lord implies this, if we are to accept the record of St. John. "The Prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me" (Jno. 14:30); and so also St. Luke 22:53), "This is your hour and the power of darkness". In our Lord's survey of the result of this administration of perversion, He undoubtedly admits the reasoning faculties of His murderers, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do" (Luke 23:34). So as well St. Paul perceived that mental processes lay at the bottom of their delusion, "We speak wisdom among them that are perfect (whole-hearted); yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world that come to nought; but we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world to our glory; which none of the princes of this world know; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory" (1 Cor. 2:7, 8). Again, "Their minds were blinded" (2 Cor. 3:14). If our Lord saw a relationship between the acts men commit and the minds which control them, He also saw that no man really thinks things about Himself without the imposition of a superior mind which seeks to dominate him (Jno. 8:42-44). And the apostle has set this in the unmistakable pronunciamento: "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them" (2 Cor. 4:4).

Our contention then is that whether they like or not, men are not permitted full license to think as they will. In the realm of spiritual thinking, they unconsciously follow a leading, the source of which is unrecognized. The Christian believer stands in no place of uncertainty. He welcomes the Holy Spirit into his life, that he may think the things that please him. He knows that if the Spirit has a mind (Rom. 8:27), and he accepts the truth as stated, a response to that mind must be essentially consistent with his Christian calling. This is the predominating impulse that gives victory to the dedicated Christian, "Casting down imaginations and every high thing that which exalteth itself against the knowledge of God; and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. 10:5). He knew that the secret of our Lord's own earth life was an immediate behest to the mind of the Spirit which possessed Him, "The Son can of himself do nothing" (Jno. 5:19). And our Lord places the believer in the same position, "Without me, ye can do nothing" (Jno. 15:5).

Then, we observe that when men give rein to self-generated ideals, though they may render fealty to an alien Mind and not know it, the trend is towards intolerance and extravagance. Behaviorism, the latest symptom of the disease, ends by excluding not only the spiritual faculties, but even thought, from personal experience; reducing life to the plane of a "system of physical stimuli and automatic responses to such stimuli on the part of the human organism". The ultimate of this tendency is expressed by an internationally known preacher, who perhaps unconsciously confirms Behaviorism in the startling statement, "I no longer believe in the polygamy of the Old Testament nor in the chastity of the New. I say without shame, that in our opinion about sex, we are turning from the Christian to the pagan attitude." This is not a sporadic outburst of unrestrained hallucination. It is concommittant with the growing revolt of the young men and women in our college. The battering ram of carnal desire is forcing itself against the ethical ideals which have been reverently treasured for the centuries past; and the motive would reduce society to a free-love colony. If this riotous rebellion against the sacred traditions of the past shall obtain, we shall find that modern thinking will cease to function as a channel of lofty and inspirational ideality; but will sink to the level of an unrestrained carnality which has no regard for the purity of woman or the sanctity of the marriage bond. Sadly does history record that men and women conspicuous for mental alertness and depth of mind have licentiously descended to the level of the common herd from whom they would separate themselves by their intellectual aristocracy.

Well does Henry M. Alden define the situation: "Men think themselves free when they frame their lives according to a system of their own construction. This is indeed their prison house. He only is free who submits to the mastery of the divine life." This is why the Holy Spirit is here. This is what the Holy Spirit is here to do. If He may be accorded full authority in the life of the believer in the Crucified and Risen Lord Jesus, He will impart the wisdom that is from above (Jas. 3:17), protecting us from vague and speculative suggestions which like an ignis fatuus lead into the bog not only of mental confusion, but possible moral degradation. The admonition of St. John is not out of date by any means, "Try the spirits, whether they be of God; for many false teachers have gone out into the world" (1 Jno. 4:1).

We warm our hearts with the assurance that "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty"; but we know that liberty to be safely guarded from any self-generated desires, self-dominated intentions. And behind this kindly security guaranteed by the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit, we discern the dark outlines of another spirit portrayed by the Word of God; and accept the exhortation of the apostle in the consideration of the ramifications of error that are parading before us, the pervading influence and operation of the Master mind, "Lest Satan should get an advantage of us; for we are not ignorant of his devices; for even Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light; therefore it is no great thing if his ministers be transformed as the ministers of righteousness" (2 Cor. 2:11; 11:14, 15).

THE MISSING ONES

ONE summer evening, for a part of our family worship, I read the fourth chapter of 1 Thess. Before retiring to rest I seated myself on my easy-chair, and mused on the last few verses of the chapter, and as I mused, I fell into a deep sleep and had a most wonderful dream. My mind seemed to be clear and distinct, and my intellectual faculties stronger and brighter than in my wakeful condition.

I thought I had awakened in the morning, and was somewhat surprised to find that my wife was not beside me as usual. Supposing, however, that her absence was but temporary, I waited, expecting her speedy return to our chamber; but after the lapse of what I considered a reasonable time, as she did not make her appearance, I arose and dressed.

My wife's apparel was where she had placed it on retiring, and I felt confident she was somewhere about the house. So I went to my daughter Julia's room, thinking she might know the whereabouts of her mother; but after knocking several times without response, I entered and found that she also was missing.

"Strange, Passing Strange!"

said I to myself; "where can they both be?" Then I went to the room of our son Frank, and found him up and already dressed, which was something quite unusual for him at an hour so early. He said he had passed a very restless night, and that he might better get up. I told him of the absence of his mother and sister from their rooms, and requested him to look around to see if he could not find them. In the meantime I hurriedly completed my toilet, and soon Frank returned and said the missing ones were nowhere to be found, and that every door leading outward was securely locked, as on the preceding evening. We were at our wits' end, and what to make of this strange occurrence we did not know. On again visiting Julia's room we found on a stand her well-marked open Bible. One prominent verse attracted my attention: it read, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye thing not

The Son of Man Cometh".

This passage, my wife had always declared, referred to the coming of Christ for His saints, the redeemed Church, according to 1 Thess 4:14-17, while I insisted that it meant only the preparation for death. But I am digressing. Frank and I concluded that, without waiting for breakfast, we should each take a different route, and visit some of our most intimate friends, in quest of our dear ones.

I first called on my wife's sister, Mrs. E., who, with her husband, were good, respectable people, members of a Christian Church, though rather worldly minded. After I had rung the bell several times, and waited somewhat impatiently, she appeared and apologized for her dilatoriness by saying that she was "in a peck of trouble", and had to prepare breakfast herself, for the colored servant, whom she had always considered to be a real good Christian, had played her a mean trick. "She had gone off somewhere, without even putting the kettle on the range, or saying a word to any of us."

"But what puzzled us to know is, how she got out of the house, for the doors are all locked and the keys inside, just as we left them last evening on our return from Mrs. B.'s progressive euchre party."

"Indeed," said I, "it is exceedingly strange," and then I explained to her the object of my morning visit. When she heard of

of my wife and Julia, she became so very nervous that I was glad to change the subject by saying that, as I had not yet breakfasted, I would join them in the morning repast. When her husband heard my story he treated it with a good deal of levity, and declared that my wife was only playing me a practical joke, to induce me to rise earlier in the morning. He was sure the missing ones had secreted themselves somewhere about the house, and when I returned home I would find them all right.

As we seated ourselves at the table, Mrs. E. said we would have to take coffee without milk, as her milkman, who had heretofore been very reliable, had failed to make his appearance.

Presently the door bell rang, and Frank entered in a state of great excitement, saying he had been all over inquiring for his mother, and in almost every house he found trouble similar to our own. Almost every family was anxiously Searching for Missing Ones.

He had just come from our home where he found the servant girl alone, but much agitated in consequence of the numerous calls she had had to answer about missing friends. He also stated that the streets were thronged with excited people hurrying to and fro, many of them weeping bitterly. At the announcement Mr. E. showed evident signs of alarm, and related a conversation he had held yesterday with a friend, whose religious ideas he looked upon as quite heretical.

His friend insisted that a vast majority of Church members, in these days were but nominal Christians, "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God", and that the love of the masses for religious things had reached a very low ebb. "My friend also assured me," said Mr. E., "that the Scriptures clearly taught that, when the elect number of Christ's Church would be completed, Christ would come unexpectedly as a thief in the night, and call His saints, both dead and alive, to meet Him in the air." The transformation would be affected in the twinkling of an eye, and although the call would be made with a shout and the sound of a trumpet, yet none would hear it but those for whom it was intended. Then would be realized the import of Christ's words, "Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left" (Matt. 24:40-41). I fear that time has now come and, sad to say, we are among the left ones.

Now as the morning was far advanced, it was suggested that we go down to our business places. Frank had already gone to his office, and I, with a heavy heart, wended my way along the avenue among an unusual throng of men and women, whose faces betokened

Intense Sorrow.

In the business parts of the city I observed that many stores were closed, and those that were open did not appear to be doing any business. Every saloon that I passed was open, as usual, with groups of men inside, apparently engaged in serious discussion. I passed by the City Hall; there was no perceptible diminution of the usual crowd of political "hangers on" around the building.

When I reached my own store, I found that my bookkeeper and the faithful old porter, who had served me so many years, had not yet put in an appearance. My other two clerks were on hand, doing nothing, nor did I feel like asking them to do anything.

Yesterday I agreed to sell a worthy mechanic a small piece of land which I owned in the outskirts of the city and had an appointment to meet him at a lawyer's office to sign the contract, but he failed to come, and I presumed he also joined the absent ones. I then went to the Chamber of Commerce, and found the largest gathering of merchants that I had seen there in many months. Instead of the lively, noisy bustle of buying and selling, and of clerks and messenger boys running to and fro, there was a solemn gloom pervading the whole assembly. By unanimous consent, and in consequence of the great calamity that has overtaken the community, it was voted that "three days grace be allowed on all contracts falling due on this day". I will not attempt to set forth any of the reasons and speculations that were advanced as to the cause of our present troubles, but all agreed that the visitation was a supernatural one, and that in some way we who were left on earth were blamable for it.

In the evening nearly every church in the city was open, with overflowing congregations.

Everybody was anxious to know the cause and

Meaning of the "Great Visitation", and to learn how lost hopes might be regained.

Many of the pastors had gone with the missing ones, but some were present in their churches. All order of service was dispensed with, and noisy confusion prevailed; crimination and recrimination were bandied to and fro, between the pastors and the people, the latter asserting that, if the pastors had done their duty, and taught their flocks the plain truths of the Bible, instead of lulling them to sleep with philosophical and moral essays, they would not now be in their present sad condition. In my own church the pastor was present, with scores of persons whom I had but rarely seen at meetings.

The pastor was speaking when I entered the room, and was entreating the audience to endeavor to allay their feelings, while he would attempt to speak to them for a few minutes.

Quiet being somewhat restored, he said: "This pastor's heart is bleeding at every pore in sympathy with his sorely-afflicted people. The anguish which I experience at being, in a measure, the cause of our present unhappy condition, is indescribable. None of you can realize the

Keen Disappointment

I endure at this result of my labors. I am accused of having preached too much about the affairs of this life, and too little about the heavenly state and the things to come; and of having kept you in ignorance of the imminency of the awful visitation which has manifested itself among us this day. In reply to all these accusations, I can only say that I taught you the same theology that was taught to me in the Seminary, and which I, in common with the great majority of our ministerial brethren, firmly believed to be the teaching of God's Word.

"But now I have to confess that I was sadly mistaken, for, after what has occurred, I cannot help believing that God's Word means just what it says. My pastoral labors, during all the time I have been with you, have been excessive and in consequence, I have not been able to devote to the study of prophecy the time which a subject so deep and intricate demanded.

Here the electric light suddenly went out, and there arose such fearful screams that I sprang to my feet in terror—and—awoke!

My wife, who was in an adjoining room, hearing my sudden upspring, hastened in to see what was the matter. Oh, how glad I was to see her, and realize my terrible experience in my easy chair was only a dream. But the more I thought of it afterwards, the more solemn seemed the Scripture truths which it contained, and the more was I impressed with the importance of having our lamps trimmed and burning, ready to go out and meet the Bridegroom.

Miss Fenton Williamson

To those of us who are at all familiar with the inner workings of the Southern Churchman office the news of the retirement of Miss Fenton Williamson from the editorial staff will come with a distinct and very real sense of loss. After a service of fourteen years she has been compelled to give up through pressure of other duties.

She has appeared in the list of the Editorial Staff under the modest title of "News Editor", but no single title could describe her position. Some one in every newspaper office must be responsible for the general make-up of the paper. There must be news for the news-columns and articles and stories for the various departments. Some one must select the articles that are to go in, and tactfully reject those that are not up to the standard. Some one must bear the burden of finding news somehow or other when correspondents fail to correspond, and search wildly for suitable articles when they are few and there is space to be filled. Some one must assemble the copy and correct the printer's proof and still be able to look pleasant and speak peaceably when the printer failed to note the corrections, or the paper came out with some glaring typographical error, which slipped in after it was too late to be caught and corrected. All this was Miss Williamson's job and more—and how well she has done it the frequently expressed appreciation of the value of the various departments, family, children's, thoughts for the thoughtful, will attest.

Editors may come and go (she served under every one from Dr. Goodwin), but Miss Williamson—well, Miss Fenton was "Miss Fenton", and the editor could go to his home, or go on vacation with the comforting assurance that "Miss Fenton" was on the job and the paper would come out on time, and in good shape.

To its owners and editorial and office force, as to many a lifelong subscriber it is not merely a Church paper—it is an institution; a part of the Church, factor in one's religious experience—and it has thriven and grown strong upon devotion and appreciation. But the Southern Churchman has never had more devoted and loyal and wholehearted service than Miss Williamson has given during her many years of connection with its editorial staff.

Bible Institute of Pennsylvania

There is much talk about the Bible in these days, and yet the ignorance of the Book itself is profound. Often our Seminaries teach a great deal about the Bible, but the students are ignorant of the Book, and consequently many ministers do not know their Bibles.

The growth and development of the Bible Institute in this country forms a bright chapter in the religious life of America and constitutes one of the most convincing forms of apologetics for the truth of the Word of God when it is truly believed and rightly taught. The increasing enrollment of students testifies to the heart-hunger for the Word, and the remarkable spiritual results which the Bible-trained students achieve is an added indication of God's seal of approval.

Among the Institutes the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania stands high. Beginning with two students in 1913, it has steadily grown, sending out missionaries to South America, India and Africa; in all, twenty-nine foreign missionaries and sixteen home missionaries. During training, the students have taught over one hundred Sunday-school classes each Sunday, and through their personal work five hundred persons were led to accept Christ. Twenty-three of the graduates are pastors, and hundreds are trained as effective Christian workers. The outstanding objective of the school is "to know the Lord Jesus Christ and to make Him known". In a letter from the Executive Secretary, he says: "We feel led to pray for additional funds to meet operating expenses and to gradually increase our meagre facilities, such as dormitories and class-rooms, as the Lord may lead. Will you kindly join us in this petition and in any further fellowship the Lord may lay on your heart."

LESSON NO. 7.
TOPIC—THE JUDGMENTS.

In the treatment of this subject we again see the importance of "Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth", as expressed in a previous lesson, for there is a common but erroneous assumption that there is to be but one general judgment. This is not correct, as we shall see from the Scripture, if we are careful to discern the "Subjects", Time", "Place" and "Results", etc.

Judgment No. 1. Concerning "Believers only—as to SIN". Time, A. D. 30. Place, Calvary.—Jno. 19:16-18.
Result, released from penalty for SIN; redeemed from the curse of the law. No condemnation; no judgment. 1 Peter 2:24; 1 Peter 3:18; 2 Cor. 5:21; Gal. 3:13; Rom. 8:1, 2; Jno. 5:24.

Judgment No. 2. Concerning "Believers walk". Time, while in the flesh. Place, anywhere. As children of God, we are subject to chastisement.—Heb. 12:5-8; 1 Peter 4:17.
Result.—1 Cor. 5:5; 1 Cor. 11:31.
"If we confess our sins, he is just and faithful to forgive."—1 Jno. 1:9, 10.

Judgment No. 3. Concerning "Believer's works". Time, when our Lord calls His Church to meet Him. The day is unknown. Place, in the air; 1 Thess. 4:16, 17. —Matt. 16:27; 1 Cor. 4:5; 2 Cor. 5:10; 2 Tim. 4:8; 1 Cor. 3:11-15; Rev. 22:12.
Result, "Rewards or loss". Much so-called "Christian work" will not count. Saved yet "as by fire". Some may be "ashamed". Many will be rejoicing".—1 Cor. 3:11-15; Rev. 22:12; 1 Cor. 3:15; 1 Jno. 2:28; 1 Thess. 2:19, 20.

Judgment No. 4. Concerning the Nations and the Jews. Time, after the rapture of the Church.—Matt. 25:31, 32.
Place, Jerusalem and vicinity.—Joel 3:1, 2, 12, 14.
The Church being a heavenly body, and the Jews an earthly people as to God's covenants and promises, the judgments of God continue earthly in character, hence the Divine plan calls for Israel's regathering in Palestine to pass under the Divine rod (Ezek. 22:19-22) and to undergo the awful experience referred to as "the time of Jacob's trouble".—Dan. 12:1; Jer. 30:3-7; Zech. 14:1-11. Our Lord associates it with His return, and refers to the event as "the great tribulation which shall envelope the entire world and mark the close of "the times of the Gentiles".—Matt. 24: 21-31 ;Rev., chapters 4 to 18.
RESULT.—See Rev. 20:15.

Judgment No. 5. Concerning the Unsaved or "Wicked Dead". Time, 1000 years after the resurrection of the saved.—Rev. 20:5-7.
Place, before "the great white throne".—Rev. 20:11-15.
RESULT, "Cast into the lake of fire".—Rev. 20:15.

A THANKSGIVING SUGGESTION.

Mr. Editor:

The Rev. W. F. Bumsted, who is pastor of Grace Church, Bremo Bluff, gave notice he wished his congregation to observe Thanksgiving on the fifth Sunday in October, and bring all that they could of vegetables, fruit (canned and fresh) for Sheltering Arms Hospital, Richmond. It was really a most beautiful sight. He, his good wife and some of the ladies arranged it all so beautifully. He is, and so is his wife, from London, and brought this idea over from the "Mother Church", where it has been observed for many many years. God has blessed our people, and often families gather for a Thanksgiving dinner. , but this idea is far more acceptable to God. If a tear were shed in heaven I feel sure Miss Rebecca Peterkin, who started this noble hospital, shed one on Sunday of deep gratitude. She was one of the loveliest of Richmond's daughters, and her father one of the most Godly of men. I wish it could be started now to continue for years to come. It is a noble charity. I felt that you would put this in your paper and give the idea to other churches. He gave to the crippled children from Columbia Church a large amount of vegetables, and fruit, and I have not heard the amount, but also money. God will surely bless this good man.

MRS. A. H. H.

THE KULING SCHOOL FOR THE CHILDREN OF MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

Mr. Editor:

The friends of the Kuling School have been so singularly constant in their care of the school that I feel it is due to them that they should know how things stand. I am wondering if you will do me the favor of giving space to this letter?

They already know of the unexpected and heavy expense that has resulted from the upheaval in China and the necessary return of the staff to this country. All this they have generously taken care of.

At present the situation is practically chaotic. One thing is certain: The school must be ready to reopen whenever the missionaries and their children are back in their homes. It is possible, even though it may not be probable, that the school must be ready next autumn. Things are moving so rapidly in China that nobody can guess what will be.

Meantime there are certain continuing expenses: for the care and upkeep of the property, for financial obligations to certain members of the staff who reached this country too late to establish themselves for the current academic year. These things must be provided for. The trustees feel sure that those who have made it possible for Kuling to be so firmly established will be unwilling to allow the school to be put in jeopardy.

Personally, I have no doubt that the faith of the trustees in the friends of the school will be justified.

A. S. Lloyd,
Chairman Board of Trustees of the Kuling School.

APPRECIATION.

Mr. Editor:

I am writing to let you know that I received the first copy of the Southern Churchman last week. It is indeed a wonderful paper and most inspiring and helpful in every way. Words cannot express my deep appreciation to you for having this paper sent to me.

A READER.

Prayer is not always audible. It is more often silent. It is not asking God to do things; it is asking God to give us strength to do things. It is not asking God to remove burdens; it is asking Him to make it possible to bear them.

Truth, if it is to be grasped in its fullness, must be sought for, and that earnestly.—Canon Liddon.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Elects Honorary President.

By action of the National Executive Committee of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at its recent meeting, the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop of the Church, was elected Honorary President of the Brotherhood, and on October 31 his acceptance was received.

In his letter of acceptance he said: "I am acting affirmatively because of my very positive conviction that there is a real work for the Brotherhood to accomplish in the Church at the present time. Especially is there a vocation for it in the carry-on work of the Bishops' Crusade and by return to consecrated service along the lines of first principles, with Divine guidance and blessing, the members of the Brotherhood will find immediate and continuing opportuniity for the successful accomplishment of their original purpose. With such mind and in such endeavor I shall esteem it a privilege to cooperate most heartily."

The Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, D. D., to Succeed the Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, D. D.

Announcement was made on November 4 of the resignation of the Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, D. D., Bishop of Western New York, as Bishop in Charge of the Episcopal Churches in Europe; and of the appointment of the Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, D. D., to succeed him. Bishop Lawrence will assume his duties at once.

Supervision of these European churches, in addition to the administration of his American diocese, it was said, has proven too great a burden for Bishop Brent in the impaired condition of his health. The churches are located in Paris, Nice, Florence, Rome, Dresden, Munich, Geneva and Lucerne, and including the Chateau Neuvic School, in Southern France, Holy Trinity Reading Room and the United States Students' and Artists' Club in Paris, are important centers for students, tourists and Americans permanently residing abroad. They are practically self-supporting.

The Catholic Congress at Albany.

On Tuesday evening, October 25, in the state armory in Albany, N. Y., the third annual Catholic Congress held its opening meeting.

The Rt. Rev. Richard H. Nelson, D. D., Bishop of Albany, welcomed the more than one thousand delegates who had come together there from all parts of the United States, from Canada, Scotland, Japan, and the Philippines. The purpose of the Congress, said Bishop Nelson, was to "proclaim the divine nature of the Church and to increase our loyalty and deepen our devotion to its head, Jesus Christ Our Lord and Saviour".

The Rev. Frank L. Vernon, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, Chairman of the Congress, quoted the Bishop of London in saying that "the whole faith for the whole world is the one hope for making the world whole". He also said: "Of the four notes of the Church, unity, holiness, catholicity and apostolicity we are moved in this place to select the notes of holiness for emphasis. It will not be an ill-timed emphasis in days like the present, when social conventionalities, determined by variable standards adaptable to passion and fashionable caprice, are taken for morality; when the plea is advanced for the consideration of intellectualized lust, it is high time to affirm unfaltering belief in Holy Church and unswerving allegiance to standards of living which are above debate and beyond change."

Twenty bishops and hundreds of clergy attended on Wednesday a "solemn pontifical mass". Owing to the illness of the Rev. J. G. H. Barry, his sermon was read by the Rev. Seldon P. Delany. He also stressed unity, and said that we should press for the "reunion of the Catholic Church of Jesus Christ". Later, the Rev. Spence Burton, Superior of the Order of St. John the Evangelist, urged the veneration of the Virgin Mary and of the saints. He urged the clergy to erect shrines in their parishes.

Thus, according to the Albany Evening News, there was a result quite opposite from the expressed pleas for unity. In an article with the heading "Episcopalian Church Split Feared Near", it quoted the Rev. Charles C. Harriman, rector of St. Peter's, the oldest Episcopal Church in the city, who declared himself for "the continuation of the doctrines, discipline and worship" of the Protestant Episcopal Church as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer. Speaking for the Wardens and Vestrymen, he said that the Catholic Congress had caused deep grief and spiritual distress to many communicants of the Albany diocese. Dr. Harriman charged that Bishop Nelson and Bishop Oldham had lent by their official presence at least tacit approval to the Catholic Congress.

Jokes.

We wonder sometimes whether Churchmen at home, when reading missionary papers, consider that they are reading news or jokes. For example:

Our Chinese work in Manila has been inspiringly successful. But as it all hangs on one man we have for seven years now been asking that two young clergymen would come out to us and qualify for this work. There has been no response—not one in seven years. That's no joke.

It has been urgently desirable that we should have a high-grade school for Filipinos. The Department of Missions agreed immediately, appropriated money and appealed for schoolmasters —ordained or unordained. That has been going on for seven years, too. That's no joke.

Mrs. Massey began a very useful kindergarten at St. Luke's and thereby influenced children and parents in a way and a place that made such influence a valuable asset to the Church. She was compelled to leave in January, 1926. That was eighteen months ago. No one came to take her place, although appeals were made several months in advance of her leaving. The daughter of an army chaplain carried the kindergarten on until her marriage; the wife of an army officer continued it until now. Both of these were Church girls. They happened to be here. Now there is no other Church girl in the army or out of it. So St. Luke's Kindergarten must be closed. That's no joke.

Life in the Church's Missions is no joke at all. When we say we need help we are talking most seriously. Will those who read this note please do one of two things: 1, If they are young, write to the Church Missions House and offer their services; 2, If they are not young, look up a youngster and send him or her to the Church Missions House that new workers may come out here to keep the Church a-going? These are three only of many places where help is needed. Help is needed badly and it is needed quickly. This is no joke.—Bishop Mosher, In the Philippine Diocesan Chronicle.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop

Plans for the Every Member Canvass.

Sunday, December 4, has been set by the Executive Board as the official date for the canvass in Southwestern Virginia. While some churches in the diocese will perhaps find it more convenient to have their canvasses earlier, it is the hope of the Board that the work can be completed on the above date and that reports on the canvass can be received at the diocesan offices very soon thereafter.

It has also been decided by the Board that in all the congregations subscriptions to the diocesan paper, The Southwestern Episcopalian, will be solicited at the time of the general canvass in those families that are not already subscribing.

Mr. Robert L. Peirce, of Wytheville, is Chairman of the Field Department, and the Rev. Thomas M. Browne, of Lynchburg, is Chairman of the Department of Publicity.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

Annual Convention of the Y. P. S. L.

The fourth annual convention of the Y. P. S. L. in the Diocese of North Carolina, met at St. Philip's, Durham, on October 14-16. On the evening of the fourteenth there was a banquet in the Washington Duke Hotel, at which over two hundred delegates and a number of clergy and counsellors were present. Bishop Penick presided, but the young people themselves did the talking.

Saturday, which began with the annual Corporate Communion of the Y. P. S. L., and ended with a party in the evening, was crowded with devotional services, addresses and business. Addresses were made by Bishops Cheshire and Penick, Miss Theodora Young, a returned missionary from China, and the Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr. Following a loving tribute paid to Bishop Cheshire by the young people, on the occasion of the thirty-fourth anniversary of his consecration, he made a talk. Bishop Penick made an address on "Renewed Allegiance", following which the young people pledged a large sum to aid him in his work. Carl Hobgood, of Durham, was elected president for the coming year, and named as representatives of the Y. P. S. L. on the Executive Council of the Diocese. Mrs. F. N. Challen, Executive Secretary of the Young People's Work, outlined the objectives for the year 1928.

On Sunday morning Bishop Darst, of East Carolina, preached to the young people in St. Philip's Church.

The Pilot.

At a recent meeting of the Piedmont Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, held in St. Paul's Church, Winston-Salem, it was divided and a new Assembly created. The new Assembly which takes the name of The Pilot, comprises the chapters at Winston-Salem, Greensboro, High Point, Lexington. Mr. N. C. Gordon, of Winston-Salem, was elected President of The Pilot. The speakers at the meeting included the Rev. Messrs. H. N. Browne, W. S. Holmes, R. E. Gribbin and C. E. Buxton. The chief speaker, the Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, spoke earnestly and effectively of the great work that the laymen can do in the field of personal evangelism.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary in this diocese has concluded a series of eight semi-annual district meetings, which were a remarkable demonstration of the widespread and well-informed interest that the women have in the work of the Church. Several years ago the diocese was divided into eight districts, each of which has two meetings a year. This has resulted in a great advance in the work of the Auxiliary and a thorough acquaintance on the part of the women of its program. The Bishops of North Carolina and all other diocesan leaders were levied upon for addresses at the meetings.

Meeting of the Young People's Organizations of the Diocese.

Saturday, October 22, marks the beginning of what is hoped to be a new era in young people's work in this diocese. Members of various junior organizations met at Ascension Church, Norfolk, for the purpose of examining and reviewing the present young people's organizations in the diocese, and further to discuss the feasibility of a "Diocesan Federation of Young People's Organizations" of the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

The Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia, presided at the meeting. He said that the main object in bringing the young people together was to show them how they could aid in the progress of the Church, and to train them toward this end.

Mr. J. P. Jackson, of Christ Church, Norfolk, spoke about the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Miss Cora Urquhart spoke on the Young People's Service League.

Miss Annie Calvert, of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, spoke on the Girls' Friendly Society.

Mr. Newton Grey, of St. Peter's Church, Norfolk, spoke on the Junior Vestry. This is an organization in the experimental stage. It is organized along the lines of the Senior Vestry, the same oath of office is taken, it has the same number of members (twelve), who hold office for the same term.

Miss Lee Booth, of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, spoke on the Junior Choir.

Mr. Lee Jackson, of Christ Church, Norfolk, spoke on the "Servers' League". Judging from the duties performed by its members, the Servers' League had its origin back in the third century. Its duties are similar to those performed by the old Acolytes.

Mr. H. Clarkson Meredith, of St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, spoke on the "Young Men's Club". There are two standing committees, one on athletics and one on Church work.

Mr. Robert Jones, of Grace Church, Newport News, spoke about the "Original Boys' Trio". Three boys, realizing that a deplorable condition existed in athletics and school life such as poor sportsmanship, profanity, decided to better them if they could. These three boys formed an organization known as the "Original Boys' Trio". They took as their aims, courtesy to ladies, clean athletics, fellowship and to inspire a reverence toward God.

The following motion by Miss Cora Urquhart was carried: That a "Diocesan Federation of Young People's Organizations" be organized by the members of the Southern Diocese Young People's Organizations. The Federation will not conflict with any of the young people's organizations now functioning, but on the other hand will concentrate the forces of all. After deliberation the following were elected officers: Miss Cora Urquhart of St. Andrew's Church, Norfolk, President; Mr. Robert Jones of Grace Church, Newport News, First Vice-President; Mr. Thomas Aires, Second Vice-President; Mr. Randolph Davis of St. Andrew's Church, Norfolk, Secretary; Mr. Newton Grey of St. Peter's Church, Norfolk, Treasurer; Miss Annie Calvert of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Corresponding Secretary.

It was announced that there would be a meeting of officers during the month of November, and the constitution will be framed.

At eight o'clock services were held, the Rev. John B. Bentley, of Bruton Church, Williamsburg, delivering the sermon.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The diocesan meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary for November was held in St. Alban's Church on Tuesday, November 1. Mrs. Hurd, the Diocesan President, presided, and conducted the business of the occasion.

A social hour in St. Alban's Guild Hall followed the meeting. These diocesan meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary have grown to large proportions and represent a very vital part of the Church's work.

Anniversaries.

Sunday, November 6, marked the anniversaries of three rectorships in the Diocese of Washington. The Rev. Ernest C. Smith, D. D., has completed twenty-five years of service as rector of St. Thomas' Church. The Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde's tenth year at Grace Church was marked by a special service. The Rev. Thomas W. Cooke celebrated the fifth anniversary of his rectorship of the Church of the Ascension.

More Gifts to the Cathedral.

Close upon the recent large gifts for the Washington Cathedral, come other gifts of rare interest, because of their remoteness, from the Cathedral site, and because they demonstrate the widespread interest in the Cathedral undertaking. A draft of $50 was sent as a contribution from the Cathedral Parish of St. Mary and St. John, Philippine Islands, and a gift of $12.50 from Christ Church Mission, Anvik, Alaska.

Meeting of Washington Sunday-School Institute.

The November meeting of the Washington Sunday-School Institute will be held in St. John's Parish Hall, Sixteenth Street, on Tuesday, November 15, at eight P. M. Professor Bell, of the Virginia Theological Seminary, will give a popular talk on "The Relation of Religion and Science", and Miss Laura F. Boyer, assistant Educational Secretary of the National Woman's Auxiliary, will answer the question, "Why Should I Read the Bible"?

Meeting of Philadelphia Association of Virginia Seminary Alumni.

The sixty-eighth semi-annual meeting of the Philadelphia Association of Students of the Virginia Seminary was held November 3 in Trinity Church rectory, Wilmington, Delaware. The rector, the Rev. Dr. F. M. Kirkus, led in the discussion of "How to be Useful Though Pensioned". The president, the Rev. Robert R. Windley, presided. There were fifteen persons present, including Bishop Cook.

Lecture by Mr. Haboush.
